That the district and circuit courts of the United States shall have, exclusively of the courts of the several States, cognizance of all crimes and offenses against, and violations of the provisions of this act; and actions for the penalty given by the preceding section may be prosecuted in the territorial, district, or circuit courts of the United States wherever the defendant may be found, without regard to the other party. And the district attorneys, marshals, and deputy marshals of the United States, and commissioners appointed by the circuit and territorial courts of the United States, with powers of arresting and imprisoning or bailing offenders against the laws of the United States, are hereby specially authorized and required to institute proceedings against every person who shall violate the provisions of this act, and cause him to be arrested and imprisoned or bailed, as the case may be, for trial before such court of the United States or territorial court as by law has cognizance of the offense, except in respect of the right of action accruing to the person aggrieved; and such district attorneys shall cause such proceedings to be prosecuted to their termination as in other cases: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed to deny or defeat any right of civil action accruing to any person, whether by reason of this act or otherwise.

SEC. 4. That no citizen possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and any officer or other person charged with any duty in the selection or summoning of jurors who shall exclude or fail to summon any citizen for the cause aforesaid shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined not more than $1,000.

SEC. 5. That all cases arising under the provisions of this act in the courts of the United States shall be reviewable by the Supreme Court of the United States without regard to the sum in controversy, under the same provisions and regulations as are now provided by law for the review of other causes in said court.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Upon the passage of the bill I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to state that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STEVENSON] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] are paired.

Mr. RANSOM. I am requested to state that on this question the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] is paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.] The Senator from Pennsylvania would, if here, vote "yea," and the Senator from Ohio "nay."

Mr. CHANDLER. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] If he were present he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

Mr. ALCORN. I desire to state in behalf of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLAYTON] that he left the Chamber last evening quite sick, not being able to remain here. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. WRIGHT. I think it due to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] to state that upon the passage of the bill, as upon all these questions, he is paired with the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. DENNIS.] He would vote for the bill, and the Senator from Maryland against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state, at the request of the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. HITCHCOCK,] that he is paired with his colleague, [Mr. TIPTON.]

Mr. COOPER. I am requested by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. GOLDTHWAITE] to state that he is paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.] If the Senator from Alabama were here he would vote "nay," and the Senator from Ohio would vote "yea."

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. My colleague [Mr. DENNIS] is paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] upon this question. My colleague would vote "nay," and the Senator from Michigan "yea."

Mr. LOGAN. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] If he were here he would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea."

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Boutwell, Buckingham, Conkling, Edmunds, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Robertson, Sargent, Scott, Spencer, Stewart, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—29.

So the bill was passed.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BOREMAN. Before that motion is put, I should like to have an order made for the withdrawal of papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate do now adjourn. Does he yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator from Maine persists in his motion, I demand the yeas and nays upon it. I do not want to come here again to-day, and I do not see why we should do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine withdraw his motion?

Mr. HAMLIN. Not a bit of it.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I ask for the yeas and nays upon it. ["No!" "No!"] Well, I will take a division first.

Mr. CONOVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No debate is in order. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 3, noes 40.

Mr. CONKLING. Is the motion now pending to adjourn over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. CONKLING. If it is not, I make the motion. If it is, I hope we shall have a vote upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves that when the Senate adjourn it be to meet on Monday next at eleven o'clock.

Mr. CONOVER. I ask the Senator to withdraw that motion for one moment until I can make a personal explanation.

Several SENATORS. Let us vote.

Mr. CONOVER. The explanation will not take a moment.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us vote on this motion, and then the Senator can make his explanation after that.

Mr. CONOVER. I simply desire to make a personal explanation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending motion is debatable.

Mr. CONKLING. Let me suggest to the Senator that this motion prevailing does not prevent his making a personal explanation. This is a motion simply that when we do adjourn we adjourn to meet on Monday next. It is not a motion to adjourn now.

Mr. CONOVER. If Senators will allow me to make a personal explanation after the motion is acted upon I will withhold it for the present.

Several SENATORS. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota.

The motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—CIVIL RIGHTS.

Mr. CONOVER. I wish to state that I was temporarily absent in the restaurant when the vote was taken on the passage of the civil-rights bill. I regret it, for had I been here I desired to vote in favor of the passage of the bill.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, communicating, in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the 15th instant, information relative to an opinion given by the Attorney-General upon the legality of a sale of pine timber belonging to the Chippewa Indians to A. H. Wilder; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. BOREMAN, it was Ordered, That the petition of members of Kanawha Lodge No. 25, Independent Order of Odd-Fellows of West Virginia be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 2418) to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of the said State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

The bill (H. R. No. 3424) for the relief of Thomas Winans and William L. Winans was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submitted an amendment intended to be offered from that committee to the bill (H. R. No. 3030) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1873 and 1874, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3030) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1873 and 1874, and for other purposes, for the purpose of leaving it as the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. Now I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at seven o'clock and ten minutes a. m. Saturday morning, after a continuous session of twenty hours) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 22, 1874.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

Mr. MONROE, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial from the national agricultural congress, held at Atlanta, Georgia, May 15, 1874, asking that one-half the net annual proceeds of the sales of the public lands be appropriated to agricultural colleges; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas measures are now pending before your honorable body for the appropriation of the annual net proceeds of the sales of the public lands to the advancement of the general cause of education in one form or other; and whereas agriculture is the dominant occupation of the American people, pre-eminently deserving their care and encouragement; and whereas many of the agricultural colleges of the nation as at present endowed are incapable of the full development contemplated by the act of Congress of July 2, 1862, creating and endowing them, and yet, though young in years, are encouragingly working out the great problem of industrial education, and fully vindicating, where fairly tried, the policy of their creation; and whereas at the last annual convocation of this body, at Indianapolis, Indiana, strong opposition was manifested on the part of some of the members to the further endowment of these colleges by Congress, yet it is now felt by the leaders of that opposition that these colleges are, and under prudent management will continue to be, of great service in the advancement of the cause of industrial education, and that they desire still further aid and encouragement from the national Congress:

Therefore, your memorialists, the members of the national agricultural congress, now in session at Atlanta, Georgia, respectfully ask that a bill be passed by your honorable body at its present session for the appropriation of half of the annual net proceeds of the sales of these lands, in such manner as you may direct, to the agricultural colleges contemplated by the said act of Congress.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

Attest:

CHAS. W. GREENE,
Secretary.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA, May 15, 1874.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA, May 15, 1874.

This will certify that the foregoing memorial was formally reported, and was adopted by the national agricultural congress assembled in convention this day, with but one dissenting voice.

And further, that General A. W. Bishop, of Arkansas; Rev. I. T. Tichener, of Alabama; and Colonel Beverly, of Virginia, were appointed a committee to present said memorial and the action of this body to the Congress of the United States.

By authority of the congress:

CHAS. W. GREENE,
Secretary.

SOUTHERN WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The Committee on War Claims, having leave to report at any time, have directed me to report back with an amendment in the form of a substitute the bill (H. R. No. 2797) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871. I am instructed to ask that the substitute be treated as an original bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to that course.

Mr. CONGER. Will this bill give rise to debate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands it will not.

Mr. CONGER. I rose for the purpose of calling the regular order.

Mr. LAWRENCE. By the direction of the committee, I move to amend——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman put in a substitute and then offer amendments to that?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Why does not the gentleman make the substitute conform to the amendments? By the parliamentary process he proposes there is nothing gained.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The amendments I am about to offer were agreed to this morning by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Then the bill had better be recommitted so that the gentleman may report his substitute in the form which the committee desire. That would shorten the proceeding very much.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Then I ask that the original bill be taken up.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the regular order; but am willing to yield for references merely.

The SPEAKER. There is no need of yielding for mere references, as Monday is so near at hand.

HAZING AT THE NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. ARCHER. I think the gentleman will yield to me that I may have passed a small bill, which has been agreed to by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to prevent hazing at the Naval Academy.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I demand the regular order.

Mr. ARCHER. This is the unanimous report of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I will not object if the bill gives rise to no debate.

Mr. ARCHER. I do not ask for its consideration if it is to cause debate.

The bill was read.

Mr. BROMBERG. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BARBER. It is right.

ISAAC L. JACKSON.

Mr. DONNAN, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Printing the petition of Isaac L. Jackson, of the District of Columbia, for relief; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order having been called, the morning hour begins at thirteen minutes past eleven o'clock, and reports of a private nature are in order from the Committee on Patents.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I ask the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] to allow me to make a suggestion. The committee, as I understand, are to report what is called the Rollin White case.

Mr. CONGER. I object to any statement being made in regard to that case until we reach it.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I desire to make a statement on behalf of my colleague, [Mr. HAWLEY,] who has been called away on business in connection with a committee of this House, of which he is a member. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if that case may not be postponed until General HAWLEY returns, which I think will be to-morrow morning.

Mr. CONGER. When we reach that case we can dispose of the request in regard to it.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Then I will wait until the case is reached.

Mr. CONGER. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. EAMES] to ask unanimous consent for the reference of a bill.

OWNERS OF SCHOONER ADA A. ANDREWS.

Mr. EAMES. I ask that by unanimous consent the bill (S. No. 688) referring the claim of the owners of the schooner Ada A. Andrews to the Court of Claims be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Claims.

There was no objection; and the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Claims, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

HARVEY LULL.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana, from the Committee on Patents, reported back the petition of Harvey Lull, for an extension of letters-patent for seven years, which letters-patent were granted to Harvey Lull January 2, 1854, for shutter-hinges; and moved that the Committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS WINANS AND WILLIAM L. WINANS.

Mr. DOBBINS, from the Committee on Patents, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3424) for the relief of Thomas Winans and William L. Winans; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes Thomas Winans and William L. Winans to renew, at any time within six months from the date of the passage of the act, an application heretofore made by them, on or about the 7th day of May, in the year 1866, for letters-patent of the United States for certain improvements in the construction of steam-vessels; and authorizes the Commissioner of Patents to re-examine and decide upon such renewed application as though the same had been made within the time now prescribed by law, provided that no person shall be held responsible in damages for the manufacture or use of said improvements in the event of the success of such application, prior to the date of the letters-patent therefor.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

Your committee, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas and William L. Winans asking that the Commissioner of Patents may be authorized to hear and act upon an application for letters-patent, which was made on or about the 7th of May, 1866, and rejected on the 11th of August of the same year, for an improvement which the applicants believed they had made in the construction of steam-vessels, report as follows:

It appears that on the 26th of October, 1858, Thomas Winans, one of the petitioners, and Ross Winans, obtained letters-patent for an improvement in the construction of the hulls of steam-vessels, the longitudinal sections of which were all arcs of and the cross-sections of which were all true circles. The vessel, the form of which was thus patented, is popularly known as the "cigar steamer." The patentees, Ross and Thomas Winans, seem to have commenced actual experiments to test the value of this novel form of construction by building a vessel of upward two hundred and fifty tons burden in Baltimore not long after they had obtained this patent, and with this trials involving alterations in the length and outline of the hull and in other respects were made up to the breaking out of the rebellion, which put a stop to them in this country, and obliged them to continue them in England, where a large experimental vessel was built; another, also experimental, in France, and a third in Russia, also for experiment, making in all four vessels whose only value consisted in the facility they afford for testing the merits of this most original principle of construction. The novelty of the idea, the change of all preconceived notions that it involves, made it necessary that the patentees should be at the expense of all experiments that were made, and indeed of every outlay connected with the invention. This outlay thus borne by the patentees amounted in October last to upward of $1,200,000, and has resulted in demonstrating, to the satisfaction at all events of the patentees, the success of this idea so far that they are said to be about commencing the construction at an early day, at their own cost, of two ocean steamers for transit between Europe and the United States. The facts here stated are taken from copies of the testimony laid before the Commissioner of Patents when, on the 26th of October, 1872, he extended the letters-patent here referred to.

While these experiments were in progress and before any definite conclusion had been reached by the patentees, Thomas Winans and his brother, the petitioner, William L. Winans, invented an improvement upon the invention so as aforesaid patented by Ross and Thomas Winans, looking to the best mode of constructing the decks of the spindle-shaped vessel. This was in the year 1866, when Thomas and William L. Winans, the latter being then interested in the original patent, were busily engaged with their English vessel near London. For this improvement the application was renewed for letters-patent, already mentioned, in 1872, when the petitioners were advised of said rejection. Besides being absent from the United States and engrossed in the experiments referred to, they were by no means confident that they would be able to surmount the difficulties and discouragements they met with, and unless they did overcome them there would be no occasion for any such improvement as the invention contemplated. Unless the vessel were a success, the deck must necessarily be valueless, existing only in the description of a specification to letters-patent.

At this time, (August, 1866,) there was no limitation as to the time within which a rejected application for letters-patent might be renewed, and the applicants seem to have thought it unnecessary to press said application until the success of the steamer itself was more assured. At last, when this ceased to be longer doubtful, they renewed within a few months past their application, only to find that in the mean time the act of 1870 had been passed relating to patents, the thirty-fifth section of which provided that when an application has been rejected or withdrawn prior to the passage of the act the applicant shall have six months from the date of such passage to renew his application or to file a new one.

Looking to all the circumstances here stated, the committee has thought it not more than proper that the petitioners should be permitted to go again before the Commissioner of Patents and prosecute their application as though they had done so within the time limited by the act of 1870. Looking to the extraordinary expense incurred by Ross and Thomas Winans, with whom the committee have been informed William L. Winans is identified in this matter, it seems no more than reasonable that if an invention peculiar to the hull of the vessel has been made by two of the parties, an omission to conform to a change in the law of which they were ignorant should not deprive them of an opportunity of making good their claim to originality should it be in their power to do so.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. DOBBINS. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. SAYLER.]

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. The invention to which this invention is so closely allied is, in the estimation of the committee, one of the most important inventions of the age—looking as it does to a complete revolution in the construction of all sea-going vessels. As shown by the report, these parties made their application in 1866 for a patent upon an invention that they had made in reference to the construction of decks applicable to their cigar-steamers, so known. They were then in Europe perfecting their invention upon the hull of a vessel, expending large sums of money in the aggregate, which amount at the present time to almost one million and a half of dollars. Up to 1866 they had met so many practical difficulties, that the final favorable result of their experiments was in exceeding doubt.

This application was referred to a primary examiner, who rejected the application. No appeal was taken. No further steps were taken in the application because of the uncertainty of the final success of the invention upon the hull. No argument was had before the primary examiner. Afterward their experiments satisfied them that their invention was a success and would revolutionize the construction of the entire sea-going craft of the world. They then made application to have a rehearing on their rejected application for patent on the deck.

Mr. CRUTCHFIELD. There is so much disorder in the House we can hardly hear what the gentleman from Indiana is saying.

The SPEAKER called the House to order.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. A few months since they made an application for a rehearing of their application for their patent on the deck peculiarly applicable to this form of vessel, only to find there had been a legal abandonment of their application under the law. They now come and ask Congress to let them go back to the Patent Office and take up the rejected application and prosecute it to a final hearing, and if they are entitled to a patent for this invention, that then they may have the benefit of it; or if not, they may at least have the satisfaction of being heard.

Now, sir, in the investigation of this case, as in the investigation of all cases by the Committee on Patents, that committee seeks to hold itself as closely to the constitutional provision as possible, giving force to that provision in its fullest sense and limiting it as far as possible to the exact scope of that provision; that is, whatever we may do, whatever we may report to the House here, shall be based on the fundamental idea that it is for the purpose of encouraging the progress of science and of the useful arts. Applying that rule, as the only rule fundamental, to this case, we have concluded, without any doubt whatever, that this application is fairly, squarely, and wholly within that provision.

Here two men, brothers, in connection with their father, for the last sixteen years have been expending large sums of money in perfecting this most remarkable and wonderful invention. By this invention a greater speed with less motive-power can be obtained. By this invention a greater degree of protection of human life is secured. By this invention the horrors of sea-sickness upon the high seas is almost entirely obviated. This cigar-shaped steamer is not subject to the action of the waves which produces sea-sickness. Whenever a wave strikes her, instead of careening her it carries her bodily with the wave. A few years ago, off Cape Hatteras, with a vessel of two hundred and fifty tons, during a storm when every other craft had to go into port for safety, these men staid out throughout that entire torm, and the proof shows they kept her in the trough of the sea at every angle of the waves, at every point of the storm, and although during the whole time they had a tumblerful of water sitting on their table, not one drop of it was spilled. The pitching of the vessel is greatly reduced. With its sharp point, instead of rising over the wave, it strikes through the crest of the wave and reduces the pitching.

It is one of the most wonderful and remarkable inventions of the age, and these men ought to be recognized by the American Congress for their great outlay of money, a million and a half of dollars almost, and for their sixteen years of toil. They ought to be recognized by the Congress of the United States because of their earnestness, zeal, and persistency in bringing to the use of the human family this great improvement in travel upon the high seas. If we give them the privilege of going before the Commissioner of Patents and perfecting their invention, getting it upon this deck as they now ask so it may be a complete boat, complete as the result of American labor, complete as the child of American genius, complete as the offspring of the American patent laws, wherever it goes throughout the broad expanse of the world it will proclaim the inventive genius of America and the fostering care of the American Republic.

This infringes no man's rights so far as our investigations have informed us. No man has gone into the manufacture of these vessels, but in abundance of prudence we have inserted a saving clause in the bill that if perchance somebody may have manufactured them they shall not be held liable in damages.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does it provide they shall continue the use of whatever they have already manufactured?

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. No, sir.

Mr. KELLOGG. If they have expended money in good faith, ought there not to be such a provision in the bill?

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. I have no objection in the world to that. I assure the gentleman from Connecticut we have made diligent inquiry for information through testimony taken in England, France, and Russia, and have not yet found this invention has been used anywhere. It is not applicable to any kind of construction except the cigar-shaped steamer.

Mr. EAMES. Allow me to suggest that no investment whatever has been made by anybody.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then such a provision would do no harm.

Mr. EAMES. Would it do any good? If there was any investment of that kind under the law, whoever made it would be protected by the court.

Mr. KELLOGG. If we pass a positive law, we repeal the old law if we do not retain the provision.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. So far as that matter is concerned, we have had no intimation from any quarter whatever that there has been any investment made. It is an invention peculiarly applicable to this form of sea-going vessels, and the attachment of the deck to this form of vessel. In every point of view, taking everything into consideration, considering the fact that these men, for the purpose of perfecting their invention by experiments, because of the high price of labor and material in this country went to England, France, and Russia, and there constructed three more vessels at immense expense, that they were there busily engaged in that labor, in expending their money to bring about this revolution in sea-going craft, and that they had no information whatever as to the passage of the law of 1870 limiting their time to six months, but continued to act upon the law as they understood it, and as it was in 1866, when they made their application for a patent—considering all these things, the committee thought that there has been an ample, full, and complete showing here of excusable neglect on the part of these inventors in perfecting their application; I mean excusable delay, not neglect.

There is another feature of this bill that appeals peculiarly to the American Congress, a feature to which I referred a moment ago. It is that by this invention ocean travel is made substantially free from danger; it is made rapid, it is made easy, it is made comfortable to all who are engaged in it. It will also be a great saving to our American marine insurance companies, to our American merchants, and will be greatly beneficial to life and comfort. We take it that there is not a particle of doubt anywhere in this case that it will promote the progress of science and of the useful arts. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MERCY ANN HALL.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote of the House on yesterday recommitting to the Committee on Naval Affairs a bill of the House, No. 3422, for the relief of Mercy Ann Hall, widow of Captain Charles F. Hall.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider will be entered upon the Journal.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. What is the parliamentary effect of such a motion?

Mr. CONGER. I object to taking up the morning hour by parliamentary inquiries.

The SPEAKER. It will not be taken out of the time of the Committee on Patents.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. When the rule was adopted requiring bills making appropriations to be referred to the Committee of the Whole for their first consideration, the Chair announced that the mere reference of such a bill would not be treated as a first consideration; that such a reference would not be subject to a motion to reconsider. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] is permitted by unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference, and then enter a motion to reconsider that reference, it will destroy entirely the effect of that rule. I have no knowledge of this particular bill.

The SPEAKER. The record is that by unanimous consent the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. SCOFIELD] reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs a bill for the relief of Mercy Ann Hall, widow of Captain Charles F. Hall; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs. When the bill comes back from that committee it will be subject to all points of order which would originally apply to it.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. This is a motion to reconsider that vote.

The SPEAKER. To reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs. If that vote shall be reconsidered, the effect of it would be to bring the bill before the House, when if it involves an appropriation of money the point of order would carry it to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I have no objection to this particular bill; I only want to preserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER. This motion does not evade any point of order.

ROLLIN WHITE.

Mr. SLOSS. I am directed by the Committee on Patents to report a bill for the relief of Rollin White.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I desire a moment to state the position of my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] in regard to this bill.

Mr. SLOSS. I cannot yield now.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I understood from the chairman of the committee [Mr. CONGER] that I might state the position of General HAWLEY.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SLOSS] has the floor.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Before the committee began to report this morning, I called the attention of the chairman——

Mr. CONGER. I said that when the bill came up I had no objection to the gentleman making his statement.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I only want to make a statement in regard to General HAWLEY.

Mr. CONGER. Let the bill be reported, and then the gentleman can make his statement.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. As my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is absent, if the bill is proceeded with to-day he of course cannot be heard. I simply wish to state the reason why I think he ought to be heard. Of course it will do no good for him to be heard after the bill is passed.

Mr. CONGER. Nor does it do for our committee to detain the House in order to wait for absent members.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. The committee have other bills, I believe.

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; this is the only one ready this morning.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Then I want to state that this bill, which was once passed by the House without anybody knowing anything about it and was vetoed by the President, is here again; and my colleague, [Mr. HAWLEY,] whose constituents are largely interested in this matter, had arranged with the committee, as I understand, that he should be allowed to state some reasons why, in his judgment, the bill should not pass. He is unavoidably detained by his business on a committee, and he requests that he may not be deprived of the opportunity to state his views upon the bill. I hope, therefore, the Committee on Patents will allow this matter to lie over till next week or some other time, when my colleague can have a chance to be heard. I think he ought to be heard. He does not want much time.

Mr. CONGER. If the House will give us our hour upon this subject——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state how the rule would leave this matter. If the consideration of this bill should consume the remainder of the hour, it would of necessity go over until next Friday, when it would again come up. Probably the reading of the report and any debate that may arise upon it would consume the remaining twenty-eight minutes of this hour. If it could be agreed that this bill should go over, and that during the remainder of this morning hour other committees shall be called for reports for reference merely, this bill would by that arrangement come up in the morning hour next Friday.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. If this bill were my matter I should be ready to discuss it; but General HAWLEY, whose constituents are very largely interested, is absent.

Mr. CONGER. If it be understood that we may take up this bill at the commencement of the morning hour next Friday, I will, after reporting another bill which will occupy but a moment, yield the remainder of the hour.

Mr. RUSK. Does this arrangement require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does. But unless the House now goes forward and by a majority vote disposes of this bill so as to get it out of the morning hour, it will necessarily come up in that hour next Friday, and every succeeding Friday in the session until disposed of.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I object to any agreement as to next Friday.

Mr. RUSK. The Committee on Patents have had two morning hours; this makes the second.

Mr. GARFIELD. Gentlemen will observe that it is within the power of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to have this bill carried over till next week; therefore I think it would be wise to assent to the arrangement he suggests, and allow other committees to occupy the remainder of the hour this morning.

Mr. CONGER. I have made the proposition in order that other committees may be heard to-day.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I understand that this bill will take longer than the remainder of the morning hour this morning; and it is now proposed to lay it aside and take up other matters. It strikes me that it is best to proceed with this bill until it is finished, and that will give other committees a better opportunity to bring forward their business.

Mr. CONGER. I renew the proposition which I made, that this bill may be allowed to come up as the regular order next Friday morning, and that other committees may report bills this morning for reference to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I hope that will not be done.

The SPEAKER. The arrangement requires unanimous consent. There is no need of arguing it. The Clerk will read the bill reported by the Committee on Patents.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill (H. R. No. 3425) for the relief of Rollin White.

Before the reading was concluded,

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, said: I withdraw my objection to the arrangement proposed by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.] I understand that the Committee on Patents are willing that the remainder of this morning hour shall be occupied in the call of other committees; and I am informed that this bill will not occupy probably more than twenty minutes or half an hour next Friday.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I renew the objection.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The bill provides that the Commissioner of Patents be, and he thereby is, authorized to rehear and determine the applications of Rollin White for the extension of his letters-patent for improvements in fire-arms, issued April 3, 1855, numbered 12638, 12648, and 12649, (No. 12638 having been reissued May 1, 1866, numbered 2236, and 12649 having been reissued October 27, 1863, in divisions numbered 1557, 1558, and 1559,) upon the evidence, in the same manner and with the same effect as if they were original applications made within the time prescribed by law for said extensions, before the Commissioner of Patents, and as if no hearing had ever occurred, application to be made within ninety days of the passage of this act; provided that in case of such extension being granted no damage shall be recovered for infringements thereof between the date of the expiration of the original patents and the date of such extensions; and provided also that the Government of the United States, to whom said White has heretofore released, shall still have the right to manufacture and use all the improvements included in said patents in case of such extensions, freely and without charge, and without liability for damages for the use of said patents; and provided also that in case said extensions shall be granted, any person, firm, or corporation that since the expiration of said patents and prior to the passage of this act shall have constructed machinery for the manufacture of the inventions described in said patents, or have engaged in the manufacture of said inventions using machinery previously constructed therefor, shall have the right to apply for and be entitled to receive a license from said Rollin White to manufacture and sell the fire-arms described in said patent for and during the extended term thereof, upon reasonable conditions as to the security for payment of the royalty hereinafter mentioned and prescribed uniform quality of arms manufactured, and as to making report on oath of manufacture and sales, and upon payment of royalty to said Rollin White of fifty cents, in quarter-yearly payments, upon each and every fire-arm so manufactured.

Mr. SLOSS. I ask for the reading of the report of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of Rollin White for leave to apply to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of certain patents granted to him in 1855, and the bill entitled "An act for the relief of Rollin White," have given a full hearing to all the parties interested, and beg leave to submit the following report:

This matter has been fully and carefully presented to the committee upon printed arguments on behalf of Rollin White and of the parties who oppose his petition, and the labor of the committee has been thereby materially lessened.

The same petition had been fully considered by the Committee on Patents for the House of Representatives of the last Congress, and their report, which covers the whole ground, meets the approval of the present committee and is adopted as a part of this paper. It is as follows:

Rollin White having certain patents for improvements in fire-arms, issued April 3, 1855, and numbered 12638, 12648, and 12649, (number 12638 having been reissued May 1, 1866, numbered 2236, and number 12649 having been reissued October 27, 1863, in three divisions, numbered 1557, 1558, and 1559,) made seasonable application to the Commissioner of Patents for extensions of the same. He employed as his attorney Mr. Charles M. Keller, of New York, an eminent patent lawyer, who had long been his counsel, and was entirely familiar with his inventions, having been engaged in several suits upon them. Mr. Keller prepared Mr. White's papers in his application for the extension, and attended to the taking of the greater portion of the testimony in his behalf. Just before the time for closing testimony, and three or four weeks before the day of hearing by the Commissioner of Patents, Mr. Keller was taken sick, and was incapacitated for business until after the hearing hereinafter mentioned. By reason of this sickness he failed to forward to the Patent Office a quantity of testimony, including a certain account of Mr. White, showing the expenditure of $38,321.09 as a charge against the patents. About the same time, and just before the day of hearing by the Commissioner of Patents, the office of the United States commissioner in New York City, before whom much of the testimony in behalf of Mr. White had been taken, was broken into, and the testimony and numerous exhibits referred to therein were stolen and carried away, and have never been recovered. No other property having been taken, it may be inferred that this offense was committed by or in behalf of some opposing party.

Under these circumstances, with new counsel not acquainted with the facts or with the intentions of Mr. White, and without most important testimony and exhibits, and without the account before referred to of $38,321.09 of expenditures, a hearing was had before the Commissioner of Patents, who, on April 2, 1869, refused the extensions without assigning any reason for his action. It will be remembered that this hearing occured on the day before the patents expired. As the Commissioner had no jurisdiction to act in the matter after the day of expiration, he could not grant a postponement of the hearing until Mr. White could remove the difficulties under which he labored.

Mr. White made at once before Congress, then in session, the usual petition for a rehearing of his applications for extension before the Commissioner of Patents, and upon such petition Senate bill No. 273, entitled "An act for the relief of Rollin White," passed both branches of Congress just before the final adjournment, but not in season to be signed by the President of the Senate. Being signed at the ensuing December session, the bill was vetoed by the President January 11, 1870, at the request of General A. B. Dyer, Chief of Ordnance, as fully set forth in Senate Executive Document No. 23, Forty-first Congress, second session.

The objections made by General Dyer would seem to be quite proper for the consideration of the Commissioner of Patents had there been a rehearing under that act, but quite insufficient, in the opinion of the committee, to justify an executive veto. They were objections to the granting of extensions rather than to a rehearing.

In the Senate the bill was subsequently passed, notwithstanding the veto of the President; but in the House it was defeated.

At the next Congress Mr. White renewed his petition.

It will be observed that Mr. White does not ask for an extension of his patents by Congress, but for permission to have another hearing before the Commissioner of Patents, where there can be a more full and thorough investigation of all the questions involved than Congress can possibly have time to make. At the hearing, of which the law requires due notice to be given, all opposing parties can be present and have a full consideration of all reasons why the extensions should not be granted.

It should also be stated that opposing parties, at the hearing before the committee, claimed and offered evidence tending to show that certain important features of Mr. White's inventions were not really invented by him, and that his patents, so far as they embrace those features, were never valid. The committee do not feel called upon to decide these difficult mechanical questions. The Commissioner of Patents is the proper tribunal for the decision of such questions, and the committee are confident that the present Commissioner will never order an extension of either of these patents unless, upon the law and the evidence, Mr. White shall establish his right to such extension.

It appears to the committee that, by reason of the illness of Mr. Keller, the abstraction of important testimony and exhibits, which, according to the report of the examiner, rendered the evidence "almost unintelligible," and the non-production of the account of expenditures alluded to, which would have reduced Mr. White's profits to but little more than a third of the amount the Commissioner assumed them to be, as hereafter appears, Mr. White has not had that full and fair hearing which it is the intent of the law to grant to inventors upon their applications for extension.

But while the committee thus favor the prayer of Mr. White for a rehearing, they are aware of the fact that certain manufacturing interests, upon the belief, as claimed by them, that Mr. White's inventions had become public property, have made investments of capital for the manufacture of the same, and for this reason are of the opinion that such manufacturers may be entitled to consideration. They have therefore placed in the bill reported by them, by way of relief to such parties, a provision which will give the right of manufacture and sale under certain conditions named.

The committee have not reported in detail upon the value of these inventions, and the amount of compensation received by Mr. White, because it appeared to them that for the reasons named Mr. White was clearly entitled in equity and fair dealing to a new hearing before the Commissioner of Patents, upon the ground that he cannot be regarded as really having had a hearing at all. The committee do not base their decision upon the ground that the Commissioner did not properly weigh the testimony before him, nor that he did not correctly decide the case as it appeared before him; but the ground is that Mr. White, through accident and misfortune, and without fault on his part, was unable to lay his case properly before the Commissioner. The committee consider the application of Mr. White quite similar to a petition for a new trial in a court, and have so decided it. As has been already stated, the Commissioner, in refusing these extensions, did not assign any reasons; but he wrote a letter to Senator FERRY, of Connecticut, on the 17th of January, 1870, for the purpose of defeating the passage of the bill over the veto of the President, in which, after describing the inventions, he summed up by stating that the patentee had received $70,899 and expended $22,457, and decided that his rewards had been ample, having reference to the benefits conferred on the public. But it does not appear what his decision would have been had evidence of the additional expenditure of $38,321.09 been before him, except as it may be inferred from the following concluding paragraph of his letter: "In view of the facts detailed, I do not think that more arguments, or more illustrations, or, indeed, more testimony, would have altered the conclusions to which I arrived, or the decision which I made."

The committee, while not attempting to base their action on this ground, are of the opinion that Mr. White was, to say the least of it, unfortunate in not having his case heard before a commission whose "conclusions" might be "altered" by "more arguments," "more illustrations," or "more testimony."

It appears sufficiently clear to the committee that these inventions are of great value to the public, not only by direct testimony, but by the zeal, energy, and character of the opposition arrayed against them. It also appears that by reason of the dominant character of certain inventions of Mr. Colt, Mr. White was unable to bring his inventions into public use until two or three years after his patents were issued and therefore has had the actual benefit of his inventions for only about eleven and a half years. It further appears that Mr. White is in feeble health, a cripple for life, and is possessed of very moderate pecuniary means. The committee, therefore, in view of all the foregoing facts, recommend the passage of the accompanying bill as a substitute for the bill referred to the committee, which, it will be observed, aims not only at providing for Mr. White a very moderate compensation for his inventions, in case the extension shall be granted by the Commissioner of Patents, but seeks to make an equitable arrangement for what are considered opposing interests, and wholly avoids the objections raised by the veto message of the President before alluded to, by granting full authority to the Government to manufacture and use all the improvements included in said patents freely without charge.

If more could be necessary for the protection of the Government it may be found in the following assignment, executed by Mr. White on the 17th of December, 1869:

LICENSE TO THE GOVERNMENT TO USE, FREE OF COST, PATENTS FOR IMPROVEMENTS IN FIRE-ARMS.

Know all men by these presents that I, Rollin White, of Lowell, Massachusetts, for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar to me in hand paid, (the receipt whereof I do hereby acknowledge,) have remised, released, and forever discharged, and I do hereby, for myself, heirs, my executors, administrators, and assigns, remise, release, and forever discharge the Government of the United States of and from all debts, demands, claims, action, and causes of action, which I now have in law or equity, or of whatsoever nature, or which hereafter or at any other time I may have, from any and all use by the Government of the United States of my improvements for fire-arms patented in 1855, being the same improvements included in a recent act of Congress for my relief.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 17th day of December, 1869.

[SEAL.] ROLLIN WHITE.

Witnessed by—
H. A. SNOW,
C. D. GILMORE.

The undersigned members of the committee concur in this report. The chairman, having on a former occasion acted as counsel for Mr. White, did not take any part in the hearing.

In addition to the facts and arguments presented in the report of the committee made at the last session of Congress, it is proper to take some notice of the fact that the discussion before the committee of the present Congress has been based upon the bill which was recommended by the committee of the preceding Congress, which bill is as follows:

"A bill for the relief of Rollin White.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Commissioner of Patents be, and hereby is, authorized to rehear and determine the applications of Rollin White for the extension of his letters-patent for improvements in fire-arms, issued April 3, 1855, Nos. 12638, 12648, and 12649, (No. 12638 having been reissued May 1, 1866, Nos. 2236, and 12649 having been reissued October 27, 1863, in divisions Nos. 1557, 1558, and 1559,) upon the evidence, in the same manner and with the same effect as if they were original applications made within the time prescribed by law for said extensions, before the Commissioner of Patents, and as if no hearing had ever occurred; and if any of said patents shall be extended, it shall be for a period of seven years from the date of such extensions: Provided, That in case of such extensions being granted, no damage shall be recovered for infringements thereof between the date of the expiration of the original patents and the date of such extensions: And provided also, That the Government of the United States shall have the right to manufacture and use all the improvements included in said patents, in case of such extensions, freely and without charge, and without liability for damages for the use of said patents: And provided also, That in case said extensions shall be granted, any person, firm, or corporation that, since the expiration of said patents and prior to the passage of this act, shall have constructed machinery for the manufacture of the inventions described in said patents, or have engaged in the manufacture of said inventions using machinery previously constructed therefor, shall have the right to apply for and be entitled to receive a license from said Rollin White to manufacture and sell the fire-arms described in said patents for and during the extended term thereof, upon reasonable conditions as to security for payment of the royalty hereinafter mentioned, and as to making report on oath of manufacture and sales, and upon payment of a royalty to said Rollin White of fifty cents, in quarter-yearly payments, upon each and every fire-arm so manufactured and sold."

At the present hearing notice was given by Mr. White to his opponents that it was proposed to amend this bill by inserting a provision as to the quality of the fire-arms which should be manufactured under his patent should the same be extended.

The arguments presented to us have had reference to the bill before recited as thus amended.

The committee are of opinion that the bill as submitted with the proposed amendment is a proper one for the favorable consideration of Congress, as it seems to guard all the interests affected, whether of the United States or of manufacturers in this country, who have in good faith embarked their capital in the manufacture of these particular fire-arms. The provision as to the quality of the arms seems essential in order that all the manufacturers who may take licenses of Rollin White, should his patent be extended by the Commissioner of Patents, may share equally in the protection of the patents, and be free from an injurious competition upon the part of those who might, in order to get control of the market, fill it up with cheap, inferior pistols, more dangerous to the user than to anybody else.

No new facts appear to have been presented to us, under the bill as amended, which were not adduced before the former committee, and the new arrangements delivered by the opponents of this petition seem to us to involve matters which are within the special province of the Commissioner of Patents to determine, rather than such as should properly be considered by Congress. It appears from the evidence that Mr. White has received from all sources for his invention $73,000, and has expended $60,779.98. The principal complaint of the petitioner that he has not had that full and fair hearing which the law accorded to him, and that he has failed of such a hearing by no fault of his own, has not in the opinion of the committee been satisfactorily answered, either by proofs or arguments.

The committee, therefore, in view of the foregoing, recommended the passage of the bill as amended, as an act of simple justice to the petitioner.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The morning hour having expired, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar

Mr. LAWRENCE. Pending that motion I desire to report the bill making appropriations for the claims allowed by the commissioners of claims.

Mr. CONGER. When will the bill in reference to the Rollin White case come up again?

The SPEAKER. In the morning hour on Friday next.

Mr. LAWRENCE. This bill makes appropriations for the payment of over one thousand claims, about which I believe there is no controversy except in regard to a single claim. It will not take up much time, and it is a matter of too much importance to be delayed.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Does the gentleman anticipate that there will be any debate on the bill?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Not so far as I am aware, except on a single claim.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. It is a very important bill, and I think it ought to be passed as soon as possible.

The SPEAKER. The bill properly belongs to Friday, being private-bill day.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I desire to inquire of the Chair when committees will be called to report private bills?

The SPEAKER. Whenever the Committee on Patents has finished its reports.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY COMMISSIONERS OF CLAIMS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I am instructed by the Committee on War Claims, which has leave to report the bill at any time, to report back the bill (H. R. No. 2797) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and to recommend the passage of the substitute.

I will state for the information of the House that this bill includes a little over a thousand claims of different claimants residing in the Southern States. These claims have all been allowed by the commissioners of claims. The amount appropriated by the bill is $676,274.03. It is the bill in the usual form making appropriations for the payment of claims allowed by the commissioners of claims.

It is proper to say that some question has been made before the commissioners of claims as to whether, in case of the death of a claimant, money due for supplies should be paid to the administrator or to the heirs. The general practice, I believe, heretofore has been that bills of this sort have made the appropriations to the administrator. That practice, however, has not been entirely uniform, and in this bill there are perhaps two or three cases where it is proposed to make payment directly to the heirs. There is one case, on page 23 of the bill, where it is proposed to make payment to a portion of the heirs of a deceased claimant, where the administrator of the deceased has presented since the commissioners of claims made their report, letters of administration taken out on the estate of the deceased, and asks that payment be made to him. The committee, however, have concluded that as the payment of all these claims is in the discretion of Congress they will recommend payment to the heirs or distributees directly, and only to those who are loyal, and the proportion to which they are entitled.

I am not aware of anything in the bill that requires explanation. The Committee on War Claims, I think, have agreed to it unanimously. There is no question made except in regard to a single claim. When the bill shall be read up to that point I will make a motion to strike out one claim, and that is all the amendment I propose to offer to the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I would ask the gentleman if it is necessary to read the whole bill? The reading I trust will not be demanded. It is a matter well understood.

Mr. KELLOGG. It seems to me that a bill of this importance, in which so many members representing the South are interested, ought to be read that members may know that the claims in which they are interested are embraced in it.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. They have had every opportunity to examine it. It will take an hour to read the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it ought to be read.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is well to read the bill. But if it be thought better to omit this I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the bill can only be dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Then I ask that it may be withdrawn for to-day.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I cannot withdraw it. There are a thousand claims which have been allowed and appropriation must be made for them. It has already been delayed by various causes which I could not avoid.

Mr. POLAND. I hope the reading will not be insisted on. The report of the commissioners was filed at the very beginning of the session, and every gentleman interested in it has had an opportunity of examining it.

The reading of the bill at length was not insisted on.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I offer the following amendment to the substitute:

Strike out on page 22 the following:
To William Bailey, $45,161.72.

Before calling the previous question I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SENER] to offer an amendment to which there is no objection. It has not been agreed upon by the committee, but I believe a brief statement will show that there can be no objection to it.

Mr. SENER. I offer the following amendment:

Insert between lines 1288 and 1289 these words:
To the public-school trustees of Manassas, for the material of the Bradley school-house and church, $450, to be paid on the basis of a compromise between the school and church trustees on file in the case.

Mr. SENER. I wish to say just a word in explanation of this amendment.

Mr. LAWRENCE. There is no objection to it.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. Does the chairman of the committee propose to cut off debate by his motion of the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I suppose an hour will be enough for debate after the previous question has been called. If gentlemen desire to debate the bill before the previous question is called, I will not now call it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I hope time will be allowed for debate.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the gentleman yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. On page 3 of the printed bill as prepared from the report of the southern claims commissioners is an item of appropriation "to William B. Day, $200." The item was in the bill until this morning. The Committee on War Claims have struck out that item this morning, together with one other item, upon representations made by letters or affidavits in each case that the parties to whom the appropriations were to be made were disloyal. Now, in the case of Mr. Day, I am assured by a gentleman on this floor who represents the district in which Mr. Day lives, or the adjoining district, that he was as loyal during the war as any man; that Union soldiers were taken care of by him, and that he has been loyal from that time to this. Now, I submit whether the Committee on War Claims have not done injustice, whether the House may not do injustice by striking out that little item of $200, when a member of Congress who knows all about it assures me that the persons who sent those letters charging him with disloyalty were enemies of Mr. Day, and entirely mistaken in their statements. I will add the sworn statement of Mr. Day, as a part of my remarks, as follows:

The said William B. Day, being first duly sworn, says in answer to the interrogatories propounded to him, that he is fifty-five years of age, resides twelve miles from Jasper, Walker County, Alabama, and by occupation a farmer; that he has resided at his present residence since the fall of 1863; that for twenty years before that time he resided about eighteen miles from said town of Jasper in the edge of Winston County, Alabama.

Claimant says that, from the year 1860 to 1865 inclusive, he was opposed to secession and rebellion and in favor of the Union; that he never did anything during the rebellion of his own free will or accord in aid of the rebellion; that in the year 1860 he voted for Stephen A. Douglas for President, and in the same year he openly and boldly opposed secession and rebellion, and advocated the Union cause publicly and privately, and advocated the election of CHRISTOPHER C. SHEATS for delegate to the secession convention as the Union candidate from Winston County, Alabama; that after the State seceded, the secession of the State did not change his sentiments; did not go with the State but firmly and prudently adhered to the Union cause. The ordinance of secession was not submitted to the people for ratification, but if it had been he would have used his utmost influence against it and voted against it.

Claimant says he was not directly or indirectly connected with the civil service of the so-called Confederate States, and that he was at no time in the rebel army, or in arms against the Government of his choice; that he never owned any confederate bonds or did anything to sustain the credit of the so-called Confederate States.

Claimant further states that he never was in the Union Army.

Claimant says that he gave aid and comfort to the friends and supporters of the Union cause so far as it was safe or prudent for him to do; that is to say, that when Union men were arrested for their sentiments, he always used his influence to have them released; claimant gives a few of the many that he so aided, to wit, John L. Reed, J. T. Curtis, and Joseph Curtis, and J. W. Montgomery, and in claimant's opinion they would have been put to death for their Union sentiments if it had not been for claimant and other Union men, two of whom were afterward put to death for their Union sentiments, to wit, the two Curtises; and he further states that through his influence the property of different Union families, which had been taken by rebel soldiers, was restored to them. A portion of the property of the above-named Joseph Curtis he kept concealed until the war closed, and then returned it to said Curtis's wife, and claimant says he had a horse returned to the family of Henry Inman, who was absent in the Union Army, First Regiment Alabama Volunteer Cavalry, and also the family of one John Blevins, who was in the same regiment with said Inman; he had a horse returned.

Claimant says that he gave aid and assistance to all he could, and did all that was safe and prudent to do to families of Union soldiers and Union refugees going across to the Union lines.

Claimant says that he never was arrested by either the Union Army or the confederates; that he was often very much abused by one Captain Goodwin, who was commanding the conscript post at Jasper, Alabama, when claimant would intercede for Union men who had been arrested, or for the property which had been or was about to be taken by rebel authorities of Union men and their families, and trying to relieve men from conscription in the rebel service. Claimant says he had one son in the rebel army, that he went into the rebel service about the time the conscription commenced; that said son did not go into the army of claimant's own free will and accord, but went into said army against claimant's will, and that about the close of the war he had another son who was conscripted into said army; that he never supplied them with any military equipments while in said army.

Claimant solemnly declares that from the beginning of hostilities against the United States to the end thereof his sympathies were constantly with the cause of the United States; that he never of his own free will or accord did anything, or offered, or sought, or attempted, to do anything by word or deed to injure said cause, or retard its success, and that he was at all times ready and willing when called upon to aid and assist the cause of the Union so far as his means and power and the circumstances of the case permitted. This is all confirmed by four other witnesses who were loyal men.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I think there will be time enough after the previous question has been ordered. I now call the previous question.

Mr. KELLOGG. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KELLOGG and Mr. LAWRENCE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were ayes 96, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded, and the main question was then ordered.

Mr. KELLOGG. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The bill as reported to the House, and which the chairman of the Committee on War Claims had authority to report at any time, contained among other items this item on page 3 of the printed bill: "To William B.

Day, $200;" and on page 7 of the printed bill the item "To Carter Scott, $472." Now I submit whether the chairman of the Committee on War Claims has any right to put in any other bill here except the one which the House authorized him to report at any time, the bill containing the two items to which I have referred.

The SPEAKER. That depends upon whether he was authorized by the committee.

Mr. KELLOGG. He was authorized by the committee to move an amendment, and we have a right to vote on that amendment.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I was instructed by the committee to report an original bill this morning. These two claimants to which the gentleman refers were struck out of the old bill. The original bill as printed and sent to the committee contained some twenty-seven errors. Those errors were all corrected by the clerks of the committee, and I have reported this morning as an original bill the one prepared by the clerk of the committee correcting those errors.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had leave of the House to report the substitute as an original bill, no objection being made. It is a common parliamentary practice to report a substitute to be treated as an original bill. The Clerk will read the first amendment.

Strike out on page 22 the following: To William Bailey $45,161.72.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I desire to make a brief explanation in regard to this amendment. I ask the attention of the House, because this is a question of some importance both in the amount and still more in the principle involved. It is the only amendment about which the Committee on War Claims have had any difficulty. The commissioners of claims, in their second annual report, allowed the claim of William Bailey, of Rapides Parish, in Louisiana, for $45,161.72 for quartermaster stores and commissary supplies taken from his plantation by the Army of the United States. A bill passed the House making an appropriation to pay that, with other claims allowed by the commissioners. It went to the Senate, and there it was dropped out of the bill upon the allegation that the claimant was disloyal. Application was made to the Committee on War Claims to include the claim in the appropriation bill to be reported at this session of Congress for the payment of these southern claims. The original report made by the commissioners of claims is before me, or a copy of it, and I do not know that I can do better than to ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

William Bailey is a native of Virginia; is seventy-one years of age; was the owner of a large plantation near Alexandria, on the Red River, embracing over fifteen hundred acres; the chief product was cotton; when the war broke out he was residing on this plantation. After a careful examination of the testimony and all the papers in the case, and after the most thorough and searching inquiry, we find Mr. Bailey to have been a constant and consistent Union man during the whole war. A printed copy of the testimony relating to eight hundred and thirty-four bales of cotton which was libeled and which was claimed by Mr. Bailey was furnished to us. The testimony was taken at New Orleans in 1864, before a United States commissioner. On the part of the United States it was alleged that this cotton was sold by General Bailey to the confederate government. A large amount of testimony was taken, and we are informed that a compromise was finally made by which General Bailey received a portion of this cotton or its proceeds. General Bailey, upon his examination in this case, swears that he did sell five hundred bales of cotton to the confederate government, or to some confederate or State agent, alleging that he was compelled to sell it to get money to pay his taxes; and if he had refused it would have been taken or burned. The cases of loyalty among the large landed proprietors of the South were so very rare, that we felt it to be our duty to investigate this case thoroughly, and after doing so we feel fully justified in reporting this claimant as loyal.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I have presented that report so that I might do entire justice to General Bailey. On the 26th of March, 1874, the commissioners of claims sent in an additional report, in which they show that General Bailey sold cotton to the agents of the so-called confederate government to the amount altogether of $54,101.64, and that his first sale was made November 14, 1862. I ask the Clerk to read that report.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF CLAIMS,
Washington, D. C., March 26, 1874.

DEAR SIR: The records of the trans-Mississippi cotton bureau, purchased by the Government since the report was made in the case of William Bailey, No. 980, show facts which we deem it our duty to report to your committee. The case having been reported by us to Congress, we do not feel at liberty to make any further investigation of it unless specially directed by that body to do so.

It clearly appears that General Bailey sold to the confederate government on the 14th of November, 1862, five hundred and thirty-six bales of cotton. His son-in-law, Andrew W. McKee, had been appointed by the confederate government, namely, in October, 1862, general agent for the purchase of cotton in Western Louisiana and Texas. The first sale made was by General Bailey, November 14, 1862. This five hundred and thirty-six bales of cotton was no part of the eight hundred and thirty-four bales litigated in the United States district court for the eastern district of Louisiana in 1864. It may be, perhaps, the cotton referred to by General Bailey, (see his testimony before the commissioners of claims of November 14, 1871, page 5,) in his answers, as follows:

"Question. Did you contribute anything to aid the confederate cause?

"Answer. Never, one farthing, neither directly nor indirectly.

"Q. Did not you have to pay tithes?

"A. I had; and I was compelled to sell five hundred bales of cotton to the confederate government, or have it burned and destroyed, in order to pay my taxes. I sold it to a young man, an agent of the confederate government there."

He subsequently tells of an armed force coming out to burn his cotton; of his telling them he would sell it, &c. The statement is confused and inconsistent, the date uncertain, but might be November, 1862; and if the young man, the agent, was his son-in-law, it may identify the transaction, but will make the story of duress or an armed force very improbable.

It would seem to be clearly established by the papers now obtained that General Bailey, on the 14th of November, 1862, sold, voluntarily, five hundred and thirty-six bales of cotton to the confederate government; that he was the first leading planter to so sell his cotton; and that his son-in-law was the confederate agent who bought it. It further appears from the "day-book" of the cotton agency in the custody of the Secretary of the Treasury, (to which our attention has recently been called,) that A. W. McKee, as confederate agent, bought of William Bailey, November 14, 1862, five hundred and thirty-six bales of cotton, and paid him therefor, in confederate bonds, $20,000, and in notes, $18,731.44, making a total of $38,731.44; also, that on the 1st of January, 1863, McKee bought of Bailey six hundred and eighty bales of cotton, and paid him in bonds $24,100, and in notes $30,001.64; making $54,101.64.

It also appears from the papers that one G. W. Sentell bought for William Bailey, or for Bailey & Ward, nine hundred and eighty-five bales of cotton in the parish of Bossier; that Bailey, through his son-in-law, the confederate agent, (McKee,) sold his interest therein to Ward, and that soon after the confederate government took possession of all this cotton for its own use. Considering the relations of Bailey and McKee, and that the property soon went for confederate use, it seems probable that Bailey should have shared in this purchase, and that it was made for confederate use.

It also appears from a letter found among these papers that Captain W. W. Withenburg was an agent of the confederacy under McKee, and engaged in transporting cotton for the confederate government to market.

He was an important witness for and much relied on by General Bailey to establish both the facts and loyalty in his case. He claimed to have been loyal himself to the cause and Government of the United States. His connection with the confederate government was not made known to us at the time; but that fact would seem to have an important bearing on the credibility of the witness.

A. O. ALDIS,
J. B. HOWELL,
O. FERRISS,
Commissioners of Claims.

Hon. WILLIAM LAWRENCE, M. C.,
Chairman Committee of War Claims, &c.,
House of Representatives.

Mr. LAWRENCE, It will be seen that at the time the commissioners of claims allowed this claim they acted under the impression that whatever cotton Mr. Bailey sold was sold under duress. It now appears, however, by the second report of the commissioners that the sale was a voluntary sale; that it was the first sale made by any leading planter in the parish; and the commissioners have uniformly held that where there has been a voluntary sale of cotton to the agents of the confederate government, that was evidence of disloyalty. Cotton, as is well known, was the chief reliance of the confederate authorities to supply their government with the means to carry on the rebellion. The commissioners, therefore, have uniformly held that wherever a voluntary sale of cotton has been made the sale was in aid of the rebellon and a disloyal act. From their report it seems that Bailey was the first leading planter to sell, and that he sold very largely. There were three men of prominence in the parish to whom my attention has been called, who owned large quantities of cotton. Bailey was among them. He made the first sale on the 14th of November, 1862. Whitty M. Sasser, residing in the same parish, sold cotton to the confederate government on the 5th of May, 1863; yet the Committee of War Claims have directed that the claim of Sasser should not be put in the bill, though he did not make his sale until May 5, 1863.

Mr. KELLOGG. The gentleman will allow me to ask whether the Sasser claim has been before our committee at all for action?

Mr. LAWRENCE. The Sasser claim was discussed by the committee.

Mr. KELLOGG. Was it before the committee for action? It never was within my knowledge.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The matter, at all events, has been before the committee, and the claim has not been directed to be put into the bill.

It should be stated also that there is a claim before the committee in behalf of James B. Sullivan for cotton burned on his plantation in Rapides Parish. In the investigation of this claim it turns out (and the proof is before the committee) that Sullivan owned a large quantity of cotton, which he repeatedly refused to sell to the confederate government, and it was not seized until about the time of General Banks's retreat down the Red River, in April or May, 1864. By the testimony taken in the Sasser case it is clearly proved that there were no seizures by the confederate government until April, 1864, so that Bailey in making his sales could not have acted under any duress.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if we retain this claim in the bill, we reverse the ruling of the commissioners of claims and set a precedent which in my judgment will be unjust to the Government and which we ought not to adopt.

I now yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. HAZELTON.]

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I desire the attention of the House for a very few minutes in replying to the remarks of the chairman of the Committee on War Claims [Mr. LAWRENCE] in regard to the one question made in this case; and that is as to the loyalty of this claimant—for that, as I understand, is the only question raised by the chairman of the committee, and the only ground upon which it is sought to strike this claim from the bill.

If I believed with the chairman of the committee that this claimant was disloyal—if I believed his loyalty to be tainted in any degree—I should join with the chairman in the effort which he has made to have this claim stricken out. I may say here that after this question was raised the case was referred to me as a member of the committee to investigate the loyalty of the claimant and report the facts to the committee. I carefully looked through the testimony; I examined the proof bearing upon the loyalty of General Bailey; and I desire to say here that I was compelled to come to the conclusion (and I do not see how any gentleman upon an examination of all the proofs can come to any other conclusion) that General Bailey was not only loyal, but was so known and regarded by all persons who were cognizant of his standing during the war of the rebellion.

Before I sit down I shall ask the House to listen to some of the proofs bearing upon this question. But right here I want to call attention to the fact that the only ground upon which the commissioners make their special or supplemental report, which has just been read, is that certain proof of disloyalty was discovered in the records in the Treasury Department and examined subsequently to the original report. My attention has been called to that evidence; and it appears that substantially the same evidence was before the commissioners when they made their original report. It appears further by the report of the commissioners which has been read that the loyalty of General Bailey being challenged, a special inquiry was instituted, special agents of the Government were sent upon the ground to gather testimony bearing upon the point, and after all the testimony was collected, submitted to the commissioners, and examined by them, they came to the conclusion that his loyalty was established beyond a doubt; and upon that conclusion they based their first report.

The only ground upon which they are now led to doubt the correctness of their first conclusion is that they were informed that he sold five hundred bales of cotton to the confederate government. But he disclosed and explained that fact to the commissioners upon his first examination; and an investigation of his testimony submitted to the commission establishes the truth of what I assert; so that no more information was in point of fact before the commissioners when the second report was sent to the committee than was before them when they framed and prepared their first report and decision in this case.

I desire to say one thing further before asking the reading of these letters. It appears to me in the very nature of things a moral impossibility that a man so conspicuous in his own community, who had a large circle or friends and acquaintances, who was one of the prominent planters in Northern Louisiana, could be recognized by generals and other officers commanding the Federal armies there as a thoroughly devoted, loyal man, as a man occupying no doubtful position, while in point of fact he was a disloyal man and in sympathy with the confederate government. Every intelligent person understands that in times of war the lines between the friends of the government and those who are arrayed against it are drawn so distinctly that the attitude of those on the one side of the line and on the other is well defined and well understood. The neighbors and acquaintances cannot help knowing the attitude and standing which every prominent man occupies. Such persons cannot conceal their opinions if they desire. Their sympathies and sentiments "will out." In this case the opinions and sentiments of the claimant were outspoken, never concealed, and as well understood as those of any man within the confederate lines. So that it is not an easy thing to have a difference of opinion in regard to this question.

Now, so far as the attitude of General Bailey was concerned, these letters, which I shall ask to have read, conclusively establish the fact that every loyal, every Union officer, every general in command of the Union forces in that region of the country, understood his position, and recognized him as precisely loyal as themselves. He had at one time a permit, an authority from the Union general in command, to enter within the Federal lines, and he has several letters which were given to him by Generals Sherman, Sheridan, Canby, Howard, and others, recognizing him as a loyal citizen, and those letters were presented to the commissioners and examined by them.

In addition to that, as I have already said, agents of the Government were sent upon the ground authorized to make a thorough investigation in the interest of the Government, and, to protect the Treasury from impositions, to ascertain what the proofs were in regard to his status during the war, and these agents reported in regard to his loyalty, and those reports were so satisfactory the commissioners said they had no doubt whatever in regard to the fact.

In addition to this, the question of loyalty has been previously submitted to at least one or two committees of the Senate and the House, and they have reported favorably upon it. And it seems to me it is too late to raise a question of this character with all these proofs before us, proofs which are in the possession of the House, and some of which have been read, and others of which I propose to have read in the hearing of the House.

I will now ask the Clerk to read, in the first place, this letter from General Sherman.

The Clerk read as follows:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., November 6, 1873.

DEAR SIR: General Bailey, of Rapides Parish, Louisiana, personally known to me before the war, and universally recognized as a Union man throughout the period of hostilities, appeals to me personally to befriend him with you in the matter of a claim for cotton which has been formally presented for your adjudication.

In my official capacity I cannot meddle with your business; but you may remember that in 1861 I was a resident of Rapides Parish, Louisiana, where I became acquainted with the family of General Bailey, for whom I still retain a strong personal regard, and I cannot well refuse my friendly offices in his behalf, and therefore without committing myself to the merits of his case, I merely beg to ask for him that courteous notice to which he seems entitled.

With great respect, I am yours, truly,

W. T. SHERMAN, General.

Hon. WILLIAM A. RICHARDSON,
Secretary United States Treasury.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I ask the Clerk now to read letters from Generals Sheridan and Canby, and Governor Wells.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL,
New York, November 1, 1866.

GENERAL: Allow me to introduce to you Mr. Bailey, who has large planting interests in Louisiana and who returns to the South in a few days.

Mr. Bailey will present this to you, and I commend him to your polite consideration.

I am, general, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Major-General United States Army.

J. A. MOWER,
Brevet Major-General Commanding.

STATE OF LOUISIANA, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
New Orleans, October 18, 1865.

To the President:

I take pleasure in presenting to you an old friend and neighbor of mine in the person of General Bailey, from the parish of Rapides in our State. I can recommend him to you as a man of enlarged intelligence, influence, and a firm and steadfast friend of the Union, who has rendered important services in restoring civil government in our State. Any assistance you can render him in expediting the business on which he visits the capital, will be conferred on a worthy gentleman, and will be regarded as a favor by your very obedient servant,

J. MADISON WELLS,
Governor, &c.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF LOUISIANA,
New Orleans, Louisiana, October 18, 1865.

SIR: Permit me to introduce and commend to your consideration the bearer of this note, General William Bailey, of Northwestern Louisiana, who leaves this evening for the purpose of visiting Washington.

This gentleman has been a great sufferer in person and in property by the rebels because he was a Unionist, and I am sorry to say by our own troops, although he was protected by a safeguard.

There is no relief for him, and I have told him that I do not think there is any in the War Department, but that Congress would provide for cases of this kind.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ED. R. S. CANBY,
Major-General Commanding.

Hon. E. M. STANTON,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I have other letters here equally conclusive which I will not detain the House by reading. I will say further, before taking my seat, not only did he exhibit the ordinary tokens and evidences of loyalty to the Government, but he was absolutely arrested and cast into prison by the confederate authorities on account of his loyalty. He was treated as a loyal man all the way through the war by the confederates, and recognized as a loyal man by every general of the Federal armies having control in that region of country, and after a thorough investigation was adjudged to be loyal by the commissioners of the southern claims commission. It seems to me that there is no room for a doubt, or the possibility of the shadow of a doubt, of his acknowledged and genuine loyalty and devotion to the Government. I believe if the House understands the facts in regard to this case it will not strike this claim from the general bill.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I now yield for five minutes to my colleague on the committee, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask order may be kept for five minutes, as that is all the time I have; and I appeal to the House to hear what I have to say, though it may not be necessary after what has been so well said by my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. HAZELTON.] I ask the House to mark right here, that this motion to strike out General Bailey's claim comes from our friend, the chairman, against the action of the War Claims Committee after full consideration, which was against striking out this claim.

This question of loyalty after it had been brought before the committee was referred to my colleague from Wisconsin, and the papers were thoroughly examined by him. I also took occasion to examine them, though the case was not referred to me. And if there is a clear case of loyalty proved of any man living in the South during the war, these papers ought to prove it in the case of General Bailey. We have here the testimony of General Banks, General Sherman, General Canby, General Howard, the governor of Louisiana, and several others of high rank, all testifying to his loyalty. And now the chairman of the committee moves to strike out this item because a letter was found in the rebel archives, so called, showing that he sold some cotton to the confederates at a certain period of the war. Certainly he did, and he sold it because he was compelled to do so rather than have it taken or destroyed without compensation.

This is brought up at the last moment as something new, when, turning to the evidence, we find that Bailey himself in his first hearing before the southern claims commission admitted the whole fact and showed why he did it, and the reasons he gave were entirely satisfactory to the commission. He also stated the same thing before a military commission at New Orleans, and they unanimously found him loyal and found that there was a sufficient reason for his selling that cotton to the confederate government at that time.

And now one word more, and I think it should be enough to satisfy the House of the justice of this case. This claim was in the bill reported last Congress and passed the House. It went to the Senate and in the closing hours of the session, a question of loyalty being made by some one, this item was struck out on the motion of the chairman of the committee for the purpose of having the claim sent back to the southern claims commission for inquiry into his loyalty. It was struck out in the Senate on an ex parte statement and went back to the claims commission. And now it comes back to us this session, again reported and recommended by the southern claims commission. Yet the chairman of the committee moves again to strike it out, simply because a letter has been found among the so-called southern archives saying that this man sold some cotton to the confederate authorities, although he has always admitted that he did and although his loyalty is admitted by men such as those whose names I have mentioned.

General Bailey owned two plantations before the war, one in Louisiana and one in Virginia. And to show what is the character of the man, I may state that before the war he emancipated every slave he had in Virginia, where the laws authorized him to do so, and did not do it in Louisiana only because the laws did not authorize him to do it there. This is the man whose claim you are asked to reject on the ground of disloyalty.

Now, if the amendment of the chairman of the committee prevails, this man, whose loyalty is testified to by the ablest and best generals who knew him during the war, and by the then governor of Louisiana, and who has been found to be loyal by the southern claims commission, is to have his claim thrown out on account of disloyalty because of a letter found in the rebel archives, when the fact of his having sold the cotton has been admitted from beginning to end, and the southern claims commission passed his claim with that evidence before them. I trust the House will, in this matter, stand by the Committee on War Claims, which is none too liberal in such cases, as the House has found out before this time, and will refuse to strike out this item in the bill upon the pretense of disloyalty so miserably sustained on the evidence in this case.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I yield three minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HARRIS.]

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am one of the sub-committee of the Committee on War Claims which examined this bill. I undertook that duty in the spirit of the law, which is to allow to all persons who were loyal compensation for the supplies they furnished to the Union Army. I examined this case thoroughly, and I believe that if any man on earth could prove his loyalty to the cause of the Union Mr. Bailey did prove it. While his neighbors all around him on the advance of the Union Army, according to the testimony in this case, not ex parte, but taken with both sides present, fled with all they could take with them, Mr. Bailey remained at home and placed at the disposal of the Union Army his granaries, his corn-house, fodder, hay-stacks, and produce, and did not remove one particle; in consequence of which, when the opportunity offered, he was arrested by the confederates and imprisoned. Every article he had on his place he gave for the supply of the horses and soldiers of the Union Army with an open hand and a free heart.

Now my friend, the chairman of the committee, because some papers were found in regard to a transaction of which Mr. Bailey spoke before he knew they would be found and explained before they were found, desires to defeat him in his just claim against the Government. The testimony is to the effect that he furnished $120,000 worth of supplies to the Union Army, but the bill gives him only $45,000. Now from the stand-point that we are to pay Union men for supplies furnished, I say it would be an act of injustice, ingratitude, and hardship unwarranted by the facts of the case to throw out this claim. Driven from his home and imprisoned by the confederates, to be treated now in this way by his own friends would make him to be looked upon as an alien, a man despised by both sides and respected by none. I think it is the bounden duty of those who entertain the opinion that this law should be executed to allow this claim of a man whose loyalty is proven by the whole testimony in the case, as admitted by the military court in the South and by the southern claims commission. There is not one scintilla of proof to show that he was anything else but loyal.

General Bailey, in order to keep his cotton from being burned or impressed, sold enough of it to pay his taxes and nothing more. For that he is called disloyal by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] and his claim is to be thrown out by this House. I hope the House will do no such thing.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I have no feeling in this matter; I only desire to do what I suppose to be my duty. If I could believe that General Baily was a loyal man I would not say one word in favor of striking out this appropriation for his benefit. But I must be allowed to express my surprise at some things that have been said here in his behalf. My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. HAZELTON] says that when the commissioners allowed this claim in their second annual report they had before them all the evidence which they now have.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the chairman of the committee allow me to interrupt him for a moment? It is said by the supplemental report of the commissioners of claims that General Bailey sold his cotton to his son-in-law, McKee, from which the gentleman from Ohio draws the inference that there was an understanding between McKee, the confederate impressment officer, and General Bailey. The gentleman should state the fact at the time of the sale or impressment McKee was not the son-in-law of Bailey, and did not become so until nearly two years after; that Bailey refused to speak to McKee for a long period in consequence of the impressment of his cotton, and instead of their bearing the ordinary relations of father and son-in-law they were enemies. This disagreement continued between them because one was a confederate and the other was a Union man. The result was that McKee impressed Bailey's cotton; bad feeling ensued between them, and then McKee impressed Bailey's daughter.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I was replying to the remarks of my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. HAZELTON.] I hope I shall have the attention of the House, because this is a question of importance. Let me remind the House that since the commissioners of claims made their report they took the testimony of Governor Wells on the 26th of March, 1874, and he completely rebuts the claim which Mr. Bailey had set up before the commissioners that he sold this cotton under coercion. Governor Wells says that he resided in the same parish with General Bailey, as did Whitty M. Sasser and Dr. James B. Sullivan; that the confederates did not seize any cotton in that parish until April, 1864. This man Bailey voluntarily sold his cotton in November, 1862, when the confederates had not made a single seizure there, and never did make any until April, 1864, and then only on the approach of the Union Army. I have here the testimony of Governor Wells, and it shows these facts.

It further appears, as I have already stated, that Bailey was the first man in that parish who sold his cotton to the confederate government. My friend from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] says that he sold only enough to pay his taxes. Did it require $54,000 to pay his taxes? He contributed $54,000 of his means in cotton to the confederate treasury to prosecute the war against us; and now we are asked to believe that a man who did this voluntarily was loyal to this Government. If that be so, then I pray you who is disloyal?

My friend from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] says that "the chairman of the Committee on War Claims" asks this House to reject this claim because of a letter found in the rebel archives. I ask this House to reject it upon the testimony of Governor Wells, given before the commissioners of claims on the 26th of March, not sixty days ago. It is evidence which the commissioners of claims did not have when they made their original report. My friend from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] and my friend from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] say that "the chairman of the Committee on War Claims" asks that this claim shall be stricken out; and one of them appeals to this House to stand by the Committee on War Claims. It is, perhaps, not very important, but it is nevertheless true, that this claim passed the committee by a bare majority at a special meeting called without the knowledge of the chairman, and when all the members were not present. I do not complain of that, however, because I was present. I have thoroughly examined this claim, and in my judgment, if the House shall pay it, then every man, however much he may have contributed to aid the rebel cause, ought to be paid for property taken under similar circumstances.

The question was then taken upon the amendment to strike out these words: "to William Bailey, $45,161.72;" and upon a division there were ayes 17, noes not counted.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. LAWRENCE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, but 11 voting in the affirmative, not one-fifth.

The amendment accordingly was not agreed to.

The next question was upon the amendment moved by Mr. SENER, to insert the following:

To the public-school trustees of Manassas for the material of the Bradley school-house and church, $450, to be paid on the basis of a compromise between the school and church trustees on file in the case.

Mr. POLAND. Is this a claim that has been reported by the commissioners of claims?

Mr. SENER. I will explain it in a few words. This claim was reported by the commissioners of claims at the last session of the last Congress in the following words:

To the trustees of the Bradley school-house at Manassas, $450.

It was passed by this House and sent to the Senate. When it reached that body there was a contest as to who should have it, whether the Presbyterian church or the public-school trustees, and it was stricken out of the bill. The two claimants to this fund have now settled their dispute, and there can be no objection to inserting the claim in this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The substitute, as amended, was adopted, and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LAWRENCE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I move that the rules be suspended and the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HOSKINS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calender. This being the fourth Friday in the month is objection day. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Private Calendar.

ROBERT SUTHERLAND.

The first bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 958) for the relief of Robert Sutherland.

The bill was read. It directs the Paymaster-General of the Army to pay to Robert Sutherland, late second lieutenant Fourth Arkansas Cavalry Volunteers, out of any money appropriated, or that may hereafter be appropriated, for the pay of the Army, the full pay and emoluments of a second lieutenant of cavalry, from the 30th day of June to the 14th of September, 1865.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the reports will be read in each case without being specially called for.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 958) for the relief of Robert Sutherland, having had the same under consideration, respectfully submit the following report:

This officer was a second lieutenant of the Fourth Regiment Arkansas Cavalry. On the 13th of March, 1865, he was detailed as aid-de-camp to General West, commanding the cavalry division of the Seventh Army Corps, and continued to serve on such duty until the 6th of September, 1865. The command to which he was thus attached was serving far in the interior of Texas, where this officer had no knowledge of or communication with his regiment, which was mustered out of service at Little Rock, Arkansas, on June 30, 1865. This officer asks pay from that date until September 14, 1865, which the Department refuses, because of an order that a regimental officer will be considered as mustered out at the same time and place as the command, and from the further declaration that this officer failed to forward his personal reports to the War Department.

This officer swears that he did, on the 1st of every month, regularly forward his personal reports as required by the regulations. There is no doubt that the Government had the benefit of his services until September 6, 1865, and that he had no knowledge of the muster-out of his regiment.

The committee therefore amend the bill by striking out the word "fourteenth," in the eighth and ninth lines, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "sixth," and as so amended recommend that the bill do pass.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

No objection being made, the bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

ALFRED FRY.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1108) for the relief of Alfred Fry.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money appropriated, or hereafter to be appropriated, for the payment of the Army, to Alfred Fry, late captain in the Seventy-third Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, the pay and emoluments of a captain of infantry from the 30th day of August, 1863, the date of his commission, to the 17th day of May, 1865, the date that said Fry was mustered as captain, as if he had been mustered as captain on the date of his commission, first deducting whatever sum may have been paid to him as lieutenant during the period for which pay is hereby allowed as captain.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1108) for the relief of Captain Alfred Fry, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

Immediately subsequent to the 19th of January, 1863, this officer was serving as first lieutenant in command of Company A, Seventy-third Regiment Indiana Volunteers, the captain of the company having resigned.

On or about April 25 of the same year, the colonel of that regiment recommended claimant to the governor of Indiana to be commissioned as captain. He was so promoted, but the commission was not issued until August 20, 1863. Prior to that date, however, this officer, with his company, was captured by the enemy.

Captain Fry was held as a prisoner of war at Richmond, Macon, Charleston, Columbia, and Raleigh, and was not released until about May 1, 1865. Soon as exchanged he rejoined his regiment, still in the field, and was mustered as captain May 17, 1865. He asks the additional pay as captain over that of first lieutenant from the date of the actual issuing of the commission to that of actual muster.

The committee are satisfied that during the whole time for which the pay is claimed there was a vacancy existing into which this officer could have been mustered, and therefore that he is one of the class which was probably intended to be reached by the joint resolution of July 11, 1870.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

ISAAC RISEDEN.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3002) for the relief of Isaac Riseden, late a first lieutenant of the Eleventh Tennessee Cavalry.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Paymaster-General of the Army, out of any money appropriated for the pay of the Army, to pay to Isaac Riseden, late an acting lieutenant of Company E, Eleventh Tennessee Cavalry, the pay and allowances of a first lieutenant of cavalry, from the 15th day of August, 1863, to the 10th day of March, 1865, after deducting therefrom any sum which he may have received for his services during said time.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a petition of Isaac Riseden, asking compensation for services as lieutenant of Company E, Eleventh Tennessee Cavalry, respectfully submit the following report:

The proof on file shows that Isaac Riseden was commissioned by Andrew Johnson, then military governor of Tennessee, to be a first lieutenant of Company E, Eleventh Tennessee Cavalry, to date from the 15th of August, 1863; that under said commission Lieutenant Riseden performed all the duties as a faithful, brave, and efficient officer of said regiment. Owing to the fact that at the time said commission was issued the regiment was in active service in the field, and no mustering officer with the command, Lieutenant Riseden was not mustered, and on the 22d of February, following, his regiment was captured at Wireman's Mills, Virginia. He was kept in prison at Bristol, Tennessee, Libby prison, Richmond, Virginia, Macon, Georgia, Savannah, Georgia, Charleston, South Carolina, Columbia, South Carolina, Charlotte, North Carolina, until the 10th day of March, 1865, when he was exchanged, and upon application then to be mustered was informed that owing to casualties in his company he could not be mustered.

The committee therefore report favorably upon said petition and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

GEORGE A. ARMES.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. No. 249) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to give to George A. Armes, late captain Tenth United States Cavalry, an honorable discharge, to date the 7th day of June, 1870.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to give to George A. Armes, late captain Tenth United States Cavalry, and brevet major United States Army, an honorable discharge from the service of the United States, to date June 7, 1870; and provides that Armes be paid the same pay and allowances as if he had been discharged under the provisions of the third section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1871, and for other purposes," approved July 15, 1870.

The report of the Senate committee was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 249) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to give to George A. Armes, late captain Tenth United States Cavalry, an honorable discharge, to date June 7, 1870, having considered the same, beg leave to submit the following report:

It appears that the charges preferred against Captain Armes were four in number. Upon the first a nolle prosequi was entered; upon the third and fourth he was found not guilty; and upon the second charge, "conduct unbecoming an officer and gentleman," he was found guilty, and sentenced to be dismissed the service. These charges were preferred by Captain George W. Graham, against whom Captain Armes had previously preferred charges, upon which Graham was afterward tried, found guilty, and sentenced to be dismissed the service, fined, and imprisoned in a penitentiary; and he is now in the penitentiary for highway robbery. It also appears that a considerable portion of the important testimony which was relied on was given by Captain Charles G. Cox, against whom Captain Armes had previously preferred charges, upon which, within two months thereafter, he (Cox) was dismissed the service, cashiered, and sentenced to be fined and imprisoned in a penitentiary. His evidence was contradicted point blank by another witness, and a portion of his testimony is conclusively shown to have been false.

There is nothing in the record, so far as can be judged from a careful examination thereof, that, according to military usage, justifies the sentence that was imposed by the court-martial.

Your committee are well satisfied that the charges were preferred through motives of jealousy and revenge, and the proceedings show that there was a determination on the part of those officers who instigated the prosecution to have Armes dismissed at any cost.

It has been shown beyond a doubt that Captain Armes was a brave and gallant officer. He was mentioned in general orders by General Philip St. George Cooke, United States Army, and congratulated by letter by Major-General Winfield S. Hancock, and recommended for promotion for energy and gallant and meritorious conduct on several occasions, both during the rebellion and in campaigns against the Indians, and was promoted captain from a second lieutenant, and made a major by brevet.

General C. C. Augur, General Nelson A. Miles, General N. B. Buford, General B. H. Grierson, and a number of other Army officers, bear testimony to the high character and efficiency of Captain Armes.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

GEORGE A. BACON.

The next bill on the Private Calender was the bill (H. R. No. 3003) for the relief of George A. Bacon.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to pay to George A. Bacon, late lieutenant-colonel of the Fifteenth Illinois Cavalry, out of any money appropriated, or which may hereafter be appropriated, for the pay of the Army, a sum equal to the pay and emoluments of a lieutenant-colonel of cavalry from the 31st day of December, 1862, to the 3d day of April, 1863, deducting whatever pay he may have received for that period.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2837) for the relief of George A. Bacon, present the following report:

That prior to the 25th day of December, 1862, the said George A. Bacon was lieutenant-colonel of the Thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and that he resigned that position to accept the lieutenant-colonelcy of the Fifteenth Illinois Cavalry Regiment, then about to be organized; that on the said 25th day of December, 1862, said cavalry regiment was organized, and by an order of Governor Yates, bearing date that day, the field officers were appointed, the said Bacon being by said order appointed lieutenant-colonel of said cavalry regiment to take rank from said last-named day. On the 31st of December, 1862, said Bacon was commissioned as lieutenant-colonel of said cavalry regiment. Owing to orders from the War Department, officers resigning a command in one regiment could not be mustered in another without special permission from that Department, and such permission was not granted in the case of Colonel Bacon until the 10th day of April, 1863.

April 3, 1863, said Bacon was commissioned as colonel of said cavalry regiment. May 3, 1863, he was mustered in as colonel, to date from April 3, 1863, the date of his commission.

Your committee find from the evidence that said Bacon was on duty and under orders as lieutenant-colonel of said cavalry regiment from the 31st day of December, 1862, to the said 3d day of April, 1863, the date of his commission as colonel; and that he served during that period with no pay or emoluments, and that he was not mustered in on his commission as lieutenant-colonel.

The committee, therefore, report back said bill, with a substitute providing for the payment to said Bacon of the pay and emoluments of a lieutenant-colonel of cavalry from the 31st day of December, 1862, to the 3d day of April, 1863, and recommend its passage.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN C. GRIFFIN.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3004) for the relief of John C. Griffin, late second lieutenant Third Regiment East Tennessee Volunteers.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John C. Griffin, late a second lieutenant Third Regiment East Tennessee Volunteers, the pay of a second lieutenant from February 23, 1863, to April 11, 1863, after deducting therefrom any pay and allowances he may have already received during that time.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Second Lieutenant John C. Griffin, Company E, Third Regiment East Tennessee Volunteers, submit the following report:

The committee find the following facts: That John C. Griffin was commissioned second lieutenant in Company E, Third Regiment East Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, on the 23d February, 1863, and that he performed the duties of his office from the date of his commission to the date of his muster into service, and the committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

MARY B. BELFIELD.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3005) for the relief of the heirs of Mary B. Belfield, of Virginia.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $173.33 to the heirs of Mary B. Belfield, of Virginia.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812 report, in the case of the heirs of Mary B. Belfield, petition for relief, that the said Mary B. Belfield was the widow of Major John W. Belfield, of Colonel Branham's Regiment Forty-first Virginia Militia, in the war of 1812. She was placed on the pension-rolls under act of February 14, 1871, and certificate No. 4530 was issued to her. Certificate of payment at the rate of eight dollars per month was issued, from the 14th of February, 1871, to the 4th of December, 1872, amounting to $173.33. The certificate was erroneously made out to Mary R., instead of Mary B. Belfield. It was sent back for correction, and was changed by the Secretary of the Interior. Before the pension was paid said Mary B. died. The committee recommend that the sum of $173.33 be paid to the heirs by the Secretary of the Treasury.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

IRA FOSTER.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2532) granting a pension to Ira Foster.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Ira Foster, as a private in the war of 1812, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, in considering House bill No. 2532 and the accompanying papers, find that Ira Foster claims to have been a soldier (a fifer) in Captain Hindman's company, United States Artillery, in the war of 1812. The records of the War Department furnish no information on the subject, nor does the applicant furnish evidence by any of his comrades, but he does furnish testimony by parties not in the service as to his identity and his service as fifer with a recruiting squad of said company, and of his honorable discharge from said command. The committee think the testimony sufficient to establish the service, and recommend the passage of the bill.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

CORDELIA WILKINS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3007) granting a pension to Cordelia Wilkins.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension-laws, the name of Cordelia Wilkins, stepmother of Willard F. Wilkins, Company B, Sixth New Hampshire Volunteers, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Cordelia Wilkins, asking that a pension be granted her as step-mother of Willard F. Wilkins, Company B, Sixth New Hampshire Volunteers, submit the following report:

The petitioner was married to Almon D. Wilkins December 17, 1848, at which time her step-son was but two years old. The evidence presented is conclusive that the petitioner performed all the duties of a mother to a son until the above soldier entered the service June 2, 1864. This soldier was taken prisoner September 27, 1864, at Petersburgh, Virginia, and returned to Annapolis, Maryland, February 7, 1865, and died at Saint John's Hospital, February 19, 1865 of chronic diarrhœa.

The step-mother applied for a pension, but her claim was rejected because she was not the natural mother of the soldier. The father then applied and received a pension up to the time of his death, since which time the family ceased to receive its benefits.

By the evidence presented in this case, it is shown beyond any doubt that the petitioner is poor and entirely dependent upon her own labor and the charity of friends for support. For twelve years prior to his death her husband was unable to perform any labor, and during seven years of that time was confined to his bed, needing and receiving the constant care and attention of the petitioner, who also had to provide for the wants of the family.

The evidence also shows that the deceased soldier, though young, did contribute toward the support of the family prior to his enlistment; and during his service sent home $300, which was used for the support of the family, as were also the back-pay and bounty due the soldier at the time of his death.

The committee, after examining the case, believe the claim of the petitioner to be a meritorious one and entitled to a pension, and therefore report favorably, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill for her relief.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN J. BOTTGAR.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3008) granting a pension to John J. Bottgar.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John J. Bottgar, late a private in Company C, Sixteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of John J. Bottgar, late a private in Company C, Sixteenth Iowa Volunteers, having had the same under consideration, report:

That three examining surgeons of the Pension Office certify that the applicant is suffering from a disability other than that on account of which he claims pension. The difficulty seems to have been that the claimant did not correctly set forth in his application the disease which actually exists. Your committee are of the opinion that the disease which is certified as existing was contracted in the service, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

MICHAEL BANNON.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3009) for the relief of Michael Bannon, of Dayton, Ohio.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Michael Bannon, late a private in Company F, Ninety-seventh Illinois Infantry; to take effect from and after the passage of the act.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition for a pension of Michael Bannon, of Dayton, Ohio, have examined the same, and beg leave to report:

That Michael Bannon enlisted January, 1863, in Company F, Ninety-seventh Illinois Infantry, and was discharged May 22, 1865, on telegraphic order from the War Department, from the hospital in New Orleans, from October 5, 1864. That the pension was not allowed by the Pension Office, for the reason that the disability was not shown to be due to the service; that his commanding officer, Captain Andrew Ray, testifies that Bannon was taken sick at Morganza Bend, in Louisiana; that his disease was brought on by exposure incident to camp life, and that, so far as affiant knows, the said Bannon was in sound bodily health at the time of enlistment; that his neighbors testify that they were well acquainted with him; that he was in sound bodily health when he enlisted; that Dr. G. W. Bassett testifies that he treated petitioner from the time when he left the Army, for the diseases from which he now suffers, till the time when he entered the military asylum; and that A. S. Dunlop and J. S. Beck, examining surgeons for the Pension Office, certify to petitioner's total disability, and that they believe the disability originated in the line of duty.

Your committee, therefore, believe that this case is established beyond any reasonable doubt, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN DOWNEY.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3010) for the relief of John Downey,

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Downey, late a private in Company D, One hundred and forty-fifth New York Volunteers, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition for a pension to John Downey, private Company D, One hundred and forty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers, have examined the same, and beg leave to report:

That said Downey enlisted August 26, 1862, and was discharged November 3, 1864, on account of loss of left arm; that this soldier was sent to hospital on account of injury to left eye; that while in hospital the surgeon of the hospital sent Downey home to vote; that while on the way home he fell, and the cars passed over his arm, causing amputation; that the Commissioner of Pensions stated, in a letter to Downey, "That while the evidence filed in the case shows that the disability was not incurred while strictly in the line of duty, a brief statement of the facts in the case, in a petition to Congress, might induce them to grant you some relief." That Colonel E. Livingston Price, of the One hundred and forty-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers, testifies that Downey is a reliable man, was a brave soldier, and that he believes the accident happened through no fault or negligence on the part of Downey, but while he was on furlough, lawfully issued, and in the line of his duty and in the service of the United States; and that E. F. Brown, deputy governor of the National Military Asylum, at Dayton, Ohio, states that he thinks "Congress would be doing only justice in bestowing a pension."

In view of all these facts your committee believe that the applicant should receive a pension, and we therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

FANNY NEWCOMB.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was a bill (S. No. 540) granting a pension to Fanny Newcomb, mother of Irenus Newcomb, late of Company H, Sixth Regiment Vermont Volunteers.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension-laws, the name of Fanny Newcomb, mother of Irenus Newcomb, late of Company H, of the Sixth Regiment of Vermont Volunteers, and that she be allowed a pension.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JEMIMA MAXWELL

The next bill on the Private Calendar was a bill (S. No. 477) granting a pension to Jemima Maxwell.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jemima Maxwell, widow of John Maxwell, deceased, late of Company D, Fifth Missouri State Militia.

The report was read, as follows:

That John Maxwell was a private in Company D, Fifth Regiment Missouri State Militia, six-months' volunteers; that he enlisted as a soldier on the 24th day of October, 1861, and served continuously until the 3d day of January, 1862, when he died in hospital in Louisiana, Missouri, of pneumonia. The evidence clearly shows that Jemima Maxwell was legally married to and is the surviving widow of John Maxwell; that on the 14th of April, 1866, she made application in due form for a pension, under the act of July, 1862, which was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions because at that time the laws did not recognize the troops with which he was serving as a part of the United States forces. Her application was again renewed after the law of March 3, 1873, went into operation, and was again rejected for the reason as stated in the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions, of date February 6, 1874, addressed to the Committee on Pensions, and herewith filed, the foregoing facts being admitted. The only points to be established are, was John Maxwell a sound and healthy man when he entered the service, and did he die of disease contracted in the service? Upon these two points the sworn evidence of William G. Douglass, who was captain of the company in which John Maxwell enlisted, is, that while Maxwell was in the line of his duty, on the march from Troy, Lincoln County, to Pike County, in Missouri, on the 27th of December, 1861, it being a severe march, in extremely inclement weather, he was attacked with a disease resulting in pneumonia, with which he died in hospital at Louisiana, Missouri, on or about January 30, 1862; that his disability was contracted while in the service, and that his knowledge of the above facts was obtained while he was in command of the company.

Frederick Grable testifies under oath, May 15, 1867, that he was for thirty years intimately acquainted with John Maxwell; that at the time of his enlistment, as well as before, he was a sound, able-bodied man; that he was not at the time of his enlistment affected with the disease of which he died, nor at any time during their acquaintance; that he, Grable, was on such intimate terms with John Maxwell and his family that he should have known of his ill health had it existed.

Martha Grable, of the same date, testifies to all the above facts given in the affidavit of Frederick Grable. It is true there is nothing in the testimony of the two last witnesses as to the character and habits of John Maxwell, save the general statement that he was a sound, able-bodied man up to the time he entered the service. The point of his good health and entire freedom from disease at the time he entered the service, is, we think, fairly established by competent although not medical evidence; and we do not hold this, under the circumstances, to be indispensable. It seems to follow almost naturally that his death must correctly be attributable to disease contracted in the service. The declaration and petition of his widow, the affidavit of Captain Douglass, and the certificate of the adjutant-general of Missouri, all go to show, and, as we think, beyond any reasonable doubt, that Maxwell died in the service from disease contracted while in the line of his duty, and that therefore his widow, Jemima Maxwell, is entitled to pension; and we therefore respectfully report a bill for that purpose, and ask concurrence in the same.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

MRS. LETITIA CARR.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3011) granting a pension to Mrs. Letitia Carr.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Letitia Carr, mother of William Carr, late a fireman in the United States Navy, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The report was read, as follows:

The deceased William F. Carr enlisted as a sailor at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, on the 17th day of September, A. D. 1861, as a private in the United States Navy, and was placed on the United States ram Sampson, and afterward on the Lioness, doing service as one of Colonel Elliott's ram fleet, on the Mississippi River, and was assigned to duty on board said ram as a fireman.

On or about September, A. D. 1862, after about a year's service, and when stationed at or near Cairo, Illinois, the sailor was drowned. His death does not seem to have been questioned, nor the manner of it, at the time of the application of his mother for the back pay and bounty due the sailor at his death, as these were duly paid to the said mother, it being shown that his father was dead, and that he was unmarried, and consequently had no legal issue. When, however, the dependent mother, showing very clearly and fully that she was dependent on the son for support, and that he had contributed chiefly to her living before he enlisted, and that he had sent her at least $160 in money during his year's service in the Navy, made application to the Pension Bureau for a pension, she was required to show by proper evidence the time, place, and circumstances of the sailor's death, and that he was in the line of duty at the time. These facts she was and is unable to prove to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Pensions, and her application was consequently refused, and hence she comes to Congress for relief. All the facts necessary to sustain the application are made out fully and clearly, except the item as to how, when, and where the sailor met his death. It is believed, however, the proof on these points is sufficient to reasonably satisfy an impartial jury that he lost his life in the service of the country and in the line of duty.

Edwin W. Sutherland, lieutenant commanding, on board the United States ram Lioness, who knew the sailor and his family, replies to a letter of inquiry, addressed to him by Sarah, a sister of the sailor, as follows:

"UNITED STATES RAM LIONESS,
"Off Mound City, Illinois, October 7, 1862.

"SARAH: Your letter was received yesterday, and I hasten to reply. I was not on this boat while your brother was here, but was appointed to the command on the day he left. Your brother came to Cairo on the Sampson. On receipt of your letter yesterday, I went to Cairo and made inquiry about your brother. I understand that your brother was lost as indicated in your letter, and that his body was recovered and decently buried at Cairo."

It is true that the proof does not show affirmatively that the sailor lost his life in line of duty. But there is not a word of proof to the contrary. Why should it not be presumed that he was in line of duty at the time? For about a year he had served the country faithfully and well for anything that appears to the contrary. There is nowhere a word to be found against his good character and habits. He is doing service on the boat on the river. By some means he gets from the boat into the water and is drowned. No allegation of suicide. The presumption would surely be fair that by some means he was, while in line of duty, thrown from the boat and lost his life. His mother is needy; has received his back pay and bounty, and in the opinion of the committee the pension she asks should not be withheld from her. The records are silent on the points in doubt. But it is believed all reasonable presumptions are in her favor, and therefore the passage of the bill is recommended.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN HEDDINGER.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3012) granting a pension to John Heddinger.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Heddinger, late boatswain's mate on the United States steamship Eutaw, and that he be paid a pension to commence from the passage of the act.

The report was read, as follows:

John Heddinger entered the service of the United States at the Washington navy-yard as a boatswain's mate on or about October 14, 1862, and served in that position on the ship or boat Eutaw until about May 23, 1864, when he was discharged from the service at the hospital at Norfolk, Virginia, on surgeon's certificate of disability. It is fully proved by two of the sailor's companions, to wit, C. H. Murray and B. S. Furguson, and their testimony, again, strengthened and corroborated by I. S. Dickenson, a paymaster's clerk on board said ship Eutaw, that the said sailor, while on board the ship, engaged in his regular duties, was stricken down with rheumatism, which becoming malignant, he was sent to the hospital at Norfolk for treatment. The proof is clear that before this attack of rheumatism the sailor was strong and healthy, free from all diseases, and of good constitution, and of good habits; that from the time he was so taken down with said disease, on or about the month of March, 1864, until the present time, he has suffered greatly and continuously from said disease, and is now prostrated with the same, destitute and helpless, and supported by charity. His application for pension has been for years pending before the Pension Commisssioner, but has been delayed and baffled from year to year by a series of quibbles and mere technical objections and requirements which do not go to the merits of the claim, and which should not stand between the petitioner and justice, and finally rejected on the ground that the record did not show that the disease was contracted while in line of duty; and also on the ground that the claim was not prosecuted to final issue within five years, &c.

The proof is clear and satisfactory that the sailor regularly entered the naval service of the United States; that he served faithfully until stricken down by disease when in said service and in the line of duty; that he was regularly treated in hospital for said disease, and finally discharged for disability; and it is further fully proved that from the disease so contracted he has not recovered, but has continuously suffered to the present time. The passage of the act aforesaid is recommended by the committee.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

SAMUEL P. KEMP.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3013) granting a pension to Samuel P. Kemp.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel P. Kemp, late a private in Company I, Seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of twenty-four dollars a month from and after the passage of this act.

The report is as follows:

Samuel P. Kemp was a private in Company I, Seventh Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, was a good soldier, and did faithful service until the 9th of August, 1863. At the battle of Cedar Mountain, Virginia, he received a gunshot wound in the knee of the right leg, which led to amputation of the leg in the upper third of the thigh. The leg was literally shot off at the knee, the ball going through the knee-joint. The soldier says he remained on the field of battle from the time he was so terribly wounded until the evening of the next day without care, attention, or help, at which time he says he was picked up and placed in a box-car and taken to Alexandria, still without any attention to his wound, not even bandaging it, when amputation was performed

Dr. Wallace, a first-class physician and surgeon of New Castle, Pennsylvania, states that the soldier had his leg shot off at the knee. It was amputated at the upper third of the thigh. Sufficient flap was not allowed to make a good stump-covering for it. The end of the bone became diseased or carious, and has been discharging matter more or less ever since, frequently being very painful, and the patient suffers very much; has never been able to wear an artificial limb. He is very poor, and is compelled to try to do something for a living. Part of the time he carries his stump in a sling fastened round his neck, attaced to a ring round the stump close up to his body, and a peg attached to the ring. But with this fixture he suffers pain all the time. The soldier applied for pension under act of 3d March, 1873, allowed for loss of limb when an artificial one could not be worn, and the Commissioner of Pensions refused such allowance, on the ground that the soldier sometimes, with great pain and constant suffering, wears this fixture above referred to. It seems very fully shown that this soldier cannot use or wear, with any degree of comfort or usefulness, any artificial limb, and should, therefore, be paid a pension allowed for total loss of a limb, which cannot be in any way supplied by art.

The passage of the act prayed for is recommended.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

MRS. CAROLINE DUNCAN.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3014) to place the name of Mrs. Caroline Duncan on the pension-roll.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Caroline Duncan, as the widow of Joseph Duncan, private Company I, One hundred and thirty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, killed at Fredericksburgh, Virginia, on the 13th of December, 1862, and to pay her a pension from the passage of this act.

The report was read, as follows:

Joseph Duncan was killed at the battle of Fredericksburgh, on the 13th of December, 1862. His widow, the said Caroline, made application to the Pension Bureau for pension and obtained a certificate therefor. She continued to draw said pension until she married one Augustus Bupp, when her pension ceased. The said Bupp lived with the said Caroline as her husband for some five years, when he deserted her. She afterward, in due form and by due process of law, obtained a divorce from the bonds of matrimony with the said Bupp, and now applies to Congress to have her pension restored. The last Congress passed an act restoring pensions under similar circumstances, and after quite full discussion in the House, and by virtue of that precedent the passage of the bill is recommended.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

MARGARET A. CHANTRY.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 3015) granting a pension to Margaret A. Chantry.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret A. Chantry, widow of Colonel Alfred W. Chantry, colonel of the Sixty-sixth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that she be paid a pension from the passage of the act.

The report was read, as follows:

Margaret A. Chantry, the petitioner, made application to the Pension Bureau for pension (No. 153037) on account of the death of her husband, Colonel Alfred W. Chantry, resulting from disease contracted while in the military service of the United States and in the line of duty. She made satisfactory proof of all the facts necessary and required by the Commissioner to entitle her to pension, except this, that the said colonel was regularly mustered into service. He was in fact in the military service aforesaid, and it was very clearly proven that he contracted disease while so in the service, of which he died. He undertook to raise a regiment in Philadelphia, but was not able to bring it up to the required strength to be regularly mustered; yet his regiment was actually accepted, by telegram from the Secretary of War. The regiment was moved to Washington City, and there performed military service. The colonel, the husband of the petitioner, was fully recognized as the commander of the regiment by the general officers, and he was paid as such from July 1, 1861, until January 15, 1862, and left the service in March, 1862, laboring under disease, of which he died in 1865. During this time he contracted the disease of which he died. Of this the proof is very full. At this early stage of the war little provision had been made for the comfort of either the men or the officers. Great exposures and hardships were endured. The only difficulty in the case is, that the colonel was not regularly mustered, while in fact he was mustered by Colonel Ruff, at Philadelphia, and the War Department treated the muster as void, on account of the strength of the regiment not coming up to the standard. To avoid the technical objection that the soldier was not regularly mustered into the service, and which excludes the petitioner from relief at the Pension Bureau, she applies to Congress for a pension, where proof of actual muster has in similar cases been deemed sufficient to warrant the passage of acts granting relief under similar circumstances. The passage of this bill is therefore recommended.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

HUGH P. LYTLE.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. No. 568) granting a pension to Hugh P. Lytle, late a private in Company H, Thirty-second Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hugh P. Lytle, late a private in Company H, Thirty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

IRA DOUTHART.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3016) granting a pension to Ira Douthart.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ira Douthart, late a private in Company D, Thirteenth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The report was read, as follows:

That said Ira Douthart entered the service of the United States on the 10th day of November, 1864, as a substitute, and served until the 21st day of July, 1865, when he was mustered out on account of expiration of term of service. He alleges sun-stroke, received on the line of march near Petersburgh, Virginia, on the 5th of May, 1865. Records of War Department show no evidence of disability.

It is shown by the affidavits of G. W. Alton and John A. Clark, comrades, that they were with claimant on the 5th May, 1865, on the march near Petersburgh, Virginia; that about one p. m. he received a sun-stroke. They remained with him until dark, and accompanied him into camp; and that he suffered greatly during the remainder of his service from the effects of the same.

Dr. J. B. Allen testifies that he was a sound man at enlistment, free from disease; that he treated him for sun-stroke from July, 1865, to the latter part of 1867.

Mark Ranney, medical superintendent of Iowa Hospital for Insane, testifies that he treated claimant from December, 1867, to July, 1868, for mania, and gives it as his opinion that it was the result of sun-stroke received in the Army in 1865; and that he has suffered greatly from said disability, and will never recover from the same. In January, 1873, he further certifies that at that time he was well mentally, but in infirm bodily health, from which he cannot probably recover, and liable at all times to a recurrence of his nervous disorder; and that he believes him to be a man in every way entitled to credit.

Dr. A. W. McClure, examining surgeon, certifies, April 8, 1870, that he finds claimant suffering from sun-stroke; that he is unable to perform mental or physical labor; and that his disability is total.

Your committee believe, from this evidence, that claimant received sun-stroke in the Army and in the line of his duty; that he is still suffering from the same and is without doubt entitled to a pension. They therefore report favorably; and recommend the passage of the accompaning bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JACOB GROSCH.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3017) granting a pension to Jacob Grosch.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension-laws, the name of John Grosch, late a private in Company B, Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The report was read, as follows:

The petitioner enlisted in Company B, Eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, August 17, 1861, and was discharged August 16, 1864, for expiration of term of service. He applied for a pension September 20, 1864, alleging disability from varicose veins. The claim not having been prosecuted to a successful issue within the time prescribed, was rejected August 12, 1871, under the provisions of section 6, act of July 4, 1864, and that no further action could be taken by the Commissioner of Pensions until a record shall have been made at the War Department, as provided in section 24, act of March 3, 1873, and that the evidence on file was not sufficient for that purpose.

As to the origin of the disease, Peter Schlosser, captain of Company B, Eighth Illinois Volunteers, testifies that the petitioner was a private in said company, and that while in the line of duty became disabled from performing military duty by reason of the veins of his left leg becoming swollen to such a degree that they became varicose.

Dr. D. H. McCord testifies that he has known the petitioner since 1856, and was his physician up to the time the petitioner entered the service, and that he was in perfect health.

R. H. Sturgess, lieutenant-colonel of the Eighth Illinois Volunteers, also testifies that when the petitioner entered the service he was a stout and able-bodied man.

A. T. Barnes, examining surgeon, in his certificate states that the petitioner is incapacitated one-fourth for obtaining his subsistence by manual labor, and that it is his belief that the disability did originate in the service and in line of duty, and that the disability is permanent.

The record in the Surgeon-General's Office shows that the petitioner was admitted to Adams general hospital, Memphis, Tennessee, January 20, 1863, for treatment of debility. Again entered Jefferson general hospital, Memphis, Tennessee, March 17, 1863, with gun-shot wound; was furloughed September 16, 1863; returned October 16, 1863. December 21, 1863, entered Adams hospital; diagnosis, catarrh; returned to duty July 20, 1864.

The committee are of the opinion that the evidence presented in this case is sufficient to establish the claim, and therefore report favorably, and recommend the passage of the accompanying substitute for H. R. No. 1842.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

JACOB PARROTT.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3018) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Parrott.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the name of Jacob Parrott, of Hardin County, Ohio, late a private in Company K, Thirty-third Ohio Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of twenty dollars a month; he, the said Jacob Parrott, first surrendering the pension certificate now issued to him to the Secretary of the Interior for concellation.

The report was read, as follows:

That in 1862 a detail was made of twenty men to go from Murfreesborough, Tennessee, to tear up the railroad track and to burn bridges between Chattanooga and Marietta, Georgia. This detail was made by order of General Mitchell, then in command of the United States Army at Murfreesborough, in order to cut off rebel communication with Chattanooga. Mr. Parrott and his comrades arrived at Marietta, Georgia, on the 10th April, 1862. The detail was so disguised that they were not recognized by the rebels, although within their lines. On the 11th April, 1862, Mr. Parrott and his comrades took the train as passengers, going north, arriving at Big Shanty about eight o'clock a. m., the usual breakfasting station. While the passengers and the employés of the company were at breakfast, Jacob Parrott and his comrades seized the locomotive, tender, and two baggage-cars and fled with great rapidity. They ran the locomotive one hundred miles before it was captured, and were within eight miles of Chattanooga when they were captured, and it is alleged by Parrott that they would not have been captured had not fuel and water given out on the locomotive. Mr. Parrott states that when he was captured by the enemy he was hit one hundred lashes upon his bare back by his captors with a "dried bull's penis" to force him to reveal the nature and object of his mission, and after the whipping he was placed in the most loathsome prisons, without medical aid, for eleven months. Mr. Parrott refused to make the disclosures. After being returned to the Federal lines he was given a pension of eight dollars per month upon a surgeon's certificate of total disability arising from inhuman treatment. Mr. Parrott was commissioned as second lieutenant of Company K, Thirty-third Ohio Regiment, to date from May 3, 1863. Mr. Parrott now asks an increase of pension from eight to thirty dollars per month. Dr. Phillips, examining surgeon of the Government, examined Mr. Parrott on the 4th of April, 1874, and reports that his disability is equal to a total disability from manual labor, caused by the beating upon and across his bare back with the dried penis, permanently injuring the spinal cord and spinal nerves.

Your committee recommend the increase of Mr. Parrott's pension to twenty dollars per month, in recognition of his wonderful nerve and daring spirit.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

GEORGE H. REYNOLDS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3019) granting a pension to George H. Reynolds.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George H. Reynolds, of Company ——, Twentieth Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

The report was read, as follows:

George H. Reynolds enlisted in the United States Army at Plymouth, Indiana, as a private of Company C, Twentieth Regiment of Indiana Infantry. He was mustered into the service on the 18th of July, 1861, at La Fayette, Indiana. He underwent a physical examination before he was received by the Government as a soldier. The regiment when organized was ordered to Camp Belger, near Baltimore, Maryland. In the latter part of August, 1861, "while assisting to unload a train of cars laden with Government stores," by order of his superiors, he was ruptured by a barrel of pork falling on him and knocking him down an embankment twenty feet high. The rupture was and is serious, pronounced by Dr. Richmond, as inguinal hernia, the most aggravated form of the complaint or disease. Before the injury said Reynolds, as a citizen and soldier, had been able to perform hard manual labor; so say Dr. Richmond, his family and personal physician from 1856; Hiram C. Wright, who has known him for eighteen years; David Hull, who has known him since 1857; Samuel W. Miller, who has known him for seventeen years, and others, men of good character, deposing under the obligations of their oaths; and the same facts are sworn to by his comrades in arms, William Stickney and Peter Simon Stickney. William Babington, captain of the company to which Reynolds belonged, states in his affidavit that before the injury Reynolds "was stout and healthy, and performed his duties with alacrity and apparent ease," but not so after the rupture.

Said George H. Reynolds applied for a pension on the 7th day of June, 1867, because of the rupture, as above stated.

The application was refused January 31, 1868, on the ground that the rupture or disability existed prior to enlistment, the evidence being the cause of his discharge from the service, as stated in his discharge, dated November 19, 1861, to wit; "on account of a rupture of old standing." Is that so? The certificate of discharge is the only evidence of that alleged fact. It is the ex parte statement of unsworn men, gotten up and manipulated by Lieutenant Castleman, a bitter opponent of this humble soldier, and a man so far forgetful of his position as commanding officer of the company to which Mr. Reynolds belonged as to show on all occasions his dislike to such soldier. Your committee charge that either the allegation in the discharge is false, or that the sworn statements of Reynolds himself, Dr. Richmond, Hiram C. Wright, David Hull, Samuel W. Miller, William Stickney, Peter Simon Stickney, and William Babington, are untrue; they all say he was a stout and healthy man prior to his injury. David Hull says he roomed and slept with him prior to his enlistment, and never heard of an existing rupture. Hiram Wright says he has seen him stripped naked prior to enlistment, and never saw any rupture, or evidences of it. Wright, Miller, Hull, Stickneys, all say they have grubbed, sawed, and performed hard labor with him for years, and never heard him complain of a rupture. The fact that he was mustered into the service is prima facie evidence that he was sound at that time. There is no evasion of this fact. When Lieutenant Castleman handed Mr. Reynolds his discharge he remarked to him, as sworn to by Simon Peter Stickney and Reynolds himself, "Reynolds, there is your discharge," at the same time handing it to him; "now, damn you, I have got my revenge out of you. I have inserted in your discharge that you were disabled before you entered the service, and now you can't get any pension. I have fixed you so that you can't get a cent of pension," &c. In consideration of all the facts above stated, your committee think George H. Reynolds should be placed upon the pension-roll.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

GEORGE POMEROY.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3020) granting a pension to George Pomeroy.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension-laws, the name of George Pomeroy, late captain of Company K, Fifty-fourth Regiment Illinois Infantry, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The report was read, as follows:

George W. Pomeroy enlisted in March, 1862, at Quincy, Illinois, as a private in Company K, Fifty-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteers. In the early part of the year 1864 he was made second lieutenant; a few months afterward first lieutenant, and in 1864, captain of said company. He was a sound man at the time of his enlistment, and was an excellent soldier. In July, 1863, at Vicksburgh, Mississippi, he discovered an imperfect vision of his right eye. During that month his regiment was ordered from Vicksburgh to Helena, Arkansas. On the march from Helena to Little Rock, under General Frederick Steele, the dimness of that eye increased, and the eye became greatly inflamed. He remained on duty during the march of about one month, receiving at the same time medical treatment. That eye became totally blind by the time the army arrived at Little Rock, and still remains so. Captain Pomeroy remained in the service until the regiment was mustered out in 1865. After he was mustered out, the inflammation, although allayed in the right, extended to the left eye; and after having expended all the money he saved during the war in trying to save the vision of that (left) eye, it was done, but much impaired. He was an invalid for one year, after being mustered out, in trying to save the eye-sight of the left eye. Captain Pomeroy made application for pension in due time after his muster-out, but was barred, in the judgment of the Commissioner, before his case was reached. His disability was produced in the line of his duty, and your committee recommend the placing of George W. Pomeroy's name on the pension-roll.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

WIDOWS, ETC., OF SOLDIERS MURDERED AT CENTRALIA.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3021) granting pensions to the widows, children, dependent mothers and fathers, or orphan brothers and sisters, of those soldiers who were murdered by guerrillas at Centralia, Missouri, in 1864.

The bill was read. It extends the provisions of existing pension laws to the widows, children, dependent mothers and fathers, or orphan brothers and sisters, in the order named, of those soldiers who were murdered by guerrillas at Centralia, Missouri, in 1864, while being transported on the North Missouri Railroad. The second section of the bill declares that the provisions of the act shall be construed to extend to the widows, children, dependent mothers and fathers, or orphan brothers and sisters, in the order named, of any member of the Missouri militia who was murdered as aforesaid by guerrillas at Centralia, Missouri, in 1864.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3021) for the relief of the widows, orphans, mothers, and fathers of the soldiers killed at Centralia, Missouri, beg leave to make the following report:

On or about the 27th day of September, 1864, between twenty and thirty wounded and disabled soldiers were placed upon the cars of the North Missouri Railway, by the Quartermaster's Department, at Saint Louis, to go to their homes in Iowa and the northwest portion of Missouri. These were soldiers sent home from the armies then operating in Tennessee and Georgia. These disabled soldiers were disarmed at Saint Louis before they started home. The line of that railway was at the time infested by lawless bands of guerrillas, under a ferocious leader by the name of Bill Anderson. These wounded soldiers protested against being sent upon that road, unarmed and unguarded. Under the careless orders of some one they were placed upon the train, and at Centralia, Missouri, the train was captured. These disabled soldiers were taken off the cars by Anderson and his bloody gang placed in a line, and murdered in cold blood. The widows and orphans and the aged parents of these soldiers are the ones now asking for pensions. Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would have supposed that the widows of these soldiers would have had pensions under existing laws. If it is not explained I hope my friend from Missouri [Mr. CRITTENDEN] will consent to its standing over.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana object?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be some explanation of it.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. If objection is not made, I think the gentleman from Missouri should be allowed to explain the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is allowed.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I desire to address an inquiry to the Chair. I wish to know whether it is not competent for a gentleman to explain a bill on the Private Calendar to the committee by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not, on objection day.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that both the bill and the report be again read.

The bill and report were again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the following amendment:

In section 1, after the word "soldiers," insert the words "of the Army of the United States."

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I have no objection to that at all.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I think that should be put in.

The amendment was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill with the amendment was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

SARAH A. TIMMONS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3022) granting a pension to Sarah A. Timmons.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah A. Timmons, widow of Stephen D. Timmons, late a private in Company G, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of the act.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Sarah A. Timmons, asking a pension, submit the following report:

The committee find upon a full examination of the case that there is but one question involved in this application; that is, the cause of the death of the husband, Stephen D. Timmons, late a private in Company G, Fourth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry Volunteers, in the war of 1861-'65. There is no doubt about his enlisting on April 13, 1863, and of the faithful discharge of his duties as a soldier till his final discharge in June, 1865. It clearly appears that he was sound and healthy when he entered the service, and so continued till September, 1863, when he was severely injured in his back by being thrown from his horse, while in the line of duty, near Murfreesborough, Tennessee; that this injury so disabled him that he was sent to hospital, was never able to render service afterward, and was finally discharged in June, 1865, on surgeon's certificate of disability; that he was never able afterward to perform any but the lightest manual labor, and died in August, 1870, leaving a widow (the petitioner) and three minor children in poverty, want, and destitution.

The affidavit of his family physician and certificate of examining surgeon of 20th February, 1870, leave no doubt of his soundness when he enlisted, and that he died from the effects of the fall from his horse and of diseases contracted while in the Army and in the line of duty.

The committee are therefore of opinion that this is a meritorious case, and recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Here the committee informally rose; and Mr. RUSK took the chair as Speaker pro tempore, to receive a

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 822) to amend the act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," passed May 10, 1872; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution and bills of the House of the following titles:

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 103) authorizing the President to issue Army rations and clothing to the destitute people on the Tombigbee, Warrior, and Alabama Rivers;

The bill (H. R. No. 2738) for the relief of the Foundry Methodist Episcopal church, of Washington City;

The bill (H. R. No. 2202) for the relief of William B. Thomas, late collector of customs at the port of Philadelphia; and

The bill (H. R. No. 2181) granting a pension to Jennet H. Nisbet.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

ANDREW MASON.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3023) for the relief of Andrew Mason.

The bill was read. It appropriates the sum of $10,000 to be paid to Andrew Mason for improvements of processes employed in the United States assay office at New York in the refining and parting of gold and silver bullion.

Mr. ARCHER. I ask that the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. ARCHER. In the absence of a report I trust the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOOPER,] who reported this bill, will give some explanation of it.

Mr. HOOPER. I send to the desk a letter from the Director of the Mint which I ask the Clerk to read, commencing at the point where I have marked it. It shows the propriety of this bill. The previous portion of the letter refers to details of the improvements made by Mr. Mason.

The Clerk read as follows:

The saving to the Government effected by the combination of the two processes, and the subsequent adoption of the sulphuric-acid method of parting at the assay office, has been not less than $300,000, and we have been able to operate on large amounts of silver bullion containing gold in less proportion than could be economically separated by the nitric-acid method, and which would consequently have sought foreign markets.

In making these improvements and carrying them into successful and extensive operation, Mr. Mason displayed zeal, skill, and industry, and which, in my opinion, entitled him to a fair recognition on the part of the Government in the form of a suitable appropriation.

The Government has in several instances compensated mint officers for valuable improvements in the machinery and methods employed in the treatment of the precious metals, and its liberality in this respect has, I am well satisfied, been attended with advantageous results to the public service. I would also mention the fact that during all this time Mr. Mason has been a very poorly paid officer, his salary being $3,000 per annum, which circumstance should have some weight in determining the question of compensation for the improvements that he has introduced.

The papers are herewith returned.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. R. LINDERMAN,
Director.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

L'ANSE AND VIEUX DE SERT BANDS OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1698) for the relief of the L'Anse and Vieux de Sert bands of the Chippewa Indians, with amendments reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill was read. It declares that the entire township 51 north, of range 31 west, in the State of Michigan, as well as township 51 north, of range 33 west; township 51 north, of range 32 west; east half of township 50 north, of range 33 west; and west half of township 50 north, of range 32 west, in said State, was intended to be reserved in fee to the L'Anse and Vieux de Sert bands of the Chippewa Indians, by the treaty signed September 30, 1854, with the Chippewa Indians; and by virtue of said treaty, and the actual withdrawal of said lands from market, the said bands became and were entitled to the absolute property in all said lands. The bill in its second section provides, that payment be made to said bands of Indians, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, of a sum equal to the proceeds of all lands sold by the United States in said township 51 north, of range 31 west, and the minimum Government price of the lands in said township remaining unsold, and which are not included in the limits of the reservation of said Indians as defined by the wording of the treaty of September 20, 1854.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1698) for the relief of the L'Anse and Vieux de Sert bands of Chippewa Indians, in the State of Michigan, having had the same under consideration, and come to conclusions thereon, make the following report:

In 1854, September 30, a treaty was made and concluded between the United States on the one part, and the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and of the Mississippi on the other, and proclaimed January 29, 1855, in which the Chippewas of the Lake ceded to the United States a large body of land, defined by metes and bounds, which before was the common property of the whole tribe. The Chippewas of the Mississippi assented to this cession, and also agreed that all the money or property to be given or paid therefor by the United States should be given and paid to the Chippewas of the Lake; in consideration of which the Chippewas of the Lake relinquished to the Mississippi Chippewas all their interest in all the lands west of those ceded to the United States.

The treaty, in the second article, provides as follows, namely:

"The United States agree to set apart and withhold from sale, for the use of the Chippewas of Lake Superior, the following-described tracts of lands, namely:

"1. For the L'Anse and Vieux de Sert bands, all the unsold lands in the following townships of the State of Michigan: Township 51 north, of range 33 west; township 51 north, range 32 west; the east half of township 50 north, of range 33 west; the west half of township 50 north, range 32 west; and all of township 51 north range, 31 west, lying west of Huron Bay."

Now, what is claimed is this: It is alleged by the claimants that the phrase "lying west of Huron Bay" is an interpolation; that it was added to the treaty as printed, either by design or mistake; that they were, by express agreement at the time of making the treaty to have the whole of the last-described township and not simply a part of it.

To sustain this averment the following evidence is produced:

First. The conduct and acts of the Government itself, in this: as early as March 7, 1855, within six weeks after the treaty was proclaimed, the whole of said township was, by special order of the President, withdrawn from sale or entry, and was for many years thereafter, or until 1869 and after, treated as lands belonging to said reservation. The Indians always claimed them as such, and the Government, through a series of years, has recognized and acknowledged the validity of their claim; as evidence of which there is submitted herewith the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, of March 7, 1855, with the order of the President, withdrawing said township from entry and sale, to which is attached a diagram of the four reserved townships; also a letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under date of February 11, 1874.

Second. Again, we have the evidence of Mr. P. Marksman, in a letter to Hon. A. T. Mitchell, under date of April 2, 1872, in which he states, in substance, that he acted as agent, or "spokesman," as he terms it, of the Indians at the time the treaty was made, and drew the lines on the map for the reservation of the four townships; that the map or draught attached to the copy of the President's order of March 7, 1855, showing said townships, he recognizes; that he drew the lines on the map so as "to embrace the fishing-grounds on Keewenaw Bay and Huron Bay, and maple-lands for farming and sugar;" that the chief so understood it at the time. He further says that about a year after the promulgation of the treaty he discovered the mistake, and called the attention of the Indian agent (Mr. Gilbert) to it, who promised to have it rectified.

We have, also, a letter of Hon. George I. Betts, United States Indian agent, Michigan, addressed to the chairman of the House Committee on Indian Affairs, confirmatory of all these facts, in which he says that for some sixteen years the entire of the four townships remained undisturbed as their (the Indians') reservation, and was so recognized by the Government and the people of Lake Superior. In 1869 some speculators in public lands discovered valuable minerals in this township, fifty-one. They immediately went to work, while the secret remained theirs, to have it restored to market. They finally succeeded so far as to induce the Government to restore to market so much of the township, by far the larger and more valuable portion, as lies east of Huron Bay.

It is proper to remark here that the character of these two men, Marksman and Betts, for strict integrity and intelligence is vouched for in the warmest terms by the honorable member and Representative from the ninth district of Michigan, in this House, who has known them both long and well. Marksman is an educated, civilized, and Christian Indian, known intimately to the Representative from the ninth district since the year 1855.

The number of acres restored to market in said township amounts to 18,907.09 acres.

Under the facts as above set forth, and as they clearly appear in the case, the committee are of the opinion that these two bands of Indians have been unjustly dealt by and wronged by an appropriation of valuable lands intended and supposed to have been secured to them by the terms of a formal treaty; and that they are clearly entitled to the indemnity they seek. They therefore recommend that the bill for their relief be passed, adding at the end of section 2 the following amendment:

Provided, That the money received for the lands in said township shall be expended for educational and beneficial purposes, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and at such times and in such manner as he may deem proper for the interests of said bands of Indians.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs were as follows:

In section 2, after the word "appropriated" strike out these words:

Of a sum equal to the proceeds of all lands sold by the United States in said township 51 north, of range 31 west, and the minimum Government price of the lands in said township remaining unsold, and.

And insert the following:

At the rate of $1.25 an acre for all the lands in said township.

And add at the end of the section the following proviso:

Provided, That the money received for the lands in said township shall be expended for educational and beneficial purposes, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and at such times and in such manner as he may deem proper for the interests of said bands of Indians.

The amendments were agreed to.

No objection being made, the bill with the amendments was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM WALKER.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2292) for the relief of William Walker, with an amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to William Walker, of Milton, State of Wisconsin, $366.66, for unpaid salary as vice-commercial agent at Gaboon, from October 1, 1870, to February 12, 1871.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2292) for the relief of William Walker, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to make the following report:

The committee find, in 1870, Aug. Perrot, the United States commercial agent at Gaboon, West Africa, being disabled by sickness, left his post September 30, in the same year, having previously placed the affairs and business of the agency in charge of William Walker, who was a missionary. Mr. Walker removed the property of the agency to his house and transacted the business of the United States Government from October 1, 1870, to April 4, 1871.

Upon taking charge of the agency he surrendered his appointment and ceased to draw his pay as a missionary. The salary of the United States commercial agent at Gaboon was $1,000 a year. When Mr. Walker called for his salary at the State Department he was informed that full salary had been paid to Mr. Perrot, and that he must look to Mr. Perrot for his pay.

From the petition and testimony in the case it appears that Mr. Perrot has no pecuniary responsibility.

The following statement from the Consular Bureau of the State Department shows that Mr. Walker discharged the duties of the United States commercial agency at Gaboon, Africa, from September 30, 1870, to April 4, 1871, with fidelity:

FIRST CONSULAR BUREAU, April 27, 1874.

Rev. William Walker, when appointed vice-commercial agent at Gaboon, Africa, in October, 1868, was an American missionary at that place. On September 30, 1870, Mr. Perrot, the commercial agent, being sick, left his post, having placed Mr. Walker in charge. Mr. Walker discharged the duties of the agency from that date until April 4, 1871, on which date he sailed for the United States. He seems to have conducted the office with care and fidelity while he had charge.

The period between September 30, 1870, and April 4, 1871, covers his entire official service in those two years, so far as appears from the files of the Department.

He has since been superseded by Mr. W. G. Taylor, also a missionary.

A. B. WOOD.

Your committee find that Mr. Walker is entitled to pay for his services in the sum of $374.90, and recommend the bill be thus amended and passed.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs was as follows:

Strike out "$366.66" and insert in lieu thereof "$374.90."

The amendment was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill, with the amendment, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JAMES A. M'CULLAH.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3173) for the relief of James A. McCullah, late collector of the fifth district of Missouri.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to credit the account of James A. McCullah, late collector of the fifth district of Missouri, with a sum not exceeding $7,814.19, the same being the amount alleged to be uncollected on assessment lists transferred by him to his successor in office, and which were destroyed by fire while in the hands of his said successor; provided that such credits shall not be allowed until it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, by affidavits general in their character and applying to said amount in the aggregate, that due diligence was used by said McCullah to make collection of the same while said lists remained in his hands, and that it was not collected by him; it being the intention of this act to relieve said McCullah from complying with the strict requirements of existing regulations relative to the abatement of uncollected taxes.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 364) for the relief of James A. McCullah, late collecter of the fifth district of Missouri, respectfully report:

That J. A. McCullah was collector of internal revenue of the fifth district of Missouri, and was removed October 22, 1866. He was directed to turn over his tax-lists to his successor. The amount at that time outstanding and unaccounted for upon the assessment-lists receipted for by Mr. McCullah was $50,538.45, of which there has been collected by his successor $37,509.17, and abated by the Internal Revenue Commissioner as uncollectible $4,899.80; still to be collected by Mr. McCullah's successor $8,129.48. By the regulations of the Treasury Department an outgoing collector is not, upon their transfer, credited with the amount upon the lists, but the same remains charged against him until collected by his successor. The amount uncollected on said lists ($8,129.48) stands charged to Mr. McCullah, as late collector, and suit has been commenced.

By the rules of the Department Mr. McCullah was required to state what amount he considered collectible and what uncollectible. He made such statement, representing that of the $50,538.45 the sum of $43,323.36 he considered collectible, and $5,215.07 as uncollectible. The latter sum has been nearly all abated. While these assessment-lists were in the possession of and being collected by the successor they were consumed by fire, which destroyed the collector's office and contents, on the 6th of November, 1867.

On the 10th of January, A. D. 1871, by a fire which consumed the assessor's office of that district, the duplicate copies of these same lists were destroyed, so that there is now in existence no record or other written evidence under the control of the Department to determine what portion of the amount now outstanding and unaccounted for on lists of Mr. McCullah has been collected by him, or what part of this amount might properly be abated to him as uncollected. Mr. McCullah, by proper diligence and compliance with the directions of the Department, perhaps, during the existence of these records, might have obtained an abatement, in part at least, of the amount charged against him; but your committee believe that he should not be held to account for uncollected taxes upon lists in the hands of his successor, unless it appears that the sums claimed by the Government had been collected by Mr. McCullah, or remained uncollected through his fault or negligence.

At all events, it seems to the committee to be applying a very harsh rule to Mr. McCullah when he is required to account for taxes uncollected by him, after the assessment-lists were receipted for and taken out of his hands by his successor, and after he had ceased to have any control over the collection of these taxes.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying substitute for the bill referred to the committee.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

PARDON WORSELEY.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3174) for the relief of Pardon Worseley.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I object to the consideration of that bill.

CITIZENS OF ALLEGHENY COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 44) for the relief of certain citizens of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that this bill will give rise to some discussion, or at least will require explanation. I therefore object to its consideration at this time.

B. W. HARRIS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1045) for the relief of B. W. Harris, late collector of internal revenue for the second district of Massachusetts.

The bill directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to adjust and settle the accounts of B. W. Harris, late collector of internal revenue for the second district of Massachusetts; and, on evidence satisfactory to the Government being produced by said B. W. Harris of the loss by the Boston fire of November 9 and 10, 1872, of moneys in his hands, said officers are further directed to audit and allow such sum or sums in the settlement of said collector's accounts.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1045) for the relief of B. W. Harris, late collector of internal revenue for the second district of Massachusetts, have considered the same, and make the following report:

B. W. Harris was collector of internal revenue for the second district of Massachusetts at the time of the great Boston fire, November 9, 1872. The principal office of said collector was at No. 51 Water street, in said city of Boston, which was entirely consumed with all its contents, no public or private property whatever being saved. In his iron safe used for the safe-keeping of the books, moneys, and property of the United States in his custody, as such collector, was the sum of $346.53 in national currency, derived from the sale of revenue-stamps and from taxes collected, which was entirely consumed. The rules of the Department required the collector to deposit as often as his collections amounted to $1,000, in the Randolph National Bank, situated sixteen miles from Boston. These facts appearing from the affidavit of Luther S. Leach, Mr. Harris's deputy, hereto attached, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue being clearly of the opinion that no blame could attach to Mr. Harris for not saving the property or money in the office, as shown in his letter to the committee, also hereto appended, the committee are of the opinion that the bill for the relief of Mr. Harris ought to pass:

I, Luther S. Leach, of Stoughton, in the State of Massachusetts, on oath, say that in November, A. D. 1872, and for a long time previous, and for some months thereafter, I was sole deputy collector of internal revenue in the second district of Massachusetts, in which district B. W. Harris was collector; that on the 9th day of November I had under my care and in the office of said Harris, at Boston, the sum of $346.53, money collected by me as such deputy collector, and belonging to the United States; that, at about half past three p. m. on said day, I closed and locked the safe and office, and this money was then in said safe; that the great Boston fire occurred that (Saturday) night and the next day, (Sunday,) and said office of said Harris, with all its contents, was utterly destroyed; that on the morning of Monday, November 11, I went to the site of said office, saw the said safe in the ruins, caused it to be taken therefrom, opened it myself, and found said money and all the other contents of said safe entirely destroyed.

Said moneys consisted of the following items of collection:

Taxes on September list collected between November 1 and November 9...	$213 03
Taxes on October list collected between November 1 and November 9.....	25 00
Cigar-stamps sold, as follows:
November 2.....	16 00
November 4.....	25 00
November 7.....	5 00
November 9.....	62 50

I was then, as I have said, the sole deputy, and collected partly by traveling through the district and partly in the office. I was required by the rules of the Department to deposit in the Randolph National Bank (situated at Randolph, distant about sixteen miles from Boston and five miles from my home at Stoughton) as often as my collections amounted to $1,000.

A small part of the taxes on the September and October lists, above specified, were collected by me in the early part of the week ending November 9, while traveling through the towns in the district, but the principal part thereof were paid to me at the office in Boston during the day of November 9, and shortly before I left the office. The taxes on the September list were mostly of retail liquor dealers, who had been notified to pay on or before November 10, and who came or sent into town by the forenoon trains of November 9, that being the last day of payment.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, March 25, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the affidavit of L. S. Leach, of Stoughton, Massachusetts, relative to the circumstances connected with the destruction, in the great fire at Boston, Massachusetts, in November, 1872, of $346.53, being money collected by B. W. Harris, then collector second district Massachusetts. An agent of this office was sent to Boston at the time of the fire, and visited the ruins of the office of Mr. Harris; inspected the safe referred to by Mr. Leach. This visit was made on the day succeeding the one on which Mr. Leach made his examination of the safe. The agent was then satisfied, and has not since advised this office of any change in his opinion, that it was impossible for anything within the collector's office to have escaped destruction. This office believes that Collector Harris has an equitable claim for relief, deserving of favorable action of Congress.

Very respectfully,

J. W. DOUGLASS,
Commissioner.

Hon. J. Q. SMITH,
House of Representatives.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

TIMOTHY D. CROOK.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2170) for the relief of Timothy D. Crook.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Timothy D. Crook, of Nebraska City, in the State of Nebraska, $2,841.60, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full for the balance due him for hay delivered to the United States at Fort Dodge, Kansas, in the year 1867, in pursuance of a contract made on the 22d day of May, 1867, between said Crook and Captain J. H. Belcher on behalf of the United States.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2170) for the relief of Timothy D. Crook, report as follows:

On the 29th day of May, 1867, Timothy D. Crook, of Nebraska City, Nebraska, entered into a contract with Captain J. H. Belcher, assistant quartermaster United States Army, to deliver at Fort Dodge, Kansas, between the 1st day of August and the 1st day of December, 1867, 1,270 tons of good merchantable prairie hay, for which he was to receive the sum of $10.93 per ton.

One of the conditions of the contract was that, in case Mr. Crook failed to furnish the amount of hay stipulated, the Government should have power to retain such amount of money as should indemnify it for any and all defects and deficiencies in the execution of the contract on the part of Mr. Crook.

It was further stipulated that the Government should pay for the hay on vouchers to be issued on the delivery of each two hundred tons, in such funds as the Government might provide for that purpose; but it was provided that the Government should retain 10 per cent. of the contract price, and might retain all until the whole amount of the hay was delivered.

It appears from the evidence that Mr. Crook proceeded on or about the 1st day of August to Fort Dodge with a competent force of men, teams, and machines, for the purpose of cutting and delivering the hay. He did deliver, it appears, eight hundred tons of hay, and asks for relief for his failure to deliver the remaining four hundred and seventy tons for the following reasons:

At or about the time of his arrival, it is said that the cholera was raging with great violence at Fort Dodge, and that many deaths occurred. Mr. Crook's men were many of them taken sick and four of them died. This greatly demoralized his working force, and a number of his men left. It also appears that about the time of the arrival of Mr. Crook's party there were demonstrations of hostility on the part of the Indians. Mr. Crook applied to the officer in command at the fort for an escort or guard of soldiers, which could not be furnished on account of sickness which was prevailing among the soldiers. In consequence the work of cutting and delivering the hay proceeded under constant apprehensions of attack. A portion of the party had to be detached to stand guard, and the men who were running the machines refused to work during the absence of the hauling men and teams, but would assemble and prepare for defense.

On the 6th of September they were attacked by Indians; one man was killed, several mules stolen, and the machines broken.

The committee are of the opinion, from a careful examination of the evidence, that Mr. Crook made every reasonable effort to comply with the terms of the contract, and was only prevented from doing so by obstacles which could not be foreseen and which were entirely beyond his control.

It appears from the papers submitted to the committee that Mr. Crook received from the quartermaster at Fort Dodge four vouchers for the receipt of eight hundred tons of hay—two hundred tons each—each voucher $2,186. Three of these vouchers were, it appears, paid less 10 per cent., which was retained under the terms of the contract. The voucher unpaid, to wit, $2,186, and the 10 per cent. retained on previous vouchers, to wit, $655.80, in all $2,841.80, is the amount Mr. Crook claims is in equity and justice due him from the Government.

But it appears from the papers in the case that the Government has an unsatisfied claim against Mr. Crook. By the terms of the contract Mr. Crook was bound to make good any loss to the Government by reason of any failure on his part to comply with the terms of the contract. In consequence of his failure to furnish the required amount of hay the Government was compelled to purchase during the early summer of the following year eighty-five tons of hay, at thirty-five dollars per ton, amounting to $2,975. Deducting contract price, $926.50, makes the loss to the Government from Mr. Crook's failure to furnish the stipulated amount of hay $2,048.50. Unquestionably it was the duty of the Department to charge Mr. Crook with that sum, and if there was any reason to believe that his failure to fulfill and perform his contract was due to any negligence on his part, or lack of energetic, faithful effort to do his duty, it would be very wrong even for Congress to pass an act to relieve him from the failure to fulfill his contract. But believing Mr. Crook's failure was owing to unavoidable causes, we think it would be too much like the Jew exacting the pound of flesh for the Government to insist on the strict letter of the bargain.

The vouchers issued to Mr. Crook from time to time by the United States quartermaster were signed in blank by Crook and sold in the ordinary course of business to D. J. McCann & Co., of Nebraska City, Nebraska. McCann & Co. set up the claim that these vouchers are commercial paper, and as such, as soon as issued, it is obligatory on the Government to pay them. This question was submitted to the Department, and by it fully considered and decided adversely to the claim. We see no reason to question the correctness of this conclusion. McCann & Co. can, therefore, have secured no rights by the transfer of these vouchers by Crook to them than the rights possessed by Crook. As the question as to McCann & Co.'s rights has been pertinaciously insisted on, and has been carefully considered by Assistant Judge Advocate General W. M. Dunn, his decision, as approved by the Secretary of War, is appended to this report.

The committee reach this conclusion: That in consequence of the almost insurmountable obstacles in the way of Mr. Crook fulfilling his contract, he should not be held responsible for the loss to the Government caused by reason of his failure; and that in justice and equity he should be paid the full contract price for the hay he delivered. That on that contract he is entitled to receive the sum of $2,841.60.

This conclusion is in accordance with the opinion of the Quartermaster-General. The committee therefore report back the bill, and recommend that it pass.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, May 5, 1870.

In the matter of the claim of D. J. McCann & Co., for payment of a certain voucher issued by a certain officer of the Quartermaster's Department to T. D. Crook.

This voucher is for two hundred tons of hay, at $10.93 per ton, amounting to $2,186, delivered at Fort Dodge, Kansas, September 26, 1867, under contract made between Captain J. H. Belcher, assistant quartermaster, and T. D. Crook, dated May 22, 1867.

After the voucher was duly certified and approved, the usual receipt attached to such vouchers was signed in blank by Crook, and the voucher was, in the ordinary course of business, sold by Crook to Messrs. D. J. McCann & Co., of Nebraska City, Nebraska.

No question is raised as to the delivery of the hay in quantity, as set forth in the voucher, or in quality, as required by the contract.

The Quartermaster's Department has refused payment on the ground that subsequent deliveries which, by the terms of the contract, were to have been made by the contractor, Crook, were not made, and that his default in this respect occasioned greater loss to the Government than the amount of the voucher in question; and it satisfactorily appears that this statement is true. The claimants reply that the default was occasioned by the prevalence of cholera and Indian troubles in that locality at the time the hay should have been cut, &c. To which the Quartermaster's Department replies that it is not for the executive department to excuse the non-fulfillment of contracts, but to enforce them; in which it is again right.

Two provisions of the contract on which the hay specified in the voucher was delivered are of controlling importance in the consideration of this case:

"First. That if default shall be made by the said party of the second part in the time of the delivery of the said hay, or in any of the provisions of this contract, the said party of the first part shall have power to supply any deficiency that may exist by purchasing in open market, or in such manner as he may elect, and the said party of the second part shall be charged with the difference in cost."

Such a default did occur, and it became necessary in consequence thereof for the Government to supply the deficiency by a purchase of eighty-five tons of hay in open market, which cost the Government thirty-five dollars per ton, amounting to $2,975.

To this it is replied that the contractor was not in default when this voucher was issued, and attention is called to the following provision of the contract:

"The said party of the first part hereby agrees, for and on behalf of the United States of America, to pay, or cause to be paid, to the said party of the second part, the sum of $10.93 for each and every ton of two thousand pounds of hay delivered and accepted in accordance with the terms of this contract, as follows, to wit: On the delivery and acceptance of each two hundred tons of hay on vouchers issued by the officer of the quartermaster's department at Fort Dodge, Kansas, in such funds as may be provided by the Government for that purpose, or as soon as the funds shall be received for that purpose."

It is claimed that under the foregoing stipulation an installment of two hundred tons having been duly delivered, the obligation to pay became absolute. But there is a proviso to the stipulation, which is the second of the two provisions deemed of controlling importance in the consideration of this case, as follows:

"Provided, however, That the said party of the first part shall have the power to retain any or all, and shall retain 10 per cent. of the money to be paid as aforesaid, until the completion of this contract according to the terms, intent, and meaning thereof."

Thus it appears that by an express provision of the contract the Government was not bound to pay a cent to the contractor until the contract, as an entirety, was fulfilled. He could not therefore have pretended to have a legal demand on the Government for hay delivered, when the damages to the Government on account of his subsequent defaults amounted to more than the balance due him on his deliveries.

The final position assumed by the attorneys for the claimants and the one which they press with great earnestness is, that this voucher must be regarded as commercial paper, and they make the following quotation from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the "Floyd acceptances:"

"It must be taken as settled that when the United States become a party to what is called commercial paper, by which is meant that class of paper which is transferable by indorsement or delivery, and between private parties, is exempt in the hands of innocent holders, from inquiry into the circumstances under which it was put in circulation, they are bound in any court to whose jurisdiction they submit by the same principle that governs individuals in their relations to such paper."

This voucher is not commercial paper. It is not such a paper as between private parties would be transferable by indorsement or delivery, so as to enable the holder to bring a suit in his own name. It is neither a note nor a bill of exchange. It is simply a certificate by a proper public officer that such an amount of supplies has been delivered at such a time and place, on a contract with the Government of such a date.

The blank receipt attached thereto to be signed by the contractor is not a necessary part of the paper, as it would be just as valid against the Government if the receipt were not there. The receipt could be written on the certificate when the amount therein specified should be paid.

Nor is this paper even in the hands of an innocent holder exempt from inquiry into the circumstances under which it was issued. If such were the case the provisions of the contract last quoted would be of no value to the Government, as the contractor might immediately on the receipt of a voucher transfer it, and thus, if the argument of counsel be correct, compel a payment to be made notwithstanding the above important provision.

This voucher, with the blank receipt thereto attached, is such a transfer of the right to receive the amount named in the voucher as enables the holders to claim the amount from the Government, as against the contractor, and to receive it, provided the Government has no sufficient offset against either the contractor or the holder of the voucher. If the Government has such an offset it has the right to assert it.

Such vouchers as the one on which this claim is based, though not commercial paper, were, during the war, and to a considerable extent have since been, articles of commerce.

They were dealt in as public securities, and but few contractors could have fulfilled their contracts had they not been able to raise money by the sale or hypothecation of vouchers received from time to time during the progress of the fulfillment of their contract.

The case under consideration, like many others that have come to my knowledge, is one of great hardship upon the purchaser, but the rule of "caveat emptor" applies in this as in other purchases.

It is respectfully recommended that this claim be rejected.

W. M. DUNN,
Assistant Judge Advocate General.

Approved.

WM. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

J. E. INGALLS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3175) for the relief of J. E. Ingalls, postmaster at Denmark, Lee County, Iowa.

The bill directs the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department to credit the account of J. E. Ingalls, postmaster at Denmark, Lee County, Iowa, with the sum of $185.44 for postage-stamps stolen from his office on the 3d day of September, 1872, without any fault or negligence on the part of said Ingalls.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims report:

That on the 3d of September, 1872, J. E. Ingalls was postmaster at Denmark, Lee County, Iowa, and kept his office in the store of Messrs. Day & Ingalls; that on the night of the 3d of September, 1872, the store in which said office was kept was entered by burglars and postage-stamps stolen from the post-office amounting in value to $185.44; that the stamps were secured by double locks; that the building was entered by wrenching a window-shutter from its fastenings, and then breaking a pane of glass and entering through the opening; that the store in which said office was kept was securely locked on the night of the burglary, and that the loss of said stamps was without fault or negligence on the part of the postmaster.

These facts appear from the affidavit of the claimant, and he is corroborated by the affidavit of six leading citizens of Denmark.

Hon. GEORGE W. MCCRARY, member of Congress from Iowa, certifies that "Mr. Ingalls, the postmaster, and all the other affiants are gentlemen of the highest character."

The following letter from the Post-Office Department would seem to fully sustain the postmaster in the amount he claims to have lost:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 15, 1874.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of yours of this date, inclosing "bill (H. R. No. 1861) and accompanying papers for the relief of J. E. Ingalls, postmaster at Denmark, Lee County, Iowa," for stamps stolen, and requesting a "statement of the probable amount of stamps in that office at the time of the alleged robbery," September 3, 1872.

In compliance with your request the following estimate is submitted, namely:

Amount of postage-stamps and stamped envelopes on hand June 30, 1872, as per returns to Auditor	$119 22
Sent on orders subsequently	223 04
Total	342 26
Deduct estimated sales for sixty-five days, (average daily sales for six months ending June 30, 1872, being $1.39)	90 35
Gives probable amount on hand September 3, 1872	251 91

It is noticed that the bill fails to give the date on which the robbery occurred.

Herewith the papers are returned.

Very respectfully, &c.,

E. W. BARBER,
Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. JNO. B. HAWLEY,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

Your committee, therefore, report the accompaning bill to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM GREEN.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3176) for the relief of William Green.

The bill provides that there shall be allowed and paid to William Green, surviving partner of the firm of Emison & Green, the sum of $377 for services performed by said firm as mail messengers in carrying the mails to and from the post-office at the city of Vincennes, in the State of Indiana, from the 1st day of July, 1854, to the 6th day of September, 1855.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition for the relief of William Green, Knox County, Indiana, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

The committee find that the firm of Emison & Green, of which said Green is the survivor, was employed by the postmaster at Vincennes, Indiana, as a mail messenger to convey the mails of the United States between the post-office in that city and the Evansville and Crawfordsville Railroad depot, from the 1st day of July, 1854, to the 6th day of September, 1855.

A dispute arose between the claimant and the Post-Office Department as to whether said service had been ordered by the latter. One James Dicle, since deceased, was then postmaster at Vincennes. Proofs have been submitted in behalf of this claim to the effect that said postmaster, during his life-time, claimed that he had received written authority from the Postmaster-General to employ claimant's firm to perform this service, which written order had been lost or misplaced. There is no record of it in the Post-Office Department.

The committee are satisfied that the firm of Emison & Green did serve as said messenger during the period above mentioned; that said service was necessary, and that Emison & Green have not been paid for it.

Some question arose as to whether the Post-Office Department or the Evansville and Crawfordsville Railroad Company were liable to Green for this service. During the time they were employed said railroad was in process of construction. As is usual in such cases, the terminus of the road was changed frequently as the laying of the track and the running of regular trains progressed. Vincennes could hardly be considered a terminus, for it was then, and still is, an intermediate point. If it were not the terminus the railroad company was not liable to the claimant unless the depot was less than eighty rods distant from the post-office. Proofs have been submitted to show that the distance between these points was greater than eighty rods. The affidavit of the secretary of the Evansville and Crawfordsville Railroad Company, showing that Emison & Green were not paid by them for this service, is in the hands of the committee.

The value of said service has been shown to be from $1 to $1.50 per day. The committee estimate it at $1 per day, amounting to the sum of $377 for the number of days' service, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

DE WITT C. CHIPMAN.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3177) for the relief of De Witt C. Chipman.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to De Witt C. Chipman, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $8,006.17, in full satisfaction and payment of all demands whatever of the said Chipman as late collector of internal revenue for the eleventh district of Indiana.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of DeWitt C. Chipman, esq., late collector of the eleventh district of Indiana, for relief from certain losses, expenses, and services growing out of said collectorship, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

That said Chipman served as collector of said district from September 15, 1862, until November 30, 1866, a period of four years and two and a half months; that he acted as collector of internal revenue, stamp agent, and receiver of commutation money, these positions growing out of the office of collector; that he has made a final settlement of all the matters intrusted to him, and his account was balanced and closed October 22, 1872.

That during his incumbency he was ordered by the department to close out all lists of taxes by a certain day, and at the time designated in said order he reported the sum of $3,334.26, as collected on Form 51, when in fact the lists were not closed and collected, and in a letter which accompanied and made a part of said report, he notified the department that the same was not collected, but he would report the same as collected to comply with the order, but upon the condition that he should afterward be permitted to open up said lists and abate all erroneous and uncollectible taxes on said lists.

It appeared, therefore, from this conditional report, as if he was owing that much cash. But that was apparent and not real, the same not being, in fact, collected, as the report itself demonstrated. But he was charged as if he was owing that much cash.

The evidence of this conditional report is satisfactorily furnished, and is fourfold. J. R. Grey, esq., of Hamilton County, Indiana, in his affidavit, states that he read the order to close the lists; that he saw and read the conditional report and letters before they were sent, and advised against their being sent. Also, the letter of J. C. Lotz, the clerk in the department who received the report and letter. Also, the affidavit of the claimant, dated September 15, 1872, which comes among the records from the department, and was made prior to the final settlement; and lastly, by the corroborative letter of the present deputy commissioner of internal revenue, H. C. Rogers, dated March 20, 1874.

That certain duplicate and erroneous collections of clerks and deputies were made during his term, growing out of the fact that he had no lists for a part of the time, and of collecting in advance of lists, amounting to the sum of $684.79, which, put with the conditional report, amounted to $4,018.98, all of which was subtracted from his lists of taxes, thereby reducing them below the real amount remaining uncollected, and increasing his apparent cash balance in a like manner.

That prior to his final settlement he demanded of a former department to put this $4,018.98 on the lists to be abated, which was refused, whereby he lost the same, and at the final settlement he was compelled to account for the same in cash, it being withheld out of his fees and salary by the department to balance the supposed cash due from him.

T. C. Dickenson, a clerk in the department, testifies that he heard Mr. Chipman demand the raising of the lists for $4,018.98. Also, the affidavit of claimant is found among the records of the department to the same purport, made before the final settlement, which is corroborated by the letter of Deputy Commissioner H. C. Rogers of March 20, 1874.

That he also demanded of a former department the return of an abstract of collection and a refund of the duplicate and erroneous collections, which was refused.

The present department has manifested a disposition to relieve Mr. Chipman so far as it could unhampered by the action of its predecessors. It has recognized his right to relief by abating $1,929.58 from the $4,018.98, leaving but $2,089.40 outstanding on that item.

This act is an official recognition of the justness of the claim, so far as a partial allowance is a criterion. The following question, which, it is believed, covers the essential point of the $4,018.98, was propounded to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on the 17th of March, 1874:

"If taxes should be reported collected when they were not in fact collected, and in that manner the lists should be reduced below the true amount remaining uncollected, would that be a just and equitable ground for relief to one who had suffered loss thereby?"

The following was the reply, dated March 20, 1874:

"If a collector reports a tax collected which he afterward alleges that he did not collect, that does not relieve him from the liability for the tax, but simply renders it necessary for him to show why he did not collect it. If he exercised due diligence to collect without avail, the tax being uncollectible at the time when his right to collect it commenced, it is a proper subject of relief here by abatement. If he did not exercise due diligence to collect, it is a loss traceable to his failure to do his duty."

By abating $1,929.58 out of the $4,018.98, it is an official recognition that due diligence had been exercised as to such portion. No tax is ever abated until due diligence is established. Claimant had been in office near ten months before the department put the first list of taxes into his hands. Judge James S. Frazer's letter shows that Mr. Estee, late chief clerk of the department, said that Mr. Chipman had an inefficient assessor, and predicted that he could not get through without suffering loss therefrom. Without lists, and with an inefficient assessor, and as these losses occurred at an early day of his term, it is pretty clear that justice would determine the diligence to be with Collector Chipman.

It appears that the sum of $2,248.76 remained at this time uncollected on his old lists, which claimant accounted for in cash. The statute of limitation does not run against the Government to prevent its collection. It has the officer and lists in the district to collect, and we think the claimant should be allowed this also in addition to the aforesaid sum of $2,089.40, increasing the amount to the sum of $4,338.16.

It now remains to consider the other part of the claim, for expenses incurred and time spent after retirement, amounting to a large sum of money.

Claimant alleges that the outgoing collector was not credited, and the incoming collector was not charged with anything on the old lists until he collected and reported his collections. The transfer of lists and giving of a receipt were void acts, as far as a legal liability was concerned. In other words, a collector was retired, his lists taken from him, he was deprived of the power of collecting, his lists transferred to a successor whose receipt did not bind him to collect either for the retired collector or the department, and who incurred no liability of any kind until he first collected and reported. He might collect or abate at his option. If he did not collect he was not charged. If he did not collect there was nothing to compel him to do so. That the matter may be correctly understood, we will quote all of the Commissioner's letter of instructions bearing upon the point, and dated November 23, 1866, and transmitted to the claimant at the time of his retirement, which reads as follows:

"You will make out a list of all the taxes which are uncollected, to be transferred to your successor for collection, for which you will take a receipt, showing the aggregate amount on each list, sending a duplicate to this office.

"This receipt will not be a credit to you on the books of this office, but will merely be a receipt between you and your successor. When your successor has collected all he is able to collect, he will transmit duplicate acknowledgments of the fact, giving the amount he has collected from each list receipted for by him, when you will be credited with the amount so collected, and he will be charged with the same."

Annexed is a correct and full copy of the receipt which was passed between the collectors, office eleventh district of Indiana:

"I hereby acknowledge the receipt of the following amount of uncollected internal-revenue tax from D. C. Chipman, late collector, as follows."

And a schedule of the taxes is appended thereto. This receipt is in harmony with the instructions. The incoming collector does not undertake to collect for the outgoing collector or for the department. He does not attempt to collect at all.

To ascertain the construction of the present department upon the instructions of its predecessor, a letter was addressed to the Commissioner, asking "if Mr. Chipman's successor was charged with anything upon his lists until he had collected and reported," and an answer was received from Hon. J. W. Douglass dated February 6, 1874, saying, as follows:

"Mr. Chipman's successor was not charged with any tax until he had reported to this office the fact of having collected the same."

From what has been said, it is clear, that although retired and out of office, Mr. Chipman was held for the collection and abatement of all the taxes that his successor did not gratuitously abate or collect; and forseeing the evil, the loss of time and money, that might result from such instructions, he addressed a letter to the department, which was answered by Hon. Thomas Harlan, deputy commissioner, dated May 20, 1867, saying:

"If your regulations permit the same, I ask to be permitted to collect the delinquent or uncollected taxes on all lists at the date of my removal. As your regulations do not impose upon my successor the burden and responsibility of collecting the same, I think, as you look to me as the responsible person, I should be permitted to collect that tax. In no other business transaction can a man be compelled to turn over to another what he has receipted for, and still be bound for the capacity, or diligence, or want of diligence of another, and for this reason I ask the privilege of protecting myself by being authorized to collect."

The Commissioner's reply to this request is dated May 25, 1867, and reads thus:

"On no consideration whatever can you be allowed to make collections or issue warrants to close up the lists for which you have receipted. All uncollected taxes remaining upon the lists you receipted for must be transferred to the present collector for collection."

Having been informed that "on no consideration whatever could he collect," the claimant found himself powerless to protect himself. His successor neither collected nor abated, except for trifling amounts, and finally a suit was brought by the department on the official bond of claimant for $100,000. He was put among the defaulting collectors and heralded through the press as such. To protect his reputation and property he was compelled to close his office, abandon his law practice altogether for three years, and struggle on for six years before procuring a final settlement of his account, and in doing so he spent $1,197 in addition to his time and services.

During this six years' struggle all the fees and emoluments resulting from the collection went to the successor, and all the expenses were borne and paid by the claimant, and at his final settlement no allowance was made for any of these losses, expenses, or services, nor was any allowance made at any other time.

To add to his labors and expenses a new regulation, called Form 53½, was adopted after his retirement. It was made to retroact and operate upon him in the nature of an ex post facto regulation, and it compelled him to do all of his abatement papers over again. It compelled him to get up the old set of papers known as Form 53, and also to get up, to him, a new and unknown paper, called Form 53½. This increased his labors nearly two years above what they would have been if Form 53½ had not been adopted and enforced upon him. A large abatement paper for about $19,000 was filed about two months before Form 53½ was adopted, and it was made to retroact, and stopped its abatement for two years, until the same work was done over again on Form 53 and on the new Form 53½.

The abatement papers so filed were in accordance with the rules and law which operated at his retirement, and conformed in every respect to the instructions given to him at his retirement, at the time he was directed to abate on Form 53. Contemporaneous with the adoption of 53½ and the suspension of his abatement papers the suit was instituted on his official bond as aforesaid. While your committee are satisfied that Mr. Chipman expended considerable time and money in attempting to protect himself after his removal, yet they are also convinced that such expenditure was wholly unnecessary for such purposes, and cannot, therefore, allow him compensation therefor.

Prior to a final settlement he applied for a personal compensation of $3,500 a year, and was granted $2,500 a year for a part and $2,800 for the remaining time, which first sum was the sum granted to his successors. Claimant was the first collector in the district; he organized it; held office in turbulent times, and while the system was new. He collected from $30,000 to $96,000 more a year than any other collector did in that district. His aggregate collections during four years and two and a half months are larger than what both of his successors collected in seven years by $32,656.20.

In view of the difficulties attending his position, your committee are of opinion that he should have been allowed compensation at the rate of $3,500 per annum, which would increase the aforesaid allowance by the sum of $3,668.01, making a total allowance of $8,006.17.

Letters are on file from Senators MORTON, PRATT, and others, who have known the claimant for over twenty years, and they say that Mr. Chipman is a gentleman of integrity, character, and high standing.

Your committee report the petition back to the House, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

J. GEORGE HARRIS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 336) for the relief of J. George Harris.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is an adverse report in this case. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. Unless we can have debate upon this bill I will ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion. Let him object to the consideration of the bill at this time, and it will go over.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will consider that objection has been made to the consideration of the bill at this time, and it goes over under the rules.

PLEASANT M. CRAIGMILLER.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 818) for the relief of Pleasant M. Craigmiller, of Bradley County, East Tennessee.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. There is an adverse report in this case; but I ask that the bill may be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That cannot be very well done. The motion to recommit is in the nature of debate. The proper way is to let the bill go over.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain, by unanimous consent, the motion to recommend that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no advantage in reconsidering this bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. I am informed that the claimant can present additional evidence, and asks to be again heard.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think it should be recommitted.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

WILLIAM CASS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 2569) for the relief of William Cass.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. There is an adverse report in this case. I object to its consideration at this time.

JOHN L. T. JONES.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 1620) for the relief of John L. T. Jones, of Montgomery County, Maryland, for rent and damage sustained by the destruction of a dwelling-house by accidental fire while the same was being occupied by United States troops for quarters.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John L. T. Jones the sum of $4,585, which shall be in full discharge of all claims of said John L. T. Jones against the United States for rent of building and destruction of the same by accidental fire while being so occupied as quarters by the United States troops in Montgomery County, Maryland, under the command of General Hubert Ward, in November, 1862.

The Committee on War Claims recommend that the amount appropriated be reduced to $4,000.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1620) for the relief of John L. T. Jones, of Montgomery County, in the State of Maryland, having had the same under consideration, report:

It appears from the proof that Jones was a thoroughly loyal citizen, residing on his farm, some three miles from White's Ferry, on the Potomac, in the county of Montgomery, and State of Maryland; that in the fall of 1862 a portion of the Union Army, under General Hubert Ward, encamped upon the premises of said Jones for several weeks, and that General Ward, for a time, occupied as headquarters a portion of the said house in which said Jones resided with his family.

It is also shown that said Jones gave valuable information of the movements of the rebel army.

It is shown that said Jones had another house near by, which he surrendered up to be occupied as quarters for the officers and soldiers, on the express promise and agreement of General Ward, in command of the United States Army at that place, that the United States Government would indemnify him for the use of the said premises and for all losses that might ensue from such occupation.

It is also shown that while the premises were so occupied by United States soldiers as quarters the house and its contents were consumed by fire.

There was no battle imminent; there was no overruling military necessity which called for the destruction of the property to keep it from falling into the hands of the enemy, neither were there active military operations at hand; on the contrary, the property was far away from the active theater of war.

The evidence clearly shows a just and valid claim on the part of the said Jones for the property burned and destroyed while occupied by and in the possession of the Union forces, within the principle of several cases which have already passed Congress.

The committee therefore recommend the allowance of $4,000 in full payment and satisfaction of the claim, and report back the bill amended to correspond with the above amount, and recommend its passage as amended.

There being no objection, the amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

REV. JOHN R. HAMILTON.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2506) for the relief of Rev. John R. Hamilton.

The bill was read. It appropriates $300 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to Rev. John R. Hamilton, of West Virginia, formerly chaplain of the One hundred and eleventh Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, to reimburse him for commutation money improperly paid J. W. Douglass, receiver of commutation money for the nineteenth district of Pennsylvania, October 11, 1863.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2506) for the relief of Rev. John R. Hamilton, having considered the same, report:

That the said Hamilton was, in 1863, a resident of Fairview, Erie County, Pennsylvania, and a pastor of a church in that town; that under date of August 24, 1863, he was notified that he had been drafted into the service of the United States in accordance with the act of Congress of March 3, 1863; that he was required to report at the place of rendezvous appointed on or before the 1st day of November, 1863, or be deemed a deserter. It further appears that, prior to the expiration of the time given him to report, to wit, on the 16th day of September, 1863, he was appointed and commissioned as chaplain of the One hundred and eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and soon afterward he proceeded to join the said regiment, then in the Department of the Tennessee, and served with the said regiment in that capacity. It also further appears that, notwithstanding the fact that he was so commissioned as chaplain, he was notified that he would be considered as a deserter unless he reported as required, or paid $300 as commutation money, and that he paid that money to J. W. Douglass, the receiver of commutation money, duly authorized to receive the same, expecting to be reimbursed for the amount so paid.

Your committee are of opinion that Mr. Hamilton is entitled to the relief prayed for, and accordingly report back the bill, and recommend its passage.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

L. R. STRAUSS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 801) for the relief of L. R. Strauss, of Macon City, Missouri.

The bill was read. It appropriates to Leopold R. Strauss, out of any money heretofore appropriated or hereafter to be appropriated for the use of the Quartermaster's Department, the sum of $301.90 for clothing furnished the Army in the year 1864, by direction of the commanding general of the District of North Missouri.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 801) for the relief of Leopold R. Strauss, of Macon City, Missouri, make the following report:

General Clinton B. Fisk, commanding United States volunteers and the district of North Missouri, in the summer of 1864 found it necessary to equip a squad of cavalry as scouts, disguised as citizens, for military purposes, and ordered the purchase of clothing from the claimant without observing the rules and regulations of the Quartermaster's Department in that respect. In consequence of this informality, the claimant has never been paid.

It appears from the evidence submitted that the articles were required for an important emergency; they were purchased in good faith, for the public service, of a faithful and loyal citizen, at reasonable prices, and in the opinion of the committee ought to be paid for by the Government.

The committee therefore report back the bill, and recommend its passage.

An amendment reported by the committee, to strike out "$301.90" and insert "$201.90," was agreed to.

No objection being made, the bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

ESTATE OF THOMAS HORD.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 329 for the relief of the estate of Thomas Hord, deceased, of Tennessee.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. COBB,] who reported this bill, is not present. I think it had better lie over. I object to the bill.

BAKER WHITE'S CHILDREN.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3178, for the relief of the children of Baker White.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the children of Baker White, deceased, late of Edenton, Chowan County, North Carolina, or their legal representatives, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $660 for half-pay of a pilot during the time the said White was imprisoned in confederate prisons, he having been captured while in the Government service as a pilot, and died in a prison at Salisbury, North Carolina, in March, 1864, after twenty-two months' imprisonment.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Catherine Bessa, of Edenton, North Carolina, having considered the same, report.

Baker White was a resident of Edenton, in the county of Chowan, in the State of North Carolina, and was a Union man during the rebellion. In 1862, a draft was made in that county of men for the confederate service, and Baker White was drafted for said service. He thereupon fled, left his family, and went to Roanoke Island, and joined the forces of the Government of the United States. He entered the service of the Government of the United States as pilot, in the Quartermaster's Department. He was engaged as pilot on board of the steamer Hussar, and was in charge in that capacity under Colonel Howard in the transportation of Union troops. He was taken to Edenton, in said steamer, allowed to go on shore to visit his family, and was captured by rebel scouts on the 3d of May, 1862. He was imprisoned at Castle Thunder, and afterward at Salisbury, in which last place he died of smallpox in March, 1864, having been in prison about twenty-two months. He left a widow, who married again, and also two children; one of his children subsequently died.

It is recommended that pay to the amount of thirty dollars per month during the period of such imprisonment be allowed, and be paid to the surviving daughter, making the amount of $660; and your committee accordingly report a bill appropriating that amount, and recommend its passage.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN L. WILLIAMS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3179) for the relief of John L. Williams, of New York.

The bill was read. It appropriates $1,460, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to John L. Williams, of New York, to compensate him for the value of a cargo of hay taken and appropriated by the authorities of the Government in October, 1861.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2845) for the relief of John S. Williams, of New York, having considered the same, report—

That the facts, in detail, as to the origin of this claim are fully set forth in House report No. 512, on House bill No. 2844, for relief of Francis Dodge, and which may be briefly stated as follows: That Mr. Williams was the owner of the hay mentioned in said report, which he shipped on said schooner Fairfax from New York to Georgetown, District of Columbia, in October, 1861. That the hay therein mentioned formed the deck-load of said schooner Fairfax, which protected the United States gun-boat Resolute from the fire of rebel batteries, together with a vessel named the Lydia Ann, loaded with coal, thereby enabling them to safely pass said batteries, while the Fairfax, by reason of the obstructions placed in the river by the rebel forces, or by a shot from the said rebel batteries, became detached from the said gun-boat Resolute, drifted ashore, and, with her cargo, consisting of —— bales of hay, was destroyed by fire by the rebel forces.

Your committee find the value of the hay to be as stated in said petition, by certificates and vouchers of the parties who shipped the same from New York, and believing that Mr. Williams is justly entitled to compensation for the same, for reasons more fully set forth in said report No. 512, report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

N. H. DUNPHE.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3180) for the relief of N. H. Dunphe, of Massachusetts.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to N. H. Dunphe, of Bridgewater, Massachusetts, the sum of $6,180, in full compensation for fifty hogsheads of sugar, containing 61,800 pounds, which were seized by the military authorities of the United States at New Orleans in the year 1863, turned over to the Quartermaster's Department, and properly accounted for by that department.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the petition of N. H. Dunphe, of Massachusetts, having considered the same, report—

That in the year 1863 the claimant was the owner of seventy-five hogsheads of sugar, which, in the months of May and June of that year, were seized by the United States military authorities under command of Major-General Banks, a portion of which has been regularly accounted for by the proper officers, to wit, fifty hogsheads, containing sixty-one thousand eight hundred pounds, for which he claims compensation at the rate of fourteen cents per pound.

Your committee find, from the evidence presented, that the proof of taking the fifty hogsheads is complete and satisfactory, the same being turned over to the Quartermaster's Department at New Orleans, and that said sugar was used by the Army of the United States; and they therefore report the accompanying bill appropriating the sum of $6,180, and recommend its passage.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

MARY A. THAYER.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3181) for the relief of Mary A. Thayer.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Mrs. Mary A. Thayer the sum of $2,000 as compensation for services rendered in taking care of wounded Union soldiers during the late war, and in reimbursement for money expended by her in supplying the wants and necessities of such soldiers.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2514) for the relief of Mrs. Mary A. Thayer, having considered the same, report:

That Mrs. Thayer removed to Washington from the State of New York early in the year 1862; that from August of that year, after the second battle of Bull Run, she commenced her labors as a nurse, visiting numerous battle-fields, where she aided in taking care of wounded Union soldiers, aiding also in their transfer to the various hospitals to which they were assigned, especially after the battles of South Mountain and Antietam, among the wounded at the last-named battle being General Joseph Hooker, whom she aided in removing to a hospital and caring for him afterward; that she was present at the battle of Chancellorsville, and after the battle returned with the wounded to Washington, where she remained the greater portion of the time, until the battle of Gettysburgh, where she was occupied in caring for wounded soldiers and looking after their transfer to various hospitals; that she continued her visits to the hospitals and camps in and about Washington until the spring of 1864, when she went to Belle Island, at the request of Secretary Stanton, to assist in caring for and removing the released and exchanged prisoners of war, accompanying many to Annapolis, where she remained for a considerable time, paying her own board, and furnishing to the sick many articles not provided by the Medical Department. Subsequently Mrs. Thayer twice visited Andersonville, where she was occupied in caring for sick and suffering Union soldiers, returning from thence to be present after the battles of the Wilderness, where she labored zealously and faithfully in caring for the wounded, aiding in their removal from the burning woods, her own life being frequently endangered by fire, her clothing on several occasions taking fire. Mrs. Thayer continued her noble work until some time after the close of the war, and while residing in Washington was constantly engaged in relieving the wants of sick and wounded soldiers, obtaining from her father and personal friends means to do this, and using from her own scanty means also in this cause.

Among numerous testimonials as to Mrs. Thayer's services is the following:

WASHINGTON, February 18, 1874.

To whom it may concern:

The bearer of this note, Mrs. Mary A. Thayer, was for several years a visitor of Armory Square hospital during the late war and was a most valuable nurse, expending her means freely, and laboring constantly for the care of the sick and wounded.

Mrs. Thayer was specially fitted for this service, always performing her labors in a conscientious, effective, and unostentatious manner. I do not hesitate to say that she is one of the few deserving women whose services were invaluable to the Government and cause of humanity.

D. W. BLISS, M. D.,
Brevet Colonel, late Surgeon in Charge United States General Hospital, Armory Square, Washington.

There is considerable evidence from Army officers, as well as private soldiers, showing that Mrs. Thayer was unwearied in her labors and efforts for the sick and wounded soldiers of the Union, and also from civilians who were engaged in or connected with soldiers' relief associations and commissions.

The following sworn statement of H. H. Sperry, esq., for many years file-clerk of the House of Representatives document-room, is also given, as showing the character of Mrs. Thayer's labors:

24 TRINITY PLACE, NEW YORK, February 20, 1874.

My first acquaintance with Mrs. A. P. Thayer was in the summer of 1862, about the time of the battle of Manassas, when the wounded soldiers were being brought to Washington. At that time I, with a number of others from my State, was devoting most of my time in the care of our wounded scattered throughout the city, in churches, private houses, Capitol, and hospitals. Wherever I went I saw Mrs. Thayer doing her work of benevolence. I have met her at the cars, where the wounded were being transferred to ambulances and carried on stretchers to the places designated, and seen her follow them with such comforts as she could obtain, and tend them with a mother's care. The same course was pursued after the battles of Antietam and Chancellorsville, and at others she was specially active. Her home was the home of many crippled and despairing soldiers, and wherever she could be useful she was willing to go.

I have a distinct recollection of her benevolent exertions after and during the battles of the Wilderness and throughout the entire season of 1864. She was not only useful in the hospitals and by the bedside of the sick, but often attended to the embalming and shipment to friends of the dead bodies of our soldiers.

I have no means of knowing the fact, but I supposed at the time that she must draw largely from her own means to carry out her benevolent schemes.

H. H. SPERRY.

Sworn before me this 21st day of February, 1874.

WILLIAM H. CORTELYOU,
Notary Public, Kings County.

Mrs. Thayer is now in reduced circumstances, and asks that Congress will recognize her services and grant her something as compensation for the same, as well as reimburse her to some extent for money expended in ministering to the wants of sick and wounded soldiers.

Your committee regard her claim as one of special merit, and believing that the Government should consider favorably such claims as Mrs. Thayer's, report back the accompanying bill as a substitute for H. R. No. 2514, appropriating $2,000, and recommend its passage.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JAMES BARNETT'S HEIRS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3182) for the relief of the heirs of James Barnett, deceased.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the heirs of James Barnett, deceased, who was a lieutenant in the Second Virginia Regiment on continental establishment during the revolutionary war, and who, by reason of the loss of an eye in the service, was retired in 1779, in accordance with a provision of an act of the Continental Congress, the amount of pay of a first lieutenant of said regiment for five years, in accordance with the provisions of an act approved March 27, 1783.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I object to this bill.

JONATHAN D. HALE.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3183) for the relief of Jonathan D. Hale.

The bill was read. It directs the proper accounting officer of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Jonathan D. Hale $3,425, in full for services rendered in the late war as recruiting officer, scout, and guide for the United States Army, and for two horses lost in that Army.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the claim of Jonathan D. Hale, of Fentress County, Tennessee, asking compensation for services as recruiting officer, guide, and scout, and for the loss of four horses in the Army of the United States, make the following report:

The claimant, Jonathan D. Hale, presents in the record two claims, to wit:

1. Claim for services during the greater part of the war as recruiting officer, guide, spy, and scout, a portion of which he claims is due and unpaid.

2. For the loss of four horses in the Army.

The claim for services as guide, spy, and scout during the greater part of the war seems to be well sustained by the evidence of General George H. Thomas, who says:

"Dr. Hale's statement of his services under my orders are true, and I remember that General Nelson recommended him very highly to me when I relieved him (Nelson) in command of the troops at Camp Dick Robinson, Kentucky. I have every reason to believe that he has received no pay for services rendered, except as stated by him, namely, what was paid by my order, while under my immediate command, from January 1, 1861, to March, 1864, except the three months paid by General Boyle's order while the doctor was temporarily under his command in Kentucky, and four months for which he received no pay should have been paid, I suppose, by General Boyle. While under me he received $150 per month as chief of scouts and guides. I earnestly recommend his statement to favorable consideration. He performed valuable service, and there is but little doubt that his property was destroyed by the rebels of his county and neighborhood because of his known loyalty to the Government."

It seems from the proof that the claimant was never mustered into the service. General Schoeff says:

"For the reason that General Thomas thought, in case you should be captured as an enlisted man beyond our lines, your fate would be sealed, whereas as a citizen of Tennessee you were free to move, and no one could molest you beyond detention."

General J. G. Parkhurst proves that Dr. Hale rendered valuable service "as guide, scout, and spy, and was intelligent and energetic in his efforts, and always reliable, * * * and I am confident that on many occasions the success of our Army was attributable to information furnished by Dr. Hale," and further proves that he was continuously in the service from December, 1862, until the close of the war; and the record shows that he was acting under order of General Thomas as late as July 26, 1865, and on the most important duty for the country, having been sent at that time from Nashville, Tennessee, to the State of Indiana, with full authority to bring such witnesses as he might deem material in the prosecution of Champ Ferguson.

It appears from the proof that claimant served continuously from the 1st of July, 1861, until the 30th of September, 1865.

The record evidence shows that he was acting under the orders of General Nelson as early as August 12, 1861, and again under the orders of General Thomas as late as the 26th day of July, 1865.

The record further shows that claimant was paid for his services at the rate of $150 per month for the following months:

1862. January, February, March, April, May, June, July, August, September, and December, ten months	$1,505
1863. January, February, March, June, July, August, September, October, and November, nine months	1,315
1864. February and March, two months, (a few days deducted)	269
Making in all the sum of	3,084

He now claims pay for his services for the following time:

1861. From July 1 to December 31, inclusive, six months	$900
1862. October and November, two months	300
1863. April, May, and December, three months	450
1864. January, April, May, June, July, August September, October, November, and December, ten months	1,500
1865. From January 1 to September 30, inclusive, nine months	1,350
Making the sum of	4,500

The committee rejected the item of $900 for the six months' service in 1861, and also struck out the sum of $450 from the item of $1,350 for services in 1865, reducing the claim to $3,150.

The claimant swears positively that he served continuously during the time stated in the foregoing statement, and that he has received no pay in any manner for the same, except as stated in the said account, and he is fully corroborated by other testimony in nearly all that he says. And as to his loyalty to the United States Government, the proof is ample, and for which loyalty and unflinching devotion to the cause of the Union he was made the mark for rebel depredations, and the proof shows that they burned his mills, shops, barns, dwellings, and out-houses, and destroyed all his visible means except his land, and reduced him from affluence to poverty.

Dr. Hale enjoyed so very fully the entire confidence of General Nelson, General Thomas, General Schoeff, General Parkhurst, and other officers, that the committee are bound to give full credit to his statement.

As to the claim for the four horses, the committee find that the proof is made only for two of them, one worth $125 and the other worth $150, making $275, which, added to the account for services, amounts to the sum of $3,425.

The committee are of opinion, therefore, in consideration of the very valuable services rendered by Dr. Hale, and the great risk, hazard, and peril of life undergone by him, and for the loss of his two horses, he should be remunerated, and recommend that he be paid the sum of $3,425, and present the accompanying bill, with the recommendation that it do pass.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

FRANCIS DODGE.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2844) granting relief to Francis Dodge.

The bill was read. It appropriates $10,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Francis Dodge, trustee for the owners of the schooner Fairfax, as compensation for the loss and destruction of that schooner in October, 1861, by reason of the seizure and appropriation of the same by the naval authorities of the Government.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2844) for the relief of Francis Dodge, having considered the same, report:

That this is a claim for the value of the schooner Fairfax, which prior to the war was engaged in a regular trade between New York City and Georgetown, District of Columbia; that on the 4th day of October, 1861, she left the former city en route for Georgetown, loaded with a cargo of hay, cement, and furniture; that on the 17th day of said month the said schooner Fairfax reached Maryland Point, on the Potomac River, where were about thirty sail of vessels under the protection of the gun-boat Philadelphia, the commander of which informed the captain of the Fairfax that he had received orders from the commander of the Potomac flotilla not to allow vessels to pass up the river until permission was given by him, and that on the 18th of October the master of the Fairfax was notified by the commander of the Philadelphia that he might get his vessel under way and proceed up the river as far as Ward's Bay.

It further appears that the Fairfax proceeded on her voyage up the river as far as Ward's Bay and anchored near the gun-boat Union, the commander of which sent word to the master of the Fairfax that he must not proceed up the river until after a white light had been hoisted at the foreyard of said gun-boat Union; that about two o'clock on the morning of the 19th of October the aforesaid signal was displayed from the gun-boat; that as there was not sufficient wind to warrant the belief that the Fairfax could pass the rebel batteries before daylight, he decided not to make the attempt.

It further appears that while the master of the Fairfax was on board the gun-boat Union in conference with the commander thereof, the commander of another United States steamer, the Resolute, went to the Fairfax and directed her crew to get said vessel in readiness to be towed up the river by the Resolute, serving as a bulwark, for which service or purpose her deck-load of hay made her desirable; that the Fairfax was so taken, and that on coming within the range of the rebel batteries she served as an effectual protection to the Resolute, receiving over fifty shot and shell, while only two hit the Resolute with small shot; that owing to some obstruction in the river or to the severing of the rope by which the Fairfax was made fast to the Resolute the former-named vessel parted from the Resolute and drifted down the river, being abandoned by her crew to escape the fire of the enemy, and soon after went ashore on the Virginia side of the river, where she was boarded by the rebels and burned.

It also further appears that the Resolute, in consequence of being shielded by the deck-load of hay which formed a part of the cargo of the Fairfax, was enabled to proceed on her voyage without receiving any damage, and reached the navy-yard at Washington that evening, having in tow another vessel, named the Lydia Ann, loaded with coal, of which the Government authorities at Washington were then in need, which vessel was lashed to the Resolute on the opposite side from the Fairfax, which last-named vessel was also protected as well as the Resolute by the said vessel Fairfax, and but for which protection they could not have passed the rebel batteries.

It also appears that but for the detention of the Fairfax at Maryland Point by the United States gun-boat Philadelphia she could have proceeded on her voyage and passed the aforesaid rebel batteries, owing to the fact of her light draught, thereby being able to keep out of the range of the enemy's guns; and further, that this claim has been presented to both the War and Navy Departments, and rejected by both for want of jurisdiction.

Your committee are of opinion that the Government is justly bound to make compensation to the owners of the said schooner Fairfax, not only on the ground that but for the detention of the said schooner by United States naval authorities she would have reached her destination in safety, but on the ground that the said schooner was taken for naval and military purposes, for which to the owners, being loyal adherents of the Government, compensation is justly due. The case of Otis N. Cutler, whose cotton was seized by order of General Grant, at Lake Providence, Louisiana, used for military purposes in equipping the United States steamer Tigress for running the blockade of Vicksburgh in April, 1863, and which was destroyed, is precisely analogous to this. By act approved June 1, 1870, (16 Statutes, page 640,) Mr. Cutler was paid for his cotton.

Your committee believing, as before stated, that compensation is justly due Mr. Dodge for the schooner Fairfax, taken by the Government for naval and military purposes, and finding the value of the schooner and cargo to be proved as stated in the bill, and that Mr. Dodge was a loyal man, report back the bill and recommend its passage.

An amendment reported by the committee to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$6,000" was agreed to.

No objection being made, the bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

ADAM HINE.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 182) for the relief of Adam Hine.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Adam Hine, of Keokuk, Iowa, $10,000 in full settlement of the claim of Hine on account of the loss of the steamer Island City, which was seized by the Government of the United States and impressed into the service of the Government in the year 1864, at Saint Louis, Missouri, and wrecked and lost while in such service.

The report was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. For the purpose of enabling the committee to consider the question who is responsible for the marine risk in this case—who assumed that risk—I think the bill ought to go over. I object to it.

Mr. KELLOGG. We have deducted insurance-money and everything else of the kind, and have only allowed the balance.

Mr. HOLMAN. I prefer that the balance should go over. I insist on my objection.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. HERNDON. Before that motion is put I ask unanimous consent that a bill which was objected to three weeks ago may be taken up and passed. It is very short; and it has the unanimous report of the committee in its favor.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Very well. I withdraw my motion.

BENJAMIN W. REYNOLDS.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2694) for the relief of Benjamin W. Reynolds.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $1,233.33 to Benjamin W. Reynolds, late United States depositary at Saint Croix Falls, Wisconsin, for compensation for his services as depositary, between the 26th day of October, 1861, and the 26th day of November, 1864.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands have had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 581) for the relief of Benjamin W. Reynolds, and respectfully report:

That said Reynolds, of La Crosse, Wisconsin, was appointed receiver of public moneys at Falls Saint Croix, in that State, March 28, 1861, and entered upon the duties of his office May 16, 1861; he was also disbursing agent and timber agent in the Saint Croix district; he was also United States depositary. His bond as disbursing agent was $5,000; as receiver, $50,000; and as depositary, $200,000.

He satisfactorily discharged his several duties till July 15, 1864. It appears from a letter received from the Commissioner of the General Land Office under date of February 28, 1872, that during that period the public money received by him amounted to the sum of $30,599.93, namely:

From proceeds of sales of public lands	$24,805 02
From $10 Goverment fees on homesteads	2,850 00
		$27,655 02
Fees for locating military warrants	858 00
And commissions on homesteads	580 78
Both paid over to register and receiver		1,438 78
From timber depredations, covered into the Treasury to the credit of judiciary fund		1,506 13

His receiver's, disbursing, and timber accounts appear to have been settled. During the period he was in office his entire compensation as receiver, including salary, commissions, and all other fees, amounted to $2,403.61, while from vouchers on file it appears that during the same period he paid as extra clerk hire $2,175.30. It will thus appear that he received less than $800 per year, and was under bonds to the aggregate amount of $255,000. He received no compensation for his services as United States depositary or as timber agent. As already stated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, he paid for extra clerk hire $2,175.30.

During his term two hundred and eighty-three homestead entries were made in his office. They were ordinarily one hundred and sixty acre or eighty double minimum entries. For these entries but half-fees were then allowed. Now the land offices receive full fees for this class of entries. Mr. Reynolds made a full statement to your committee of the nature and amount of work performed by him; and also declared himself ready to make oath that he received no other fees than those given in the foregoing statement.

It appears that by act of March 3, 1863, the receiver of public moneys at Santa Fé was granted $2,000 as depositary; also, in 1864 and in 1865, and by act of July 28, 1866, $1,000 was granted to depositary at Santa Fé, and by act of 1868, $4,000 was granted to receiver acting as depositary at Santa Fé, namely: $2,000 as salary, balance for clerk hire. Other precedents exist.

It appears that Congress paid him for clerk hire $2,175.30, by act approved June 8, 1872. This amount was for disbursements made. The claimant, therefore, received for his entire services only the amount stated, namely, $2,403.61, or less than $800 per annum, and at a period in the history of public-land matters when the greatest care and vigilance were called for and seem to have been exercised by the claimant. As he has, moreover, never had any compensation for his services and large responsibilities as a depositary of public moneys, appointed under act of Congress approved August 8, 1849, and as he still continues to hold public moneys, including those received from other sources than the sale of public lands, or by virtue of his office as receiver of public moneys after he ceased to be receiver, your committee recommend that the claimant be allowed the sum of $400 per annum for the period in which he served as United States depositary, from October 26, 1861, to November 21, 1864, four years, one month, and twenty-five days, and report back the accompanying substitute for the amount of $1,233.33.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask unanimous consent to recur to a bill that has been passed over.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I renew the motion that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS TO WIDOWS, ETC., OF MURDERED SOLDIERS.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, moved to amend the amendment of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to the bill (H. R. No. 3021) granting pensions to the widows, children, dependent mothers and fathers, or orphan brothers and sisters, of those soldiers who were murdered by guerrillas at Centralia, Missouri, in 1864, by inserting the words "lately discharged;" so it will read "those lately discharged soldiers of the United States Army."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to submit a report on the amendments of the Senate to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. I move that the report be printed and recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 103) authorizing the President to issue Army rations and clothing to the destitute people on the Tombigbee, Warrior, and Alabama Rivers.

NORTHERN NEW YORK JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

Mr. SMITH, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 23, 1874.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. A. C. OSBORN, of New York.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

LEE & DUNBAR.

Mr. STARKWEATHER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the papers in the case of Lee & Dunbar, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that they be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to call up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for action on the Senate amendments, and ask that the House by unanimous consent will allow it to be considered in the House under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The regular order until sixty minutes after the reading of the Journal is the consideration of the bill reported by the Committee on Ways and Means in regard to the Sanborn contracts, on which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is entitled to the floor. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, desires the attention of the House to a bill from that committee.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will not insist on going on to-day. Let the Sanborn matter go over for the present.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I thought the Military Committee had the floor to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Military Affairs is entitled to the floor one hour after the reading of the Journal, that is, at fifteen minutes past twelve o'clock.

Mr. BECK. If I yield to-day, I wish to reserve the right and position of the bill in regard to the Sanborn matter.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be disturbed, or the gentleman's right to the floor.

Mr. DAWES. What will be the position of the report from the Committee on Ways and Means in regard to the Sanborn contracts if the gentleman from Kentucky does not maintain his right to-day?

The SPEAKER. The condition of it would be that on Monday the House may proceed to consider it under a suspension of the rules; and, if that is not done, on Tuesday morning after the reading of the Journal it comes up of its own force.

Mr. DAWES. Not on Tuesday, because that day is assigned to the Committee on Ways and Means for other business.

The SPEAKER. Tuesday is assigned to the Committee on Ways and Means one hour after the reading of the Journal, and Wednesday to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DAWES. Will this report in regard to the Sanborn contract exclude the other reports from the Committee on Ways and Means?

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. DAWES. Then it will go over till Thursday.

The SPEAKER. It will be entitled, as this morning, to an hour each morning. It is entitled now to an hour, the Military Committee having the day one hour after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to yield to me.

Mr. BECK. I am entirely willing to yield to the gentleman from Ohio. But I wish to ask whether all this is coming out of my time?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Kentucky does not choose to go on, the Chair will then submit to the House whether they will allow the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] to make a report from the Committee on War Claims or the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to proceed with the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. BECK. I yield the floor for to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] desires to present a report from the Committee on War Claims. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] raises the question of consideration with a view to proceed with the consideration of the amendments to the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. COBURN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the Committee on Ways and Means does not see fit to go on to-day, why would it not be in order that the Committee on Military Affairs should have the hour that is given up?

The SPEAKER. Because the Committee on Military Affairs are specifically limited as to the time when they get possession of the floor to sixty minutes after the reading of the Journal. The Committee on Ways and Means having yielded the floor, the House may by a majority vote determine what they will do with it.

Mr. COBURN. I wish to state to the House that the Committee on Military Affairs have a large number of bills which they desire to present for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The committee will have the entire day after a quarter past twelve o'clock.

Mr. COBURN. I am afraid that we will not be able to get through in that time. We have already been put off for two months almost, and I think are entitled to some consideration at the hands of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations will have difficulty in getting through with its work unless the House allows us to go on now.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is very important that the report from the Committee on War Claims should be brought up for consideration.

The question being taken on Mr. LAWRENCE'S motion that he have leave to present a report from the Committee on War Claims, and there were ayes 35, noes not counted.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. No. 2064) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, with the amendments of the Senate and the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations in regard to said amendments.

If gentlemen will send for Report No. 603 they will find in it all the amendments that have been made to the bill, and the recommendations of the committee. In reading the amendments the Clerk will follow the engrossed bill. The amendments have all been numbered in the House print of bill No. 3534 and are referred to by their numbers in the printed report of the committee. There are one hundred and forty-seven amendments made by the Senate to the bill. In forty of them the Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence, in ninety-nine they recommend non-concurrence, and in eight they recommend concurrence with amendments. I suggest that unless objection is made the recommendations of the committee shall be considered as concurred in.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments; and the recommendations of the committee were concurred in, except where a separate vote was demanded.

The Clerk read an amendment of the Senate, to strike out after "Chief Clerk and Journal clerk of the House" the words "while such positions are held by the present incumbents, and no longer."

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know why that amendment should be concurred in. Whenever we think that these officers are not worthy of that salary we can reduce it. But it is an invidious distinction among the officers of the House to make this provision in regard to two of them only.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say in regard to this amendment that the language of the provision as adopted by the House follows the law exactly. The law provided that these two officers, in consequence of their long service, should have this increase of compensation during their incumbency of the positions; that was the law of last year. I will say that the Committee on Appropriations were divided in regard to the propriety of concurring or non-concurring in this amendment of the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. I am in favor of concurring in it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I was in favor of concurring in it, but was overruled by the committee.

The question was taken; and the amendment was not concurred in.

The Clerk read an amendment of the Senate, to reduce the salary of the Chief Clerk and Journal clerk of the House from $3,600 to $3,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that amendment will be concurred in. It is very true the House adopted a proposition to fix the salary of these officers at $3,600, but I think the amendment should be concurred in.

Mr. RANDALL. We might take the vote together upon the three amendments relating to the clerks of the House.

Mr. KELLOGG. This provision was adopted by a large majority of the House, and I do not think we should consent to the action of the Senate in regard to the House employés.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the House should have the control of its own employés without the interference of the Senate.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think so.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not willing to make any concession to the Senate. This is not a matter concerning the Senate and the House of Representatives particularly, but a question of public concern. If it was a question concerning the members of the House alone, I should be very loath to permit any amendment of the Senate which should provide for reducing the salaries of officers of the House who have performed their duty so well. But this amendment of the Senate is a protest against increase of salaries; they object to our going back to the rates which were established by the legislation of last winter. They are insisting that the House shall not go back and re-enact the salaries which the public judgment compelled us to repeal.

Mr. RANDALL. Excuse me; the Senate took no such position. I find that in other parts of the bill they have increased the salaries of their own employés.

Mr. FORT. Yes; they increase the salaries of their own employés, and I propose that the House stand by its action in regard to its own employés.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the vote be taken at the same time upon all the amendments relating to the clerks of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. That is right.

The provision of the bill as adopted by the House was as follows:

Chief Clerk and Journal clerk of the House, (while such positions are held by the present incumbents and no longer,) $3,600 each; two reading clerks, assistant Journal clerk, and tally clerk, $3,000 each.

The Senate by their amendments propose to change the provision to read as follows:

Chief Clerk and Journal clerk of the House, $3,000 each; two reading clerks, assistant Journal clerk, and tally clerk, $2,592.

The question was taken upon concurring in the amendments of the Senate; and upon a division there were ayes 14, noes not counted.

So the amendments were not concurred in.

The following amendment was read:

Strike out of the paragraph in relation to public printing the following:

Provided, That so much of the act entitled "An act providing for the election of a Congressional Printer," approved February 22, 1867, as provides for the election of such officer by the Senate, and provides that such officer shall be deemed an officer of the Senate, be, and the same hereby is, repealed; that the title of said officer shall hereafter be "Public Printer," and he shall be deemed an officer of the United States; and whenever a vacancy in said office shall hereafter occur, the same shall be filled by appointment by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. GARFIELD. That provision was inserted in the bill by the House after the bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations. The committee thought that they were bound to adhere to the vote of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that there will be a vote upon concurring in this amendment.

Mr. DONNAN. The House adopted this provision after quite a full discussion by a very decisive vote. I do not believe it is necessary to reargue the question, and I hope the House will non-concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for a division upon this question, in order that the vote may be in the nature of an instruction to the committee of conference which will probably be appointed upon this bill.

The question was taken upon concurring in the amendments of the Senate; and upon a division there were ayes none, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not concurred in.

An amendment of the Senate was read to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses of the executive office from $4,000 to $6,000.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Why should that amendment be concurred in?

Mr. GARFIELD. The appropriation last year for this purpose was $6,000 and the Committee on Appropriations this year reported the same amount for the same purpose. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] moved to reduce it to $4,000, and we allowed it to be passed, supposing he had some special reason for it. He afterward said to the committee that he was satisfied he had made a mistake. The Senate has restored the amount originally appropriated, and the Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence in the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I think we should non-concur in that amendment.

The question was taken upon concurring in the amendment; and upon a division—ayes 25, noes not counted—it was not concurred in.

An amendment of the Senate was read to insert the following:

And one additional Assistant Secretary of State, with like compensation, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to be known as the Third Assistant Secretary of State.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to call the attention of the House for a moment to these amendments which run through the portion of this bill relating to the Department of State. Early in this session the Committee on Foreign Affairs had before them a bill for the reorganization of the State Department. They did not get it into the House in time to be acted upon until after this appropriation bill was passed. In the Senate the Committee on Foreign Affairs had the same bill under consideration and reported unanimously in favor of the proposed reorganization. The Committee on Appropriations, to whom the matter was referred in the Senate, after considering it, also unanimously concurred in the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs proposing this reorganization. The subject ought to be acted on as a whole, and if I can have the attention of the House for a few minutes I will state what the point is.

Last year there was by law an organization of Bureaus in the State Department, but no further organization—simply a division into six Bureaus with a chief at the head of each. The Secretary of State was yesterday before the Committee on Appropriations with all the papers in the case; and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. ORTH] was also before us. The Secretary of State says that he is compelled to work the clerks in his Department from one to three hours more daily than the clerks in any other Department are worked; that he has now a smaller force, and with the increase here proposed will still have a smaller force than he found in the Department in 1869 when he came in. He is satisfied that at that time the force of the Department was cut down too much for its efficiency. His clerks are overworked and cannot perform their duties as efficiently as they ought to be performed without the reorganization here asked for. In order that this reorganization shall not be a charge upon the Treasury, he suggests an amendment which gentlemen will find at the bottom of the sixteenth page, providing for a restoration of the tax on passports—a charge of five dollars on each citizen obtaining a passport. The receipts of the Department from this tax during the last three or four years that it was in operation were on the average $45,000 a year. The reorganization here asked for will involve an increased expenditure of $14,500 per annum.

The Secretary of State has said to the committee that he really wants but two classes of clerks—copyists, and clerks of experience fitted for the higher duties of the Department. The middle class of clerks, who are neither very experienced nor fitted for higher duties, are not valuable; he would rather have merely the two grades—those at a small rate of pay and acting as copyists, and clerks of experience and efficiency. The reorganization here proposed will give the Secretary a considerable number of $900 clerks, copyists, a lower grade of clerks than he now has. The theory of the Secretary of State is that if we give him this lower grade of clerks, he can educate them up and fit them for the higher duties of clerks by a term of service in the lower grade of duty. There will thus be a sort of system of promotion, under which clerks of the lower grade doing copying merely may, as they develop themselves in fitness and culture, be promoted to a higher rank. Those who go into the State Department as $900 clerks will serve a sort of apprenticeship, and by degrees advance as they are fitted to fill vacancies in the higher grades.

The amendments also include provisions for a translator. The Secretary of State now has in this capacity an officer who is very valuable, being familiar with five languages, one of the most accomplished translators that he has ever been able to obtain and who cannot be retained at the pay of an $1,800 clerk. The Secretary therefore asks among other changes that he shall be allowed a translator with a salary large enough to retain the service of a competent person. We cannot expect to find among the range of $1,800 clerks a man competent for the business of translator as required in the State Department.

In view of the fact that both the House and Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs and also the Senate Committee on Appropriations are unanimous in recommending this series of amendments, which while taking out of the Treasury $14,500 will put into it $45,000, the Committee on Appropriations are of opinion that these amendments, from the thirtieth amendment down to the middle of the seventeenth page, should be concurred in.

Mr. RANDALL. I observe by the printed report which has been furnished to us that the committee recommend non-concurrence in the thirtieth amendment, yet the gentleman now states, as I understand him, that the committee are unanimous for concurrence.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will say that the report which the gentleman holds in his hand was printed before the action of the committee on this subject. When that report was prepared the Secretary of State had not been before us; and we recommended non-concurrence because we had no special information on the subject.

A gentleman asks me to state the ground on which the passport tax was repealed. The repeal was made at a time when we were making a general reduction of taxes, and there was no special debate on that proposition; I believe there was never anything said about it. This tax was in a group of internal taxes which had been collected, and when we made a general reduction of those taxes this tax went out with the rest. There was no special action of the House on the subject.

As suggested to me by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] this is a fair tax; for no class of people can better afford to pay a tax to the Treasury than those who are able to travel abroad. We now keep constantly employed an average of three or four clerks in the passport office of the Department of State to make out passports and keep the records, and this service is now all done without any compensation from the parties benefited. Five dollars was the amount of the old tax, and this is the amount we recommend to be re-enacted, although there was some question whether it ought not to be ten dollars. The committee recommend concurrence in all these amendments relating to the Department of State except one at the close, to which we offer a modification.

Mr. NIBLACK. I wish to ask the gentlemon from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] a question. I understand that the object of reimposing this tax on passports is to reimburse the Treasury for the expenditures involved in this proposed reorganization of the State Department. If that be true, why do the committee recommend a larger tax than is necessary to reimburse the Treasury?

Mr. GARFIELD. It was the old rate, and the tax was never an onerous one. It seems to me just as well we should put this $30,000 into the Treasury every year as not.

Mr. NIBLACK. As to the class of men going abroad for pleasure this perhaps is little enough, but there are men who travel upon urgent business, naturalized American citizens who return to Europe to visit their friends, and upon that class the passport tax will be troublesome.

Mr. GARFIELD. That class will scarcely get passports. Only those who travel for pleasure will. Indeed no passport is required except in two countries of Europe, in Russia and Italy. In the German states and in Western Europe no passport is required. None is required in Ireland, none anywhere in Great Britain, none in any of the German States. The class of naturalized citizens to whom the gentleman refers probably not one in a thousand, unless they go abroad for the purpose of pleasure, for the purpose of general travel, ever call for a passport.

Mr. NIBLACK. Some years ago I know I was called upon frequently to get passports for naturalized citizens traveling to their old homes on business, and this tax of five dollars was paid by some men who were scarcely able to pay the money, but who were compelled to pay it, as their business required them to go abroad, and in order to do so had to procure passports. Unless it is absolutely necessary to reimburse the Treasury I do not see why the tax should be re-enacted.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service to the fact that these amendments decidedly interfere with the civil-service rule and work the entire overthrow of the civil-service reform in that department of the Government. I therefore trust I will be heard in defense of that civil-service system.

FREE BANKING.

Mr. FARWELL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported a substitute for the Senate amendments to House bill No. 1572, to amend the several acts providing for a national currency and to establish free banking, and for other purposes; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to say that this matter has been before the Civil Service Committee. As it had been already considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which was most competent to judge in reference to the whole subject, the Committee on the Civil Service have made no report in reference to the State Department. There is one point, however, to which I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as well as the attention of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and that is this: I wish to know whether they do not think it is better, instead of having three Assistant Secretaries of State with a compensation of $3,500 each, as it is here proposed, to have two competent Assistant Secretaries of State at a compensation of $5,000 each? The present salaries have been admitted to be entirely inadequate to procure competent men for this position of Assistant Secretary of State. It is here proposed to make an additional Secretary of State, which will make the number three. I submit if we have two Assistant Secretaries of State, competent men, entitled to $5,000 a year, it will be better to pay them $10,000 than to pay three $10,500. That is the only point I wish to make.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say while that point is up that the Secretary of State made this statement to us, and I think the House will see its importance: He says there are three natural groups of nations we have to deal with, each of which requires special and peculiar qualities to understand and manage its affairs here at the State Department. One class is composed of the English-speaking races and another of the Latin races. Their habits are different, their characteristics are different, and the kind of qualities requisite for the management of their affairs is different. These two Assistant Secretaries of State are needed for them. We have lately opened relations with a class of people who are not Christian nations, like the Japanese and Chinese. They have been added to our foreign relations within a recent period. The Secretary of State, in order to group these nations properly in reference to our foreign relations and to accomplish his work more satisfactorily, asks these three Assistant Secretaries of State shall be granted. I yield now for a few minutes to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. ORTH. I will add but a word in favor of these amendments to what has already been so well said by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. At an early part of the session the Committee on Foreign Affairs had this whole subject under consideration, and unanimously authorized me to report the bill now upon the files of the House, providing for a reorganization of the State Department, the provisions of which have been substantially adopted by the Senate in the amendments now reported to this House. I trust these amendments of the Senate will meet the concurrence of the House. I need hardly add what is so generally admitted, that the State Department is managed ably and economically, and that its recommendations in reference to these and other matters within its purview have been such only as are demanded by a due regard to the public interests and the constantly increasing business of the Department. While the business of the Department in common with the other Departments of the Government is rapidly increasing, yet its working force is not as large to-day as it was some years ago. Compared with the Department under the supervision of Secretary Seward, there has been a reduction of the clerical force, while at the same time there has been a steady increase in the labor to be performed.

As an evidence of this steady increase from the organization of the Government down to the present time, I hold in my hand a most interesting statement furnished me by the Department, and which I shall incorporate in my remarks in the RECORD, as follows:

I will state in brief, without going over the several amendments seriatim, that the amount of increase of expenditure contemplated by them is something in the neighborhood of $14,000, and at the same time we provide for this increased expenditure by a charge upon passports, which it is estimated will bring into the Treasury annually not less than $45,000. The number of passports issued from the State Department under the several administrations since 1810 is shown by the following statement:

Under the administration of—
Mr. Madison, 1810 to 1813*	587
Mr. Madison, 1813 to 1817	512
Mr. Monroe, 1817 to 1821	547
Mr. Monroe, 1821 to 1825	657
Mr. Adams, 1825 to 1829	1,118
General Jackson, 1829 to 1833	1,176
General Jackson, 1833 to 1837	1,896
Mr. Van Buren, 1837 to 1841	1,972
General Harrison and Mr. Tyler, 1841 to 1845	2,835
Mr. Polk, 1845 to 1849	5,377
General Taylor and Mr. Fillmore, 1849 to 1853	10,666
General Pierce, 1853 to 1857	12,429
Mr. Buchanan, 1857 to 1861	22,490
Mr. Lincoln, 1861 to 1865	18,196
Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Johnson, 1865 to 1869	22,487
General Grant, 1869 to 1873	27,421
Total	130,366

From this it will appear that the number of passports now averages about nine thousand per annum, which at the charge of five dollars each will yield a revenue to the Treasury, as already stated, of about $45,000; an amount more than three times in excess of the increased expenditures asked for in the Senate amendments to this bill. With these remarks I submit these amendments to the judgment of the House and ask their concurrence in them.

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield a few minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. RANDALL. Whether we concur in the Senate amendment which allows the charge of five dollars for each passport or leave it free as now, or fix it at three dollars, it matters not so far as the increase of these officers is concerned. The argument, so far as I can comprehend it, is this: Because we propose to raise for the Government through the charge for passports $45,000, therefore we ought to accept this increase of the number of employés in the State Department. That, sir, is the semblance of excuse offered for this amendment. In other words, this mode of taxing the people who go abroad is made a reason why the clerical force and the officers of the State Department should be increased.

Now, sir, I venture to say that there has been no time within twenty years that the foreign relations of this Government required less clerical service than now. In fact there is not, so far as I can see, any possible need of an additional Secretary of State or clerk in that Department; nor has any gentleman yet to my mind adduced a single satisfactory reason for it.

The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs says there has been a reduction in the force of the Department since the time of Secretary Seward. Why, sir, we know that Mr. Seward had to deal with all the civilized nations in connection with our foreign affairs to keep them away from any interference with our war. And surely the gentleman will not tell us that the Secretary of State and the Department of State require now the services of any such number of men as were required during the period of the war with our confederate friends.

Mr. ORTH. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the records of the Department show a very large increase in the amount of work performed by the Department.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to refer to just one other point. Whether we charge for passports or not, that whole work in the past has been done with the present number in the State Department. Therefore why increase the force on that ground? There is no excuse for it in that connection. I hope therefore the House will concur in the original recommendation of the committee, so far as Senate amendment 30 is concerned, which increases the number of Secretaries of State, and that it will non-concur in that amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] for a moment.

Mr. CONGER. I had occasion in the last session of the last Congress, as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, to make a thorough and close examination in regard to the number of clerks in that Department and their duties; and we found, as will appear by a report from our committee last winter, that there was not a clerk in that office whose time was not fully employed. We found they were working and were compelled to work extra hours. The report of our committee will show that the services rendered in the State Department are perhaps more thorough and the length of time and labor of all the clerks greater than in any other Department of the Government. And very much to my surprise I found that instead of a recommendation for a diminution of the number of clerks or of the salaries of the clerks, it almost seemed a duty that we should recommend to the House an additional force in that Department.

*No passport was issued between the 4th of June, 1812, and the 10th of September, 1814.

The committee reported to the House, as will appear from our report made at that time, that all the clerks were there employed beyond the reasonable hours of labor, and were employed very often longer than any other class of the employés of the Government were employed. We found that some of these clerks, who are proud of their employment and wish to keep up their work, return to it in the evening, and work day after day extra hours with no extra compensation.

I have felt from the examination we then made, which was very thorough and very searching, that it was due that I should say to the House that in the opinion of the committee, at that time, it would have been very proper to recommend an increase in the clerical force of that Department, or if not that, that we should recommend an increase in the compensation. Members of the House are very well aware that I am opposed to an increase of salaries or an increase of clerical force, unless there is an absolute necessity for it. But I do agree with the Senate and the Committee on Appropriations that that there should be this increase in this Department.

Now a word in regard to the fee for passports. Until within the last two years the charge for a passport has been five dollars. Probably there is scarcely a member of the House who has not received from his friends the fee for a passport, and procured it for them at some time or another. I have never heard of a person finding complaint of that small fee for the large document which costs the Government something to prepare, and which requires some considerable labor on the part of the clerks. No one I have ever heard of found any fault with the fee of five dollars. When the fee was reduced there were no less passports obtained and no more. Men do not travel for the sake of obtaining a passport, and if they have occasion to go abroad they will obtain them, let the fee be what it may. Travel to England and to Germany requires no passport, but many persons desire to have them in order to carry with them some evidence and acknowledgment of their American citizenship.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I am opposed to some and in favor of others of the amendments of the Senate to this portion of the bill. I have no doubt the State Department is overworked, that an increase of clerical force is needed there. I coincide in that respect with the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, [Mr. ORTH.] But there is another point upon which I wish to say a single word. I am not willing to vote a restoration of the charge of five dollars for a passport. I know it is said that none but wealthy people go abroad. That is a mistake. It is said that this fee will yield $45,000, which would indicate that nine thousand persons went abroad who would take passports. But a great majority of those who go abroad do not take them. And I venture to say of the nine thousand who would take them there would be three thousand to whom a tax of five dollars would be something of an item.

Mr. ORTH. Allow me to interrupt the gentleman a moment. There are but two countries in Europe that require passports. But nine thousand passports are issued, while the volume of travel is probably from sixty to eighty thousand.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I know that. There are men here who have gone abroad without caring anything for passports. But I was saying that if only nine thousand out of the fifty or sixty thousand take passports, I venture to say that three thousand of them will be people to whom five dollars will be a matter of some consideration. Any of you who have gone abroad have found in the steerage and in the cheaper compartments of the steamer a large number of people, American citizens, native and naturalized, some going abroad on business and others returning to their old homes. They go over for from thirty-five to fifty dollars, and every dime is counted in their estimate of expenses. Tax them five dollars for a passport and you will be adding from 20 to 30 per cent. to the expense they would be subject to in going to Europe. If you are to make a charge at all make it a less sum, and not as high as five dollars. I want to favor the one-third who go abroad rather than the rest; I do not care about the wealthier portion of the travelers in that respect.

Mr. WOOD. I make a distinction between the State Department and other Departments of the Government in regard to its clerical force. The duties performed by the persons employed in the State Department are of a very peculiar character, and can only be properly discharged by those who are familiar, not only from practice but also by much study, with the peculiar character of the duties they are called upon to perform. And, in addition to this, I will say that the State Department is the only Department of the Government where appointments are made with reference especially to the capacity of the person employed rather than to his partisan services and associations. Therefore I would put that Department in a position where, for the better discharge of its important duties, the Secretary, whoever he may be, may have the widest latitude, not only in the employment and transposition of his force, but in the compensation to be given to persons possessing the necessary qualifications for the duties required of them.

Now, in regard to the passport question. Gentlemen appear to forget that what was necessary a few years ago with reference to passports is not required at this time. Every nation of Europe, even Russia, is considering the propriety of an abolition of the passport system entirely. Of those who go abroad from the United States three-fourths take no passports whatever, not even of the wealthier classes. Certainly the poorer classes do not, for the immigrants from Europe, coming chiefly from Germany, England, Scotland, and Ireland, require no passports to enable them to return to their native countries. The whole system has been a matter of form, so that now, with the exception of Turkey and the southern part of Italy, you can travel through the whole of Europe without a passport—without being obliged to show any evidence of American citizenship or any other citizenship. Even at Rome, the capital of Italy, no passport is required. If this tax of five dollars on each passport be reimposed it will apply only to men who are really very ignorant of what they do require, or to a class of people who desire to go elsewhere than to Europe. Therefore, I hope the amendment proposed will be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to have a division of the question upon these amendments.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call the previous question on the amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. I deny the gentleman's right to have a vote in bulk upon all these amendments. I wish a separate vote on the thirtieth amendment, providing for an additional Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. On the thirtieth amendment the committee recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir; concurrence.

Mr. RANDALL. They recommended non-concurrence in the printed report; they have changed their minds.

The question was taken on concurring in the thirtieth amendment, to insert after "two Assistant Secretaries of State, at $3,500 each," the words:

And one additional Assistant Secretary of State, with like compensation, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to be known as the Third Assistant Secretary of State.

There were—ayes 56, noes 24; no quorum voting.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that this matter had better go over, as in five minutes from this time the Committee on Military Affairs will be entitled to the floor against this and everything else whatever, unless by a vote of the House the business of the Military Committee should be postponed.

Mr. RANDALL. Then let this go over.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] whether he will not allow us to finish this bill before he goes on with the business of the Military Committee? An arrangement can be made by which he will not lose his rights. I very much desire that we shall get this bill in such a shape that it may go to the conference committee, if possible, this week. I do not think it will take much longer. This is the only question likely to be contested.

Mr. COBURN. I decline to yield.

The SPEAKER. This bill will go over with the question pending upon the thirtieth amendment. By order of the House the Committee on Military Affairs are entitled to the floor for reports from this time to the adjournment to-day.

ACCOUNTS OF ARMY AND NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. COBURN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1828) to further continue the act to authorize the settlement of the accounts of officers of the Army and Navy.

The bill was read. It provides that the act to authorize the settlement of the accounts of officers of the Army and Navy, approved June 23, 1870, and continued by the act approved June 7, 1872, be further continued for one year from June 23, 1874, and no longer.

Mr. COBURN. I will merely state that this bill is recommended by the officers of the Treasury and of the War Department.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONDEMNED CANNON FOR MONUMENTAL PURPOSES.

Mr. DONNAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with amendments, the bill (S. No. 510) donating condemned cannon and cannon-balls to the posts of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Philadelphia, and other associations, for monumental purposes.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of War to deliver, if the same can be done without detriment to the Government, four condemned cannon and sixteen cannon-balls to each of the following named organizations, for the purpose of ornamenting burial grounds of deceased soldiers: To the post numbered two, Grand Army of the Republic, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; to the post numbered five, Grand Army of the Republic, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; to the post numbered six, Grand Army of the Republic, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; to the post numbered seven, Grand Army of the Republic, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; to the post numbered eight, Grand Army of the Republic, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; to the post numbered ten, Grand Army of the Republic, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; to the post numbered seventy-one, Grand Army of the Republic, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; to the post numbered nineteen, Grand Army of the Republic, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; to the corporate authorities of the town of Winterport, State of Maine; and to the Soldiers' Monument Association of Henderson County, State of Illinois.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

Strike out "four," in fifth line, and insert "two."
Strike out "sixteen," in fifth line, and insert "eight."
At the end of the nineteenth line insert "and four condemned cannon and sixteen cannon-balls to each of the following organizations, namely:"
Strike out the word "and," in the twenty-first line.
At the end of the twenty-second line add the following:
To the Northumberland County Monument Association, of Pennsylvania;
To Fuller Post No. 74, Grand Army of the Republic, Catasauqua, Pennsylvania;
To Delaware County Soldiers and Sailors' Monument Association, at Chester, Pennsylvania;
To Chapman Post No. 61, Grand Army of the Republic, at Mauch Chunk, Pennsylvania;
To Doubleday Post No. 189, Grand Army of the Republic, at Tamaqua, Pennsylvania;
To the Monumental Association at York, Pennsylvania;
To Post No. 30, Grand Army of the Republic, at Cambridge, Massachusetts;
To Post No. 68, Grand Army of the Republic, at Boston, Massachusetts.
To the Soldiers' Monument Association at Springfield, Massachusetts;
To Post No. 122, Grand Army of the Republic, at Amesbury, Massachusetts;
To the trustees of the soldiers' monument fund, at Akron, Ohio;
To the officers of the Soldiers' Monument Association, at Chilmith, Louisiana;
To the Soldiers' Monument Association at Pomeroy, Ohio;
To Post No. 63, Grand Army of the Republic, at Natick, Massachusetts;
To Post No. 5, Grand Army of the Republic, at Morgantown, West Virginia;
To Post No. 89, Grand Army of the Republic, at Beverly, Massachusetts;
To the Soldiers' Monument Association at Binghamton, New York;
To the Soldiers' Monument Association at Alliance, Ohio.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DONNAN] what is the estimated value of these condemned cannon?

Mr. DONNAN. They are absolutely worthless, except as old iron to be recast.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. What is their value in that way?

Mr. DONNAN. I cannot answer the question definitely. I have been informed by one of my colleagues that they are not worth over twenty-five dollars apiece.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. How many cannon is it proposed to give?

Mr. DONNAN. Four to each monumental association.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. And to how many associations?

Mr. DONNAN. There are about thirty included in the original bill and the amendments.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. DONNAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HORSES LOST IN THE WAR.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3428) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of horses and other property lost or destroyed in the military service of the United States," approved March 3, 1849; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that the first section of the act of March 3, 1849, providing for the payment of horses and equipments lost by officers or enlisted men in the military service shall not be construed to deny payment to said officers or enlisted men for horses which may have been purchased by them in States in insurrection, and payment in any case shall not be refused where the loss resulted from any exigency or necessity of the military service unless it was caused by the fault or negligence of said officers or enlisted men.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word for the information of the House in connection with this bill. A draught of this bill was prepared in the Treasury Department by the Third Auditor and sent to the Committee on Military Affairs. It has the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. The only object is to allow payment to officers or enlisted men who lost horses in the war which were purchased in States declared to be in insurrection. There are some cases where horses were purchased in Tennessee and other Southern States, and where officers or enlisted men have not been allowed payment for them simply because they were purchased in States which were declared to be in insurrection. It does not provide for the payment of captured horses or horses acquired in any other way than by purchase. I think there will be no objection to the bill.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It seems to me that the last clause of the bill provides for payment in any case——

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I have in my hand the letter of the Third Auditor; and it is in the exact form recommended by the Treasury Department.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Why should not payment be made just the same in all similar cases? I should like to ask the gentleman whether the last clause of the bill applies to cases only where horses were purchased in insurrectionary States? If it applies to all cases it is proper enough.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The language of the bill is, payment in any case shall not be refused where the loss resulted from any exigency or necessity of the military service, unless caused by the fault or negligence of said officers or enlisted men.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The only thing I desire to know is whether it covers all these cases.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. It does cover all cases.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the first provision in the bill is a very good one indeed, and ought to become law. The other provision is very broad, and I do not think any officer can place a different construction on that provision than is now placed on the act of 1849. I do not think it has the effect the gentleman from Vermont thinks it has of increasing the class of losses for which the Government is to pay.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORT SANDERS MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 773) with an amendment.

The first section of the bill provides that the military reservation of Fort Sanders, in the Territory of Wyoming, is hereby reduced to an area of four square miles; and the said reservation shall, after the passage of the act, be limited and bounded as follows: beginning at a point one mile due north of the point where the flag-staff of Fort Sanders is planted, and running thence due east one mile; thence due south two miles; thence due west two miles; thence due north two miles; and thence due east one mile to the place of beginning.

The second section provides that immediately after the passage of the act it shall be the duty of the officer commanding the military department of the Platte, under the direction of the Secretary of War, to cause a direct survey of said reservation to be made in conformity with the provisions of the first section of the act, and to have posts or monuments planted at each of the corners thereof, and so marked that they will indicate the boundaries of said reservation.

The third section provides that the lands heretofore constituting the Fort Sanders military reservation outside of the limits of the new reservation, as defined in section 1 of the act, shall be held to be and have been subject and liable to the operation of the laws of the United States, in the same manner and to the same extent as if the same had never been included within the limits of said reservation, provided that in all cases where any of said last-mentioned lands would be subject to entry under the pre-emption and homestead laws of the United States, the actual settlers on said lands shall have the right and privilege to make proof and payment for their respective claims, under the provisions of the pre-emption and homestead laws, by filing their declaratory statements, as provided by existing laws, at any time within six months from the passage of the act.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out all of the first section after the word "Wyoming" in the fourth line, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "is hereby reduced in area, and the said reservation shall, after the passage of this act, be limited and bounded as follows: Beginning at the point where the old stage-road to Salt Lake crosses the Big Laramie River, and running thence east four miles; thence south four and five-tenths miles; thence in a west-southwest direction to the junction of what is known as the Five Mile Creek, with the present south line of the reserve; thence along this creek to its junction with the Big Laramie River; thence along said Big Laramie River to the place of beginning."

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. This reservation of Fort Sanders was originally established as Fort John Buford, by order of January 7, 1867, and included an area of six miles square or thirty-six square miles. On the 29th June, 1869, it was increased to an area of nine miles by nine, or eighty-one square miles, and received the name of Fort Sanders.

Many settlers have come in upon a portion of this reservation, and Laramie was laid out on the 15th of February, 1868, before the increase to which I have referred, and on the territory that was covered by the increase of the reservation. It has become a village or town of fifteen hundred people. The title is unsettled. There is much embarrassment arising in consequence of that extension of reservation, it being now eighty-one square miles, which is much larger than it need to be.

The bill as first introduced was to make a rectangular reservation four miles by four. But the military authorities found that this would interfere seriously with the value of the fort, depriving them of the land needed for pasturage, wood, water, &c. They have therefore recommended the amendment which is now reported by the committee, making a somewhat irregular reservation for the purpose of reserving enough of the land for pasturage, wood, water, &c., for the necessities of the fort.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this recommended by the War Department?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. The amendment is in the language recommended by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BARRACKS, ETC., AT ATLANTA, GEORGIA.

Mr. GUNCKEL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with the recommendation that it do not pass, the bill (H. R. No. 1429) to authorize the Secretary of War to purchase a site for barracks and quarters for military purposes at Atlanta, Georgia; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

PALESTINE EXPLORATION.

Mr. GUNCKEL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 63) detailing an Army officer to continue the survey and exploration of Palestine on the east side of the Jordan.

The joint resolution was read. It authorizes the Secretary of War to detail an officer of the Army to continue the survey and exploration of Palestine on the east side of the Jordan as already commenced and in part prosecuted under the supervision of the Palestine Exploration Society; provided, however, that such detail shall not involve the United States in any expense in mileage or otherwise beyond the usual pay and allowances of such officer while so employed.

Mr. GUNCKEL. If gentlemen desire an explanation, I will say a word or two in regard to this joint resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that nearly two hundred persons from civil life are now employed in the engineer service in connection with our public works in consequence of the insufficiency of the Engineer Corps.

Mr. COBURN. This is a cavalry officer, not an engineer.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit that while we are paying Army officers at regular salaries for Army service, it is not right to take them away from the duties they ought to perform.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I will state to the gentleman that this work is in the hands of a Palestine exploration society, located in New York City. This resolution is simply to authorize the detail of an officer of the Army to command the expedition, the society defraying all the expenses. The exploration has been going on for two years and an officer detailed by the Secretary of War therefor without the authority of Congress. It is now proposed to continue the work and finish it by the authority of Congress. It will entail no expense upon the Government, but it will merely give the society the services of an officer who has nothing to do here. He might as well be employed there, and as I have said he is a cavalry officer and not an engineer, so the point made by the gentleman from Indiana does not apply.

Mr. HOLMAN. Are not the military authorities finding it necessary to employ a large number of persons from civil life to perform the duties which should be performed by Army officers?

Mr. GUNCKEL. Not of cavalry officers. I will suggest to the gentleman that in reducing the Army there will be a surplus of officers, and they might as well be employed on such a service as to remain at home and do nothing and yet receive their regular pay and allowances. And I will say, also, that this is following a democratic precedent, for during the administration of President Polk, the then Secretary of the Navy, Hon. John Y. Mason, detailed Lieutenant Lynch for a similar exploration service with twenty times the number of men and twenty times the expense required for this work.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this survey already made?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Only a part of it. I desire to say that this is an exploration purely in the interest of science and the discovery of matters relating to biblical history. The lieutenant who had charge of this survey was detailed by the Secretary of War under the belief that the Secretary of War had all the authority necessary. This society has gone on for several years and are about completing their surveys and explorations. And it would be a loss to science if this officer was taken away, because he has experience that probably another man would have to labor several years to acquire. It does not cost the Government anything except the pay of this officer. He is not an officer of the Engineer Corps, but an officer of the cavalry.

Mr. COX. I never voted, I believe, for any of these explorations abroad. I do not know that I will for this one; but it seems to me to be meritorious, as it extends our scientific explorations in a very interesting country. I would remind the House, and I would remind the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations especially, that Congress last year I think voted $10,000 for the exploration of certain old manuscripts in Paris, although it was opposed by my friend from Indiana and by myself as a useless performance, for I believe that such things should be done by ordinary private enterprise. And it turned out after the appropriation bill was passed containing that appropriation that all these manuscripts had been gone over, with the aid of money furnished I believe by Mr. Astor, who was interested in our western explorations, and the $10,000 appropriated were only wasted or were given to somebody to flourish abroad with and make some little reputation for himself.

Now, I have no objection to an exploration of a scientific character within our own borders. But this wonderful land of Palestine, which is almost as large as, if not larger than, Montgomery County, Ohio, from which my friend [Mr. GUNCKEL] comes, has been explored already by everybody for the last two thousand years. More books have been printed upon that than upon any other land. The crusaders carried on the work of exploration at great expense to their people; I do not mean the Ohio crusaders. Supposing that this matter would come up, and feeling inclined to examine it, I sent for several books, among them Mark Twain's Innocents Abroad. I think if the United States is represented abroad in this business, it will be in many particulars pretty much as the Innocents were.

My friend from Oregon, [Mr. NESMITH,] who is always suggesting original ideas, says that Moses spent more than forty years in this exploration, under great difficulty and hardship. There is no country on the face of the earth about which we know so much and know it scientificially as we do about Palestine. Lynch himself made an exploration of the Dead Sea which Mark Twain adopted.

I do not know whether any protest on this subject will have any effect in this House. We vote for everything suggested here by our committees. But for one I never will vote to make the United States Government a publishing house at the expense of private publishers and citizens.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I am very reluctant to consume the time of the House in discussing this resolution. But I will say to my friend from New York [Mr. COX] that the very exploration of Lieutenant Lynch, to which he has referred, was made by order of the Government. There were some twenty officers and men detailed for the purpose, at an expense fifty times as great as this would require. This joint resolution does not propose to take a single cent of money from the Treasury, but simply to give the time of an officer for about a few years longer. In reply to the argument of the gentleman as to the necessity of this exploration and of its importance as a contribution to natural and biblical science, I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a memorial from President Woolsey, of Yale College; Rev. Dr. Hitchcock, of New York; and others of the most distinguished scholars in the United States, upon this subject.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would like to inquire what was the remarkable thing said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] about the $10,000 appropriated last year.

Mr. COX. I was not aware that the gentleman was out of the Hall. I happened to mention the fact that our appropriation of $10,000 for examining the French manuscripts was entirely useless.

Mr. GARFIELD. Why so?

Mr. COX. Because all worth printing had been selected and published, as I understood.

Mr. GARFIELD. When?

Mr. COX. Under the auspices of Mr. Astor, many years ago.

Mr. GARFIELD. And you supposed the money had been paid out and lost? The only trouble about the statement of the gentleman is that the money has not yet been paid out. I have received a Communication from the historian, Parkman, complaining that the committee on the Library were dilatory in forwarding the money, and stating that manuscript enough for three volumes was ready for publication, and that the rest would be prepared soon; and that it was a great misfortune that the work was not hastened, so that it could be got out. None of the money has yet been expended, and none of the volumes have yet been published.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I now ask that the memorial be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners, citizens of New York and its vicinity, respectfully represent that of all the exploring expditions sent out from the United States none have been more interesting to the people of this country than that recently sent from New York to survey and explore the unknown regions of Palestine lying east of the river Jordan.

This expedition, fitted out by the Palestine Exploration Society, has spent one season among the mountains of Moab, and has demonstrated the practicability of the proposed survey, and has reported, among the results accomplished, the triangulation of over six hundred square miles.

In these explorations ruined cities are brought to light, biblical sites are identified, and ancient inscriptions, some of which are in unknown characters, have been discovered.

The urgent demand throughout Christendom for an accurate survey of the Holy Land has found expression in past years in the isolated efforts of individual travelers, unprovided with adequate instruments and resources, and whose maps are consequently inaccurate.

More recently Lieutenant Lynch, in 1848, under the auspices of the United States Navy Department, made a careful exploration of the river Jordan, and his report is now standard authority on that subject, and reflects great credit upon our Government. In imitation of such action the British government have for the last seven years detailed an army officer to command an exploring expedition, which is still at work surveying with great accuracy the country lying west of the Jordan.

And your petitioners further represent that three years ago a similar society was formed in this city, entitled "The Palestine Exploration Society," and by agreement with the English society undertook the work of exploration on the east side of the Jordan, where about fifteen thousand square miles of territory remain to be surveyed and mapped.

It is the intention of these two societies to unite the results of their exploration in the execution of an accurate map of all Palestine. With a view to accomplish their part of the work, the American society proposed to send out another expedition as soon as may be. It is estimated that the work can be done in five years, at an expense of about $30,000 per annum. A portion of this amount has already been subscribed. The party will consist of eight or ten gentlemen of scientific attainments, with a view to make a complete archæological, cartographical, and botanical survey.

And your petitioners pray that authority be given to the Secretary of War to detail an Army officer, possessing the necessary attainments, to command this expedition, if one can be found who is willing to go, and to continue such detail until the completion of the work, and to furnish such instruments as may be required for the equipment of the expedition.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I have an amendment, to which I understand the gentleman from Ohio has no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman consent to an amendment that the mileage and transportation of this officer during his absence shall be suspended?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. That is the amendment which I propose; to insert after the word "allowance" the words "not including mileage or transportation."

Mr. GUNCKEL. I have no objection to the amendment. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

The question was upon ordering the bill, as amended, to be engrossed and read a third time; and being taken, upon a division, there were—ayes 58, noes 31; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GUNCKEL and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 118, noes 38.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GUNCKEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARMY REGULATIONS.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I have been directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back, with amendments, House bill No. 844, to authorize the promulgation of the general regulations for the government of the Army.

The bill was read. It provides that so much of section 20 of the act approved July 15, 1870, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1871, and for other purposes," as requires the system of general regulations for the Army therein authorized to be reported to Congress at its next session and approved by that body, be repealed; and the regulations prepared by the Secretary of War under said section shall, when approved by the President, be in force and obeyed until altered or revoked by the same authority or by act of Congress.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I believe there is no objection to this bill. It is desired by the Army officers. It simply provides for such regulations as may be necessary for the government of the Army.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "repealed" and insert the following:
And the President is hereby authorized under said section to make and publish regulations for the government of the Army in accordance with existing laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does this bill authorize the Secretary of War to make regulations for the Army?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. It authorizes the President to prescribe regulations in accordance with existing laws.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to ask only a single question. The Rules and Articles of War have always been understood to derive their force from acts of Congress, corresponding in this respect with the old mutiny act of England. I wish to know whether this bill in any way puts it within the power of the President to modify the Rules and Articles of War?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Not at all.

Mr. COBURN. The bill expressly provides that the regulations prescribed by the President shall be in accordance with law.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then this bill does not interfere at all with the principle that the Articles of War must be prescribed by act of Congress.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. It does not apply to the Articles of War at all.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALBRIGHT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASSIGNMENT OF RETIRED OFFICERS TO DUTY.

Mr. MACDOUGALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3429) to put retired officers of the Army on duty; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of War to place retired officers of the Army, (upon their own application accompanied by the certificate of a regular medical officer,) who are physically incapacitated, on duty as boards, military posts, in charge of evacuated posts and garrisons, and on recruiting service, and such other details as it may be to the interest of the service for them to perform; and their status shall be that of active officers of the Army for the time being; and all laws or parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe that retired officers of the Army receive only a certain proportion of the regular pay; and as has been admitted by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GUNCKEL,] a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, there are now a number of supernumerary officers. I wish to know whether the effect of this proposition is not to increase the pay and allowances of those officers not actually performing regular Army duty?

Mr. MACDOUGALL. There are now connected with the Army about three hundred retired officers, many of whom have lost legs and arms. Under the present law officers on the active list are detailed to perform duty on military courts, to take charge of evacuated posts, to do recruiting duty, &c. For such purposes as these there are now about two hundred and ninety officers detailed from their regular commands, a list of which I submit and desire to have inserted here:

Officers of the United States Army (staff and line) absent from their proper stations.

All of the above are duty officers on active list. This does not include the large details required of officers for courts-martial, and boards, &c.
Eight or ten of above are staff, the remainder regimental officers.

The effect of this bill is that where a disabled officer is competent to perform duty on courts-martial or at the evacuated posts, garrisons, &c., he may be assigned to such duty. For instance, there has recently been convened in the city of Washington a court for the investigation of General Howard; and the Government was obliged to send to Texas, and Omaha, Nebraska, for officers to sit upon that court, thus entailing considerable expense upon the Government for their transportation, while we had in the city of Washington officers who would have been eligible for such duty if a law of this kind had been in force. If retired officers had been assigned to this duty they would have been employed for about sixty days at regular pay, and at the conclusion of such service would have resumed their former positions upon the retired list.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] has to-day informed the House that there is now such a body of supernumerary officers in our Army that the sending of one abroad would be no inconvenience to the public service; yet now in this, the second bill that has since been reported, it is proposed to increase the number of persons receiving active service pay.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. As I understand this bill, it will involve no additional expense for the pay of these retired officers unless they are actually needed for, and can perform, duty to which otherwise officers in active service would have to be assigned. In the case mentioned by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MACDOUGALL,] officers on the retired list could have performed duty as members of a military court just as well as those who were actually assigned to that court.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I understand, a retired officer receives two-thirds of the regular pay, but no allowances. The effect of this bill is to increase the number of officers who are to receive full pay.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. These retired officers will not receive full pay unless on duty; for instance, if they should be assigned to serve on a military court, they would receive full pay while so serving.

Mr. HOLMAN. I only wanted to show the disagreement in the committee as to whether there is a sufficient number of officers.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I insist that there is no disagreement between the two statements to which the gentleman refers. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] having charge of the other bill said that we could spare the officer referred to. If we had under consideration a bill for reducing the Army, the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] might be pertinent; but if we pass this bill, although we may have more officers than we need, it will be within the power of the Government at certain times and in certain places to bring into requisition to the advantage of the Government the services of men who are upon the retired list, and thereby save the expense of transporting officers for long distances from other sections of the country.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. This bill simply increases the resources of the Secretary of War in making details for these military courts—for a court like that referred to, the Howard court. Since we passed the law reducing the Army to twenty-five thousand men, there must be for some time of course a great many officers who are supernumerary until they can be reassigned, until by the natural wastage of the Army there comes to be a place for them. They cannot now be assigned to duty on these courts. The Secretary of War may not wish to make up a court out of junior officers of the line. If he had the opportunity he would select some of these men who are fifty-five or sixty years of age, experienced, able men, now upon the retired list for this duty who are now excluded from it. Let the Secretary of War make up his detail from these officers, and I know now of some thirty of them going about the country without doing anything, for you do not permit them to do anything. They are men of the requisite experience and standing in the Army. He would not then be compelled to go down into Texas to bring up here General Reynolds, or go to Omaha for General Miles, but might select General Ricketts and other men who are now doing nothing. He would not have occasion to exercise his powers under the bill a dozen times in a year, but it would be a great convenience when he did. This cavalry officer in Palestine, who is doing creditable work over there, may not be the man to appoint as one of the three members of a court, while General Ricketts or some of those other officers may be the very men, but they cannot now be put on because they are retired officers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MACDOUGALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORT SUMNER MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. NESMITH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3430) for the relief of settlers on the abandoned Fort Sumner military reservation, in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to relinquish and turn over to the Department of the Interior, for restoration to the public domain, the military reservation of Fort Sumner, in the Territory of New Mexico. It further provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall offer the same at public sale to the highest bidder, in legal subdivisions not greater than one quarter-section when the same can be made, and not below the minimum price provided by law. Any land left unsold after such offer shall be held for disposal as other public lands, provided notice of such public sale shall be advertised for sixty days in two newspapers, one published in the capital of the Territory and the other at a point adjacent to the place of sale.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NESMITH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BREVET COMMISSIONS IN INDIAN WARFARE.

Mr. NESMITH also, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1511) allowing brevet commissions for distinguished services in Indian warfare, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, provides that section 2 of the act entitled "An act to amend an act of April 10, 1866, for establishing rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States," approved March 1, 1869, shall not be construed to prohibit the President from conferring brevet commissions for distinguished conduct and gallant and meritorious public service during Indian hostilities in the presence of hostile Indians.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NESMITH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY BAND.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1679) to provide for the Military Academy band, and to fix the pay of its members, with the recommendation that it do pass, with an amendment.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Military Academy band shall consist of one teacher of music, who shall be leader of the band, and may be a civilian, and of forty enlisted musicians of the band, and that the teacher of music shall receive one hundred dollars per month, one ration, and the allowance of fuel of a second lieutenant of the Army; and that of the enlisted musicians of the band, ten shall each be paid thirty-four dollars per month, and the remaining thirty shall each be paid thirty dollars per month; and that the enlisted musicians of the band shall have the benefits as to pay, arising from re-enlistments and length of service, applicable to other enlisted men of the Army.

The amendment of the committee was as follows:

In section 2, line 2, strike out "one hundred" and insert "ninety."

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust there will be some explanation of this bill.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. Let the report be read.

The report was read. The committee state that the band at West Point is the only band in the Army now authorized and provided for by law. It has been deemed necessary to maintain this band from the very foundation of the Military Academy in 1802 to the present time. The Military Academy has been for many years, and is to-day, and justly so, the pride of the nation and the admiration of the military powers of the earth. West Point is often visited by officials sent out by other countries for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the efficiency of our military instruction. The band is no inconsiderable portion of the establishment of the academy, and should, in the opinion of the committee, be put upon a creditable footing, and made to accord with the other establishments of the Military Academy.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that the bill makes an appropriation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that this requires an increased appropriation. The Chair thinks the point is good.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. Then I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ARMY MEDICAL MUSEUM.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3345) to provide for the purchase of a building adjacent to the Army Medical Museum, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, for scientific purposes.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of War to purchase a brick house adjacent to the Army Medical Museum, in Washington, District of Columbia, for such scientific purposes as the Department may deem proper, provided that the amount paid for such building shall not exceed the sum of $3,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that bill ought to be examined in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on the point of order, and I trust my friend from Georgia will see the propriety of the bill having an examination in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to have this bill, with the accompanying report, printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with a recommendation to them to bring it in as an amendment to the deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I know it does; and I make that request. I believe the Committee on Appropriations are in favor of this appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it is important to stop these drains on the Treasury, and I insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CLERKS IN UNITED STATES ARMORY, SPRINGFIELD, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, also, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 1410) fixing the salaries of the clerks in the United States armory at Springfield, Massachusetts.

The bill was read. It provides that from and after the passage of the act, in lieu of the compensation now allowed to the clerks at the United States armory at Springfield, Massachusetts, including fuel and quarters, there shall be paid to each of said clerks the annual salary of $1,650.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me that we ought to consider this bill also in Committee of the Whole. I make the point of order that it makes an additional appropriation.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. The bill requires no additional appropriation. I am assured by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GOOCH] that there is no additional appropriation, but that these clerks prefer to receive their pay in money instead of fuel and quarters, as they now have it. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill may be again read, meanwhile reserving the point of order.

The bill was again read.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. DAWES. I will state to the House just what this proposes to do. There are four clerks of the Springfield armory who are paid in money $1,200 a year and allowed rations, fuel, and quarters; but the quarters depend upon whether an Army officer wants to take them or not. If an Army officer comes there any time in the year the clerks are obliged to leave the quarters and find rooms or homes in the town. This is very inconvenient and causes them great expense.

It was suggested at the Ordnance Department that there should be ascertained as near as could be what was the equivalent for those rations and quarters and fuel, &c., and that cash should be given instead; and they have ciphered it up so as to make it about what is provided in the bill. At their suggestion this bill was prepared, and it will be a matter of great convenience to the clerks. It also strikes off the private use of public property.

Mr. HOLMAN. As the bill seems to make no increase of appropriation, I withdraw the point of order.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RESERVATIONS IN ARIZONA.

Mr. HUNTON, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3431) authorizing the Secretary of War to relinquish and turn over to the Interior Department parts of certain reservations in the Territory of Arizona no longer required for military purposes.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of War to relinquish and turn over to the Department of the Interior, for restoration to the public domain, such portions of what are known as Fort Yuma, Fort Whipple, and Camp Date Creek reservations in Arizona as in the opinion of the Secretary of War may be no longer required for military purposes, provided that the Secretary of the Interior shall expose the same at public offering for sale to the highest bidder in legal subdivisions not greater than one quarter-section, when the sale can be made, and not below the mininum price provided by law; and any land left unsold at such offering shall be held thereafter for disposal as other public lands. Notice of such public sale shall be advertised for sixty days in two newspapers, of which one shall be published in the capital of the Territory and the other circulating nearest the place of sale.

Mr. LOWE. I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] that in the phrase "notice of such public sale shall be advertised" the word "advertised" should be changed to "published."

Mr. HUNTON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. McCORMICK. Allow me to ask a question of the gentleman reporting this bill. In the case of the Fort Whipple reservation several ranch claims were taken up before the reservation lines were thoroughly established. The object of this bill is to restore that portion of the reservation never needed or used for military purposes to the public domain, so that those parties can have no question raised in reference to their titles to the ranches. I hope public sentiment out there is such that if this land is put up at public auction there would be no objection to these early occupants buying it in at the legal rate for public lands. Would this act, as it is, interfere with the perfection of title to these ranches, or deprive those settlers of any rights?

Mr. HUNTON. I think that question would be determined by the Land Office according to the regulations of that department.

Mr. DUNNELL. I notice that the Committee on Military Affairs have reported a large number of bills similar to the one now before the House. It would seem that the committee had adopted the principle of going over and cutting down all the military reservations of the country. But I notice that no provisions are included in the bills protecting those settlers who may be on any portion of these reservations. It is the fact that in regard to many reservations which have been diminished, actual settlers have been found on the outskirts who did not know they were on the reservation, but who are thereby compelled to lose their improvements on their lands.

It seems to me that there should be some protection in these bills to those who may be on the land as actual, bona fide settlers. Certainly all such bills that have been reported from the Committee on the Public Lands have carefully guarded the interests of those who have actually settled on these reservations.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Suppose that a settler came on to a tract of land in advance of a survey, and after establishing homes the land was set apart for a military reservation, and then after a few years the military reservation was given up and restored to the public lands. Cannot that settler go on and perfect his title?

Mr. DUNNELL. I think not; not under a bill like this; he is left out in the cold entirely. It seems to me that these bills which we have been passing this morning, of which this is a sample, are decidedly defective in that particular.

Mr. McCORMICK. I introduced this bill, and I am entirely familiar with the reservations to which it refers. There is one case of the kind referred to by the gentleman. That is the Fort Whipple reservation, where several ranchmen went on and improved the land to a certain extent before the reservation was definitely defined. I had hoped the committee would allow the act to stand as introduced, simply to restore these unused reservations or parts of reservations to the public domain, and have them sold under the regular land laws without restriction.

Mr. DUNNELL. As we are all aware, there has been a great deal of speculation in vacating some of these military surveys and throwing them into the market. Somebody is interested in the contraction of these reservations. It is to be a very good thing for somebody that these lands are thrown into the market. Now, I would inquire if there is any recommendation from the Secretary of War to diminish these reservations in size, or is it asked for by some local expectant bidder?

Mr. McCORMICK. My bill is approved by the general commanding the department, by the general commanding the division, and by the Secretary of War, and is in the interest of my people.

Mr. COBURN. I desire to say a word or two on this question. In the first place, if we are to establish it as a principle or as a practice of the Government that these squatters, who go upon the reservations either knowingly or carelessly, can by that act acquire a right of possession to the property and have a claim to it, then we may as well give up our reservations at once. How far are you going to let men go beyond the border of a military reservation? Shall they go half a mile, a mile, or two miles? Where is the limitation to be drawn? If you allow these robbers of the public lands to settle on well-defined military reservations, there can be no end of the thing. There can be no more dangerous or suicidal policy than to undertake for one moment to allow to men who encroach on military reservations the shadow of any claim.

I hold in my hand a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office upon which this bill was draughted; and the very language of the Commissioner on this subject is employed in the bill. Nothing can be more dangerous than to attempt to protect the rights of any man who encroaches upon a military reservation. Everywhere persons are attempting in this way to get some kind of a foot-hold. I hope the House will never adopt a policy which will give them any encouragement, because you cannot make any limitation as to the first quarter of a mile, or half a mile, or two miles. Some of these reservations are very large. The only safe policy for the Government in this matter is to stand by the boundaries of the reservation. Property of this kind often becomes very valuable; towns may be built up closely adjoining it. Why should not the Government as well as individuals derive benefit from the settlement of the country? There is a constant effort in all quarters to encroach upon the public lands, to seize the land of the Government by hook or crook. I hope that no policy will ever be adopted that will allow to settlers of this description any claim whatever.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to reply in a single moment to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN.] There is perhaps attached to the word "squatter" such an idea as his remarks convey; but among those who settle on the public lands, and who may be technically called "squatters," there are those who go upon those lands naturally and rightfully; and I insist they ought to be protected. Here may be a military reservation the boundaries of which are not well known, not platted upon any of the maps. An honest seeker for a home, a man with a family, may have gone a little over the line and got upon a part of this reservation. He is a tiller of the soil. As a citizen of the United States he has some rights to be protected. Now it is proposed to sell this reservation at public sale regardless of the rights of such a man. You may, if you please, call him a "squatter" derisively; nevertheless he has rights that ought to be protected. I submit that whenever these lands are thrown open to sale bona fide settlers upon any portion of the reservation should have a preference as purchasers at the minimum price.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] whether at the last Congress we did not pass some general law providing that when a bona fide settler had occupied the public lands and made improvements he should have a preference over other persons as a purchaser?

Mr. DUNNELL. I do not recall any such law.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Some general statute on that subject was passed at the last session. I do not remember its details and cannot say whether it covered this case or not.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask the Clerk to read an extract from a letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The Clerk read as follows:

> The best method of disposing of them would, in my opinion, be by exposing them at public offering for sale to the highest bidder, yet subject to the legal minimum price; any land left over unsold at such offering to be thereafter held for disposal as other public lands. But if portions of the reservations no longer required for military purposes have been considerably improved by the Government, and the value of the lands much enhanced, it would be the best method first to appraise the lands and the improvements thereon, and then sell them by public offering with the appraised value as the minimum price, the lands and improvements being appraised and offered separately or together as might be thought best on a consideration of the circumstances in detail, with a view to selling to the best advantage for the Government.

Mr. McCORMICK. I simply wish to put on record the statement that while I agree with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in the general principle he has stated with reference to the sale of reservations, I can say from personal knowledge that there are in Arizona no encroachments of the kind referred to that I know of. The only question in reference to Fort Whipple reservation arises from the fact that on the southern side several farmers took up claims before the lines of the reservation were declared, and General Crook himself, commanding the department, agreed with me in a conversation I had with him on this subject that it would be a simple act of justice that these ranches should be given up entirely to the claimants. I simply want it understood that under this bill such bona fide claims are protected, as they certainly should be.

Mr. DUNNELL. They are in no way protected; they may lose all their betterments.

Mr. HUNTON. I call the previous question on this bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF TELEGRAPH LINES.

Mr. HUNTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3432) to protect lines of telegraph constructed or used by the United States from malicious injury and obstruction; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides any person or persons who shall willfully or maliciously injure or destroy any of the works or property or material of any telegraphic line constructed, or owned, or in process of construction, by the United States, or that may be hereafter constructed or owned, or occupied and controlled by the United States, or who shall willfully or maliciously interfere in any way with the working or use of any such telegraphic line, or who shall willfully or maliciously obstruct, hinder, or delay the transmission of any communication over any such telegraphic line, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof in any district court of the United States, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more $1,000, or with imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years, or with both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I move after the words "district courts" to insert the words "having jurisdiction of the offense."

Mr. HUNTON. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARMY OFFICERS' EMBLEMS.

Mr. NESMITH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 2420) allowing Army officers to wear certain emblems indicative of honors conferred upon them, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, provides that section 16 of the act approved July 15, 1870, shall not be construed to prohibit the President from authorizing the commissioned officers of the Army to wear embroidered upon the collar of the authorized uniform, as an honorary distinction, the proper emblem or insignia of rank of the highest grade they have held, by brevet or other commission, either in the regular or volunteer service.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NESMITH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEASE OF MILITARY FORTS.

Mr. COBURN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with the recommendation that it do not pass, a joint resolution (H. R. No. 78) authorizing the Secretary of War to lease parts of military forts and posts; and the same was laid on the table.

CRIMES COMMITTED BY MILITARY PERSONS.

Mr. COBURN, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3128) in regard to crimes committed by military persons, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, provides that thereafter general courts-martial be, and the same thereby are, invested with a jurisdiction concurrent with that of the courts of the State or Territary in which the crime is committed: of the crimes of murder, manslaughter, mayhem, rape, arson, robbery, burglary, larceny, and assault and battery, as well as of attempt to commit an assault and battery with intent to commit any of said crimes, when the same are committed by persons in the military service of the United States or subject to the Articles of War; provided, however, that the punishments for such offenses shall not exceed those authorized by the laws of the State or Territory in which the crime was committed; and provided further, that in all cases where the civil courts have obtained, or shall obtain at any time before conviction, jurisdiction of the aforesaid offenses, the trial shall proceed only in such civil courts, and all proceedings in the courts-martial shall at once cease.

Mr. COBURN. Mr. Speaker, I will explain this bill briefly to the House as it is a material change in the law, and one which should not be adopted without the scrutiny of those who take an interest in matters of this kind. The law formerly was in times of war military courts should have cognizance of these crimes, but not in time of peace. The change is that this can be done in time of peace. The last proviso limits very materially and very greatly the jurisdiction of courts-marshal; that if at any time before conviction the civil court takes cognizance of the offense, the jurisdiction of the military court shall be ousted.

Now the House should understand the object of the bill. It is this: This is asked for by the Judge-Advocate-General of the War Department. It is not intended to apply and would not be asked for in reference to any of the older settlements, or in reference to any other place except upon our remote frontiers near locations of Indian tribes, where the soldiers are occasionally found to have committed crimes of this nature which the territorial or local courts will not take cognizance of. In some parts of the country there is such a prejudice against the Indians, indeed public opinion is so demoralized upon this question, that the local courts will take no cognizance whatever of any crime perpetrated upon the Indians.

Mr. POTTER. They will take no notice of the killing of an Indian.

Mr. COBURN. You cannot get such a one indicted. You can have there no kind of cognizance taken of these flagrant crimes so committed. They are totally overlooked by the local courts.

A MEMBER. What if done by a private citizen?

Mr. COBURN. If done by a private citizen, of course the military court would have no authority to take cognizance of it. But if it is done by a soldier and if there is one single instance of this kind, there should be some remedy, there ought to be protection, there ought to be peace on the border.

Mr. POTTER. Will the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs allow me to call his attention to the provision in the last clause of section 2, of article 3, of the Constitution, that—

> The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury; and such trial shall be held in the State where the said crimes shall have been committed.

Mr. COBURN. There is another provision in the Constitution that this shall not apply to the military and naval service. If the gentleman will refer to the Constitution he will see that there is an express exception.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The exception to which the gentleman from Indiana refers is in article 5 of amendments to the Constitution, and is as follows:

> No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land and naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger.

Mr. COBURN. That makes an express exception.

Mr. POTTER. I take this view rather of the Constitution. The difficulty is that the second section of article 3 says that the trial of all crimes except in cases of impeachment shall be by jury. Then the fifth article of amendment says:

> No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grant jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger.

Now, there still remains the provision for trial by jury.

Mr. COBURN. There is this distinction, however, to be observed. The fifth article of amendment says:

> Except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger.

Now, this applies to the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger; but it applies generally at all times to cases arising in the land or naval forces.

Mr. POTTER. The exception does?

Mr. COBURN. Of course.

Mr. POTTER. What is the exception? It is not an exception of trial by jury. The other section remains in full force all the time. What you do with that is my difficulty; I mean with the conclusion of the second section of the third article of the Constitution.

Mr. COBURN. This report was made, I will say, with the construction of the Constitution that these cases were intended to be taken up by this fifth article of amendment. If the provision for indictment by a grand jury is taken away from persons who are in the land or naval forces, if they are not subject to indictment by a grand jury, the construction was that they would be taken by that means from the purview of this section providing for the ordinary trial of crimes.

I will say that it is not a matter which the committee felt entirely clear upon, and I have therefore called the attention of the House to it, with the desire that the gentlemen connected with the Committee on the Judiciary should take notice of it.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Will my colleague on the committee agree to have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. COBURN. The Committee on Military Affairs are not at all desirous to urge through the House in haste such a material amendment of the law and practice of the Government. I claim for it the fullest consideration of the House.

Mr. POTTER. I rather think that the provision in the fifth article of amendment—

> No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crimes, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury—was intended to prevent proceedings against criminals for that class of crimes on information, which was very common at common law. This provides that persons shall not be proceeded against for such crimes on information.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Suppose a murder should be committed by a soldier in time of war, would it be unconstitutional to try him by court-martial?

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Or take the case of a mutiny on board of a ship at sea.

Mr. POTTER. But this is a civil offense. It takes place within a State; and you propose to try him differently from other persons because he is in the military service.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I have some doubts about the constitutionality of the bill, and my inquiry was mainly directed to what the exception in the fifth article of the amendment really meant, and it seems to me that it has been construed as meaning this: that in case of actual war persons who are in the Army or in the Navy may be tried by court-martial for an offense that otherwise could not be tried, being within the cognizance of a military court.

Mr. POTTER. I suggest that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COBURN. I am perfectly willing that that shall be done.

Mr. POTTER. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs assenting, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. POTTER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 1) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to protect all citizens of the United States in their civil rights, and to furnish the means for their vindication," passed April 9, 1866, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 2081) to facilitate the exportation of distilled spirits, and amendatory of the acts in relation thereto.

RELIEF OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. COBURN, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 101) construing the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution amendatory of joint resolution for the relief of certain officers of the Army, approved July 26, 1866," approved July 11, 1870.

The joint resolution provides that the third section of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution amendatory of joint resolution for the relief of certain officers of the Army, approved July 26, 1866," approved July 11, 1870, shall be construed to apply only to cases in which there was no vacancy existing at the time when such duty was performed or in which the officer so commissioned was under arrest or was absent without leave from his command, and that these are hereby construed to be the only persons referred to therein who shall not be entitled to the benefits of said joint resolution of 1870.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. COBURN. I will hear it read.

The amendment was read, to add to the joint resolution the following:

> And the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department are hereby authorized and directed to carry into effect the provisions of the said joint resolutions and their amendments, and to determine the facts in each case from such record and other evidence as may be satisfactory to them.

Mr. COBURN. I will permit that amendment to be offered. I will state the object of this joint resolution. There were quite a number of officers of the Army who were commissioned but not mustered at the date of their commissions. Some of them were in the field away from mustering officers; some of them were in rebel prisons; some were in hospitals, or under various other conditions and circumstances that prevented them from being mustered at the date of their commissions or at the date of the receipt of their commissions. Some of them performed their duties for months after they were commissioned; some of them were never mustered after being commissioned, although they clothed and subsisted themselves and took all the responsibilities of officers.

In 1866 a joint resolution was passed providing for this class of cases. In 1870 Congress passed another joint resolution continuing the one of 1866. The War Department has so construed the joint resolution of 1870 as that those officers who were imprisoned or who were in hospitals and never mustered in although commissioned, and many of them on duty with their commissions in their possession, cannot get their pay. In other words, the act of 1870 has been annulled and negatived by this construction of the War Department.

There are quite a number of these cases; many of the members of the House are familiar with them. The object of this joint resolution is to provide that the third section of the joint resolution of 1870, which the War Department construes to annul and set aside the previous provisions of that joint resolution, shall be construed so as to exempt from the operation of the previous sections only cases where there was no vacancy or where the officers were under arrest or absent without leave. These are deemed to be the only cases of officers who were commissioned and not mustered in who should not be paid while on duty.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Does the gentleman insist that the War Department has not given a proper construction of the joint resolution of 1870?

Mr. COBURN. I do. I say the construction of the War Department is to this singular effect: while the first section of the joint resolution expressly provided that officers who were detailed on duty under a commission, and not mustered, should be mustered back to the time they went upon duty under their commissions, and while the second section provided that officers who had been commissioned by the governors of their States, and were in prison or in hospital and not mustered, should be mustered to date back to their commission, the War Department expressly decided that the third section, which provides that the two preceding sections shall not apply to cases in which officers could have been mustered even if they had their commissions, renders absolutely null and void the two preceding sections; in my judgment a most remarkable construction.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] to make the language of his amendment a little more specific, to say that the proper accounting officers of the War Department shall be directed to carry into effect the act of 1866 as construed by the act of 1870 and by this act; otherwise it would seem to leave the same latitude to the Department to fail to carry the law into effect.

Mr. POLAND. The object of my amendment is, that the accounting officers of the Treasury Department may take evidence to establish the facts in reference to the claim of one of these officers to have his pay as if he had received his commission and been mustered in, and not require them to go back and make a technical change of the record. Nothing can be done now unless they can go around through the War Department and correct the records of that Department, which is an unnecessary proceeding. My amendment merely allows them to take the record as it is, and to take any evidence of the facts that may be proved; and not require, what is so much objected to in the War Department, the necessity for correcting their record. It is in entire harmony with the joint resolution reported by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly it is in harmony with that joint resolution, but it occurred to me that unless the War Department was required to construe the act of 1866 as contemplated by the act of 1870 and by this act, a latitude will be still left to that Department which would result in the act not being carried into effect.

Mr. POLAND. The joint resolution as reported by the committee requires the Department to so construe the act of 1866. But the great objection in the War Department is that it requires them to make a change in the record. The principal ground upon which they refuse to carry out the joint resolution which Congress passed some years ago was that it involves a change of their record.

This provides that the accounting officers of the Treasury may hear the evidence and determine the claim without going through this unnecessary and troublesome process of having a record corrected in the War Department.

The amendment of Mr. POLAND was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BREVET APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. COBURN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3433) relating to certain brevet appointments; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the provisions of the second section of the act entitled "An act to amend the act of April 10, 1806, for establishing rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States," approved March 1, 1869, shall not be held to embrace officers who were confirmed by the Senate for brevet appointment on the 3d day of March, 1869.

Mr. COBURN. The House should understand that quite a number of officers were promoted by brevet in the winter previous to the passage of the act of March 1, 1869. Those appointments were pending before the Senate at the time the change in the law with regard to brevets was made. The appointments were confirmed by the Senate on the 3d of March, 1869, two days after the approval of the new law. The War Department refuses to give these officers their commissions or to recognize the appointment by brevet. The object of this bill is to provide that those persons appointed previous to the passage of the act of March 1, 1869, and who were confirmed on the 3d of March, 1869, shall be entitled to their brevet rank. This measure will not cost the Government a cent; it changes no man's rank or status in the Army or out of it. It simply gives to these men that which some may regard as the empty honor of a brevet, but which many of these officers prize as a well-earned recognition of faithful service. From the fact that they were confirmed within two days after the passage of the act it is to be supposed the Senate did not construe the law in relation to brevets as applicable to them.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RUSH VALLEY MILITARY RESERVATION, UTAH TERRITORY.

Mr. COBURN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3434) to provide for the sale of the Rush Valley military reservation, in the Territory of Utah; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of War to relinquish and turn over to the Department of the Interior, for restoration to the public domain, the Rush Valley military reservation, in Utah Territory. The Secretary of the Interior is to cause the reservation to be surveyed and divided into lots of such form and such quantities of acres as shall be calculated as far as possible to promote the public interest by a suitable division of the water-privileges within the reservation; he is to offer such lots severally at public sale to the lowest bidder, not below the minimum price provided by law; and any lots left unsold after such offering at public sale shall be held for disposal as other public lands. Notice of such public sale is to be advertised for sixty days in two newspapers, one in the capital of the Territory of Utah, and the other at a point nearest to the place of sale.

Mr. COBURN. I ask that the report be read. The bill proposes a peculiar subdivision, and the report will show the reason why that is recommended.

The report was read. It states that it appears the reservation is no longer required for military purposes, and has not been since early in 1869, when the Secretary of War recommended that it be disposed of as public land. This reservation is situated in townships 4 and 5 south, of range 5 west, of Salt Lake meridian, and in the Territory of Utah. These lands are some thirty-five or forty miles southwest of Salt Lake City and in a region that is settled. The lands are valuable on account of streams of water, and Rush Lake, which is central in the reservation. The letter of General Ord, commander of the Department of the Platte, dated December 20, 1873, shows that several mills and other buildings have been erected on the reservation, and that the water-courses and lakes are of great value to smelters and mill-owners. He says further that the great value of a portion of this reservation will induce, if it has not already induced, interested parties to try and secure a large share of it without having a just claim thereto, and that on account of the scarcity of water in the vicinity and its necessity to mill-owners the lands as far as practicable should be sold with a due regard to the interests of all concerned, and only after careful surveys and divisions of the water-privileges into small lots. These suggestions seem to the committee reasonable and well calculated to protect the interests of the Government and to secure fair dealing among settlers. Unless some provisions of law are made to guard these interests serious consequences may follow.

Mr. DUNNELL. I do not see that the interests of the settlers are protected in this bill. The report says that they should be protected, but the bill provides no protection for them. This same subject has been before the Committee on Public Lands, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. COBURN. I wish to say, in answer to the gentleman from Minnesota, that these men, if there are any of them there, have encroached upon this military reservation, and the object of the bill is only to provide for such subdivision of the land that there can be no monopoly of this water-power or these water-privileges there. These men are not prevented, who may have gone in and encroached upon the public lands—they are not prevented from buying, but it is expressly provided the lands shall be surveyed and subdivided with reference to these water-privileges.

Of course men who have gone there without authority of law can have the same privilege as other persons to purchase. They certainly ought not to have any higher privileges, because they have gone there with full notice that they had no right to go upon these lands; that it was the public domain; that it was a military reservation. Whatever they make by having settled there they make clear of the Government. There is no shadow of right on the part of these men, and they cannot complain of any of the provisions of this bill. They are allowed the same privileges as others.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs again to the letter of the Secretary of War, saying that the rights of these settlers should be protected. I hold in my hand the bill now before the Committee on the Public Lands, which reads as follows:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to transfer to the custody and control of the Secretary of the Interior, to be restored to the public lands, the abandoned military reservation at Rush Lake, in the Territory of Utah, and the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the same to be surveyed and offered for sale in legal subdivisions, at $1.25 per acre: Provided, That the improvements owned by individuals on the lands hereby restored before the passage of this act shall be the sole property of such individuals, who shall have priority of right to purchase not exceeding three hundred and twenty acres of land in adjacent quarter-sections containing and adjoining said improvements; and all of said lands shall be sold and disposed of for cash only, and within the local land office having jurisdiction of the lands hereby restored.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer this bill as a substitute for the bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield for that purpose?

Mr. COBURN. I decline to yield.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to say a word. It is in the history of many of these military reservations that settlers have been invited upon them by the military commanders.

Mr. COBURN. Is that part of the history of this military reservation?

Mr. DUNNELL. I do not say it is true in regard to this reservation.

Mr. COBURN. I say it is not.

Mr. DUNNELL. I know it to be true in regard to many military reservations that honest men who, my friend from Indiana denominated "squatters," have gone on these military reservations in good faith, have made farms and large improvements; and of all these bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs to-day, in not a single one of them is there any provision for the protection of these settlers.

The gentleman says they are "squatters." He says they have no rights. I say they have rights in many instances. There are improvements on many of these reservations which are very large and valuable. In all other instances we seek to allow for these improvements.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. How did they acquire their rights upon these military reservations?

Mr. DUNNELL. I have said already that in many instances individual settlers were not only allowed to go upon these military reservations but were invited there as sutlers or mechanics.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Whatever rights they have acquired are merely the rights of tenants.

Mr. DUNNELL. Our legislation heretofore has had for its object to protect the settler no matter how he got on the public lands—to protect him as far as possible in his improvements. I say it is humane and wise legislation.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I will ask the gentleman from Minnesota whether these settlers have not made improvements which constitute a large part of the value of land?

Mr. DUNNELL. That is true. I wish to call attention to the fact that there have been to-day more bills than I have ever seen any other time during this session reported for the sale of these military reservations. That is about all the Committee on Military Affairs has reported—bills for the sale of these military reservations. To my mind this demand for the sale of these military reservations is exceedingly significant.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. The demand comes from the settlers themselves.

Mr. DUNNELL. These men who ask for this expect Congress will protect them and not abandon them to the mercy of speculators in the public lands.

Mr. DONNAN. Squatters upon the public lands have no equitable rights.

Mr. DUNNELL. Nor has there been any more fruitful source of corruption than in the public sale of these military reservations. These sales are got up and are engineered and manipulated in advance, and the sale itself is a mere farce. When some of these sales are to be made some obscure newspaper, perhaps a thousand miles off, will announce them, while the parties in the immediate vicinity will know nothing about it. I protest against this wholesale mode of selling the military reservations of the country.

Mr. COBURN. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the most remarkable argument on this point conceivable. He objects in the interest of the growth of the country to the sale of military reservations. Why, sir, the true policy of the country is to sell military reservations, and to let settlers come in upon them. Who that is in favor of the settlement of the western country can object to the disposal of military reservations? That is the last position which a man ought to assume on this floor in regard to this matter.

Why, sir, it is to put money into the Treasury, and not, as the gentleman would provide, to keep money out of it. His effort is to give this land to these men for nothing, or to give it to these men at the very most at $1.25 per acre; while we provide that it shall be sold at public auction and bring a higher price.

If there be any question of money in this matter it is in favor of these bills that the Military Committee have reported to-day. We are constantly providing that these lands, instead of being taken for nothing by squatters, or at $1.25 per acre, shall be put up at fair bidding, after public notice, and sold to the highest bidder. The gentleman talks about jobs being set up. The way, sir, to set up a job is to follow his advice. What job can there be in advertising land to be sold at public sale to the highest bidder after long notice? What men with any honest instincts would dare to make an insinuation of that kind against the committee? Why, sir, everything that has been done in relation to these reservations by the Committee on Military Affairs has been ten thousand leagues in advance of anything that has been done by the Committee on the Public Lands in relation to saving money to the Treasury and protecting the interests of the Government and in relation to fair dealing as to the sale of these lands. I make no insinuations against the gentleman's committee, or any other; but I do say the way to get the most money is to have a public sale after a fair notice, so that every one can come to it who will.

And now let me say just one word as to the settlements on these lands. How can a man get a legal settlement on a military reservation more than on an ordinary tract of land, which is not declared and defined by the powers of the Government to be a reservation? The setting off of a reservation is a notice to all the world and a notice to squatters that they must not encroach upon it, and that if they go upon it they do so with a full notice and fair understanding that they have no shadow of right there.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to say just one word in reply to the gentleman from Indiana. My objection to this mode of returning these reservations is that these lands are practically taken away from the men who wish to get them for farms. I say that when a military reservation ceases to be of value to the Government as such, it should be returned to the control of the Interior Department, to be opened to settlement under the pre-emption and homestead laws; as though that land had never been thus reserved. It ought to be opened, and not made a matter of speculation on the part of the Government or a source of revenue. Those lands should be opened and put into the hands of those who desire them for agricultural purposes and for actual settlement.

I say that those men who are on the frontier and are seeking homes are not in condition to compete with the rings that may be got up to buy off these lands. And the settler who desires to farm should have it at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, though men stood ready to pay the Government ten dollars per acre. We have adopted the homestead principle and the pre-emption principle. And because a piece of land was once a military reservation the Government ought not to take that land and speculate with it, but should let it be subject to the same laws as all the other agricultural lands of the country are subject to. I wish to say only this, that when it is proposed to sell out our military reservations to such speculators and not let those lands go back to pre-emption and settlement I must protest against it, when the settlers stand ready to buy and want them at one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

Mr. COBURN. I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. DONNAN.]

Mr. DONNAN. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] does not in my judgment submit the question to the House as he should do. A proposition like that submitted by him, which enables the public reservations of the country to be sold at a dollar and a quarter an acre, would be absolutely putting those reservations, and most valuable ones it may be, into the hands of land speculators. Where the United States have held possession of a reservation until the country all around it is settled and until the land has become valuable, as for instance in a case in regard to which I hold a bill in my hand which I shall report, the land being worth probably fifty dollars an acre to-day, in such a case does the gentleman from Minnesota propose to argue to this House that it is the duty of Congress to provide that that land shall be sold at a dollar and a quarter an acre, or that men who may have squatted upon the reservation when its boundaries were definitely settled by the Government and they had no legal rights in it whatever—does he maintain that therefore they should be protected, or, if I may use the expression, should have the inside track, and that as settlers on the public domain or as homesteaders they should get possession of land worth from fifty to one hundred dollars an acre? And yet if that should not be done in this case it is not true in any case; it is only a question of degree. I say that the Committee on Military Affairs have presented this question to the House in proper form; that is, that the public property of the country when sold should be sold for what it is worth, so that the Government may realize its full value.

Mr. COBURN. I now call the previous question.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman.

Mr. COBURN. What is it?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Does the gentleman think that sixty days' notice is sufficient in regard to valuable lands of this kind?

Mr. COBURN. I think that is enough.

Mr. COX. I would suggest to the gentleman to extend the time to ninety days.

Mr. COBURN. I have no objection to that, and will move to amend the bill in that respect. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to. The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engroseed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COBURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DETROIT ARSENAL, MICHIGAN.

Mr. DONNAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3435) to provide for the sale of the buildings and grounds known as the Detroit arsenal, in the State of Michigan.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time.

The bill directs the Secretary of War to transfer to the custody and control of the Secretary of the Interior for sale for cash, according to existing laws of the United States relating to the public lands, after appraisement, to the highest bidder, after giving not less than ninety days' notice of the time and place of such sale in three of the most prominent newspapers published in said State, at not less than the appraised value, the buildings and grounds known as the Detroit arsenal, in the State of Michigan; that the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the said property to be subdivided into tracts of not more than forty acres each, or into town lots with proper streets to render the same accessible, and that each subdivision, together with the buildings, material, and other property thereon, shall be appraised and offered separately at public outcry to the highest bidder; and in case any subdivision or subdivisions shall remain unsold, the sale shall be postponed from time to time until the tract shall be disposed of as hereinbefore provided.

Mr. DONNAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FIELDS] who introduced this bill desires to move an amendment to it so that the proceeds shall be given to the State university. If the House shall desire to admit that amendment they can vote down the previous question, which I propose to call.

Mr. FIELDS. I ask that the amendment be read.

The Clerk read the amendment, which was to add to the bill the following:

SEC. —. That the proceeds of said arsenal property, after deducting all expense attending the sale thereof, shall be, and are hereby, appropriated and set apart for the purpose of establishing at the University of Michigan a department of technology: Provided, That the Legislature of Michigan shall, within two years from the passage of this act, provide by law for the permanent maintenance of such department or school of technology at said university; the same to be open free to all the inhabitants of the United States, without discrimination on account of color or race.

Mr. GARFIELD. If that amendment is to be considered it should go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken upon the proposed amendment.

Mr. DONNAN. I call the previous question upon the bill, and do not admit the amendment.

Mr. FIELDS. I hope the House will vote down the previous question, so that I may offer the amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DONNAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONDEMNED CANNON FOR MONUMENTAL PURPOSES.

Mr. DONNAN. The Committee on Military Affairs have directed me to report back and ask to have laid on the table various bills authorizing the donation of condemned ordnance for monumental purposes. These bills have been embraced in an amendment to a Senate bill on the same subject.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that reports of this kind make a very cumbrous Journal. It appears that the legislation proposed in these various bills has been embodied in a bill already reported; and the Chair would suggest that if the gentleman had allowed these propositions to die quietly in the pigeon-hole of the committee it would have avoided the necessity for a very long entry on the Journal.

Mr. DONNAN. I have no objection to withdrawing the bills, and I will do so.

ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

Mr. ALBRIGHT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1879) to better promote the economy and efficiency of the Army, and moved that the same be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

BOUNTIES.

Mr. GUNCKEL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with an amendment in the form of a substitute, the bill (S. No. 14) in relation to bounties.

The Senate bill was as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That every volunteer non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, or private who volunteered under the proclamation of the President of the 3d day of May, 1861, and the orders of the War Department issued in pursuance thereof, and was actually mustered into the military service of the United States before August 6, 1861, into any regiment, company, or battery, and was accepted by the War Department under such proclamation and orders, shall be paid the full bounty of $100 promised to each and every volunteer by said proclamation and orders: Provided, That the same has not already been paid.

The substitute reported by the committee was as follows:

That there shall be allowed and paid to each and every non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, and private soldier, including those borne upon the rolls as slaves, who faithfully served as such in the military service of the United States, who have been honorably discharged from such service, the sum of $8.33⅓ a month for all the time which such non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, and private soldier actually so served, between the 12th day of April, 1861, and the 9th day of May, 1865.

SEC. 2. That in case of the death, either before or after the passage of this act, of any such non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier, the allowance and payment shall be made to his widow, if she has not remarried, or if there be no widow or she has remarried, then to the minor child or children of such deceased non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier.

SEC. 3. That in computing and ascertaining the bounty to be paid to any non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier, or to his proper representative, under the provisions of this act, there shall be deducted therefrom any and all bounties already paid under the provisions of any United States or State laws.

SEC. 4. That no bounty under the provisions of this act shall be paid to or on account of any soldier who served as a substitute in the Army, or who was a captured prisoner of war at the time of his enlistment, nor to any one who was discharged on his own application or request for other cause than disability incurred in the service prior to the 19th day of April, 1865, unless such discharge was obtained with a view to re-enlistment, or to accept promotion in the military or naval service of the United States, or to be transferred from one branch of the military service to another, and such person did actually so re-enlist or accept promotion, or was so transferred. And no bounty shall be paid to any soldier discharged on the application or at the request of parents, guardians, or other persons, or on the ground of minority.

SEC. 5. That every petition or application for bounty made under the provisions of this act shall disclose and state specifically, under oath and under the pains and penalties of perjury, what amount of bounty has been paid under the provisions of any United States or State laws to the non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier, by whom or by whose representative the claim is made.

SEC. 6. That the widow, if she has not remarried, or if there be no widow, or she has remarried, the minor child or children, of any non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier, whose enlistment was for a period less than one year, and who was killed or died while in the line of duty, during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, or who shall have since died by reason of wounds received or disease contracted while in such service, shall be entitled to receive the sum of $100.

SEC. 7. That in case the bounty due any person under this act shall amount to a sum not less than $100, it shall be at the option of such person to receive from the Government, through the Second Auditor of the Treasury, in lieu of such bounty, a warrant, not subject to assignment, receivable at any of the land offices of the United States in full payment of one hundred and sixty acres of any of the public lands subject to entry by homestead or purchase; and for any lands located with said warrants patents shall be issued without requiring proof of either residence or settlement.

SEC. 8. That any attorney or agent who shall receive from any claimant a sum greater than ten dollars for the prosecution of any claim under the provisions of this act, upon conviction therof shall pay a fine not to exceed $1,000 or imprisonment for a term not less than one year, or both, as the court or jury may adjudge, and shall forever thereafter be excluded from prosecuting claims of any nature whatsoever against the Government of the United States.

SEC. 9. That it shall not be lawful for any soldier to transfer, assign, barter, or sell his discharge, final statement, descriptive list, or other paper, for the purpose of transferring, assigning, bartering, or selling any interest in any bounty under the provisions of this act. And all such transfers, assignments, barters, or sales heretofore made are hereby declared null and void as to any rights intended to be so conveyed by any such soldier.

SEC. 10. That in any case where a person entitled to receive payment of bounty under the provisions of this act shall make application therefor, or where such application shall be made by the proper representative of such person, being deceased, and the discharge of such person has been lost, it shall be competent for the accounting officers to receive, in lieu of the actual production of such discharge, proof of the actual loss of the same, and secondary proof of its issue and contents, together with proof of the identity of the claimant or person deceased, under such rules defining the character and form of the evidence as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

SEC. 11. That no adjustment or payment of any claim of any non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier, or his proper representative, under the provisions of this act, shall be made, unless the application be filed within five years from the passage of the same.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I make a point of order on the seventh section of the bill, which proposes to give away the public lands. I submit that the bill must go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I hope the gentleman will not make that point. A bill making an appropriation of this kind was passed in the Thirty-ninth Congress with only a few men opposing it; and those men have never been heard of since.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I insist on my point of order, that the bill appropriates a large portion of the public domain, and must receive its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GUNCKEL. This bill simply carries out the pledges made by both political parties in their national and State platforms.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I deny that.

Mr. GUNCKEL. If the gentleman will read those platforms he will find that I am right.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I hope the gentleman from Connecticut will make no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I do make every objection known to parliamentary law.

Mr. GUNCKEL. The gentleman from Connecticut, I presume, would be in favor of a bill providing for Connecticut only. This is for the whole country.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I deny that, too; and if you give me five minutes I can show that I am right.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I can show that I am right in two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The bill provides both for payment of money and land, and under the rule it must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GUNCKEL. There is no question about the point of order if anybody chooses to make it.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

NORTHERN NEW YORK JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

Mr. POTTER. The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. COBURN] yields to enable me to report from the Committee on the Judiciary a bill (H. R. No. 3436) for the designation of non-resident judges to hold circuit and district courts in the northern district of New York and for additional terms of said court. Its passage is desired by several gentlemen from Western New York. It simply provides for the designation of a judge outside of the State to hold terms of the court in the northern district of New York and for two additional terms of that court. It is recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary. I think there will be no objection to it. I understand it will create no additional expense.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Attorney-General, upon the written request of the district judge of the northern district of New York, shall designate the district judge of some neighboring district to hold any term of the district court in the northern district of New York, and shall give the judge so designated written notice thereof, and it shall thereupon become the duty of the judge so designated and notified to attend and hold such term of said district court.

The second section provides that the Attorney-General, upon the written request of the circuit judge of the second circuit, shall designate the circuit judge of come neighboring circuit to hold any term of the circuit court in said northern district of New York, and shall give the judge so designated written notice thereof, and it shall thereupon become the duty of the judge so designated and notified to attend and hold such term of said circuit court.

The third section provides that terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States shall be held in the city of Elmira, in the northern district of New York, on the first Tuesday of April in each year, and in Ogdensburgh and Plattsburgh, in said northern district of New York, on the first Tuesday in September in each alternate year, to wit, in Ogdensburgh in September, 1874, and every two years thereafter, and in Plattsburgh in September, 1875, and every two years thereafter; provided that the said circuit and district courts may, by an order entered in the minutes of said courts respectively, change the times for the holding of the respective terms of the said courts, which order shall provide that adequate public notice shall be given of such change.

The fourth section provides that the act shall take effect in thirty days after its approval by the President.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Does this involve additional expense for public buildings or rents, or anything of that kind?

Mr. POTTER. It involves, as I understand, no additional expense of any sort.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. It provides for holding courts all over the State, and it seems there must be additional expense for hire of buildings.

Mr. POTTER. I understand it is only for holding terms of the court where they are now provided by law, with one exception, at Elmira, and as to that I prefer to refer to my colleague, Mr. SMITH, of New York.

Mr. SPEER. Is the judge who is to be designated to perform this service to do it without pay?

Mr. POTTER. Yes; without additional pay. He has a fixed salary now.

Mr. SPEER. It is expressly understood, then, that there is to be no additional expenses asked for hereafter.

Mr. POTTER. If I were going to stay in Congress forever, I might be able to give the gentleman the guarantee he asks for.

Mr. SPEER. What does the gentleman from New York say?

Mr. SMITH, of New York. It is only in case the district judge finds himself unable to hold court that there may be another judge assigned for that purpose. It is additional work when he is assigned, but it will not entitle him to one cent of additional compensation. No one dreams any such claim will be made.

Mr. SPEER. I wish that to go of record.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POTTER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

Mr. TREMAIN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3437) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the act approved May 31, 1870, entitled 'An act to enforce the rights of citizens of the United States to vote in the several States of the Union, and for other purposes,' approved February 28, 1871, and the act amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, and the act of which said act is amendatory, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

BOUNTIES.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I desire to give notice that on Monday, if I can get the floor for that purpose, I shall move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. No. 14) in relation to bounties, which has now been referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

REDUCTION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. COBURN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2546) to provide for the gradual reduction of the Army of the United States.

The bill was read.

Mr. HURLBUT. I make the point of order on this bill that it should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. The third section provides that officers discharged under the provisions of the act shall be entitled to receive in addition to the pay and allowances due them at the date of their discharge one year's pay and allowances. And section 18 provides for the muster out of the service of certain officers with one year's pay.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the third section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, at his discretion, to discharge honorably, from military service, all Army officers who may apply for a discharge on or before the 1st day of January next; and such officers, so discharged under the provisions of this act, shall be entitled to receive, in addition to the pay and allowances due them at the date of their discharge, one year's pay and allowances.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] makes the point of order that this appropriates the public money, and that therefore the bill should have its first consideration in Committee the Whole.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. This bill, I think, was reported by the committee, and was recommitted with authority to the committee to report it at any time; so that now I suppose it has the widest privilege.

The SPEAKER. That does not affect the point of order.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I had supposed from the ruling of the Chair on a former occasion that leave to report at any time took the bill out from under the operation of the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Not at all; the Chair expressly excluded that conclusion.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. In this case, or in the former case?

The SPEAKER. In the former case. The Chair never admitted the idea that the right to report a bill at any time removed it from the operation of points of order against it.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Then I was mistaken as to the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. COBURN. I wish to say a word on the point of order which is made in regard to this third section.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. COBURN. The bill does not provide for any additional pay—not a dollar. There is no additional appropriation. The man is now in the service, and if he stays in the service gets this pay. This is a mere continuation of the pay that he now has by law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the language of the section. The gentleman states that it provides for no additional pay. It says that these officers—

Shall be entitled to receive in addition to the pay and allowances due them at the date of their discharge one year's pay and allowances.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Will the Chair allow me to suggest that this simply fixes the time that the pay and allowances shall go on? It provides that they shall go on for one year from the date of the discharge. It does not increase the pay or change it at all. Suppose the bill had simply stated that the officer should receive pay up to a certain period, he would have continued to receive his pay, and the fact that the section says that he shall receive pay for a year from a certain date does not, it seems to me, change the effect of it. It is simply a continuing transaction.

Mr. POLAND. These men are in a permanent service which is to last their life-time, at a certain rate of pay. This provides a means of cutting it off; shortening the period for which they are to receive pay. It is precisely as if the bill should provide that after the expiration of one year from a certain time their pay should cease. It is a limitation upon their pay. It is a saving of money to the Treasury, instead of being an additional expenditure. These men are already in service under a pay which is to continue for the whole period of their lives. This provides that they may be retired and that their pay may continue for one year from the period of their retirement. It is precisely the same as if it said they might be retired at one year from a certain date. It is a limitation upon the pay which the law now gives them instead of being additional pay.

Mr. HURLBUT. I think the gentleman from Vermont has not stated the proposition correctly. No officer of the Army is under pay for life. That is not the fact. He is under pay while he is lawfully in the service of the Government. When he ceases to be in the service of the Government he is not entitled to pay under any law that exists now. This bill proposes to give him in addition to the pay and allowances due him one year's pay and allowances after he ceases to perform duty. But it is subject to be amended, and a proposition that ten or twenty years' pay should be given would be a germane amendment.

The SPEAKER. The point made by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] is analogous to that which has often been made, that a bill repealing a tax was not subject to the point of order that it should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, because it is not a revenue bill as it proposes to dispense with revenue instead of receiving it. That has been very often overruled on the ground that a germane amendment might be put upon it increasing the revenue.

Now, this bill in all its sections might be amended so as to largely increase the Army; there would be no possibility of ruling out a germane amendment to each section that might increase the Army. Take the sixth section, for instance, which provides that the number of aids of the General of the Army shall not hereafter exceed three.

Suppose an amendment should be offered that the number of aids shall not hereafter exceed twelve; that would be a germane amendment and could not by any possibility be ruled out. It would therefore be in the power of the majority of the House to entirely change the bill.

In regard to the point which the gentleman makes upon the third section, that section provides an appropriation of money not now authorized by law. There is the point, gentlemen will observe; it provides for an appropriation of money not now authorized by law. The pay of an Army officer is now authorized by law for services. This third section proposes to give him a gratuity in case he shall do a certain act; that is, shall resign. Therefore it provides for an appropriation not authorized by any existing law. The Chair thinks it is very clear that the bill should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, that point of order having been raised.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I have an amendment which I desire may be printed and referred with this bill to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will request the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] to wait until it can be ascertained whether at the time the Committee on Military Affairs was authorized to report this bill at any time, authority was given for it to be reported for consideration in the House. That entry may have been made upon the Journal.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I think that was the order.

Mr. COBURN. Unanimous consent was obtained to allow this bill to be reported at any time.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Of course it was natural to expect that such a bill as this would encounter this point of order, and I supposed that it was fortified against it.

Mr. COBURN. The question in my mind is whether, unanimous consent having been given to report this bill at any time, that would not obviate the operation of the rule.

The SPEAKER. That would depend upon the record of the Journal. The House will observe that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] does not now report this bill under the general authority given for the Committee on Military Affairs to report to-day, but under a privilege previously granted to the committee to report it at any time. It may be that the record in the Journal will obviate the point of order.

MONTGOMERY, ALABAMA.

Mr. CONGER. While the Journal is being examined I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Commerce a bill (H. R. No. 899) to constitute Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, a port of delivery. I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Has this bill been considered by the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. CONGER. I never heard of such a bill as this being considered by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. SPEER. Does not this bill provide for a lot of new custom-house officers?

Mr. CONGER. It provides for one deputy collector at $1,500 a year.

Mr. SPEER. I must raise the point of order upon this bill.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw it for a moment until I can explain the bill.

Mr. SPEER. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. This is an interior port, and the large amount of business transacted there and the amount of foreign importations going there require that it shall be made a port of delivery, as Natchez, Memphis, Saint Louis, and Pittsburgh are made ports of delivery. The application for this is from the merchants and business men of that city. The additional expense is limited to the usual one of a deputy collector at $1,500 a year, with no other expense.

Mr. SPEER. No office rent?

Mr. CONGER. No office rent and no other expense. As it is so late in the session, I trust the gentleman will not make the point of order on this bill.

Mr. BROMBERG. Montgomery is now the center of five railroads, the capital of the State, and the head of river navigation.

Mr. SPEER. I withdraw the point of order under very heavy pressure.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPORTATION OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. BURCHARD submitted a report from a committee of conference.

The Clerk began the reading of the report, and read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill No. 208, to facilitate the exportation of distilled spirits, and amendatory of the acts in relation thereto, having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from their first amendment.

That the House recede from their disagreement to the second, third, and fourth amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

The committee further recommend the following as a substitute for the bill: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following——

Mr. STARKWEATHER. That provides a new bill entirely, and it should be printed.

Mr. BURCHARD. The substance of the bill was printed by order of the Senate.

Mr. POTTER. This provides for a new bill.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. It should be printed.

Mr. BURCHARD. I have no objection to its being printed; but it is simply a redraught of the Senate bill.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. We cannot understand it without being printed.

The report of the committee of conference was received, and ordered to be printed.

REDUCTION OF THE ARMY.

The SPEAKER. The Journal of March 17 shows the record, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COBURN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 2546) to provide for the gradual reduction of the Army of the United States; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to said committee, ordered to be printed, and made a special order for the first Tuesday in April next; appropriation bills and contested-elections to take precedence.

Mr. COBURN. Mr. Speaker, that is not the last record.

The SPEAKER The second record is on May 11. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. COBURN, by unanimous consent, ordered that the Committee on Military Affairs be allowed to report the bill (H. R. No. 2546) to provide for the gradual reduction of the Army of the United States at any time.

Mr. CONGER. That is all there is of the order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see that in those two orders this bill was excepted from the point of order which has been made. The gentleman will observe that in the first order the bill is made a special order, subject only to the precedence of appropriation bills and contested-election cases. Appropriation bills were of course in Committee of the Whole, so that the implication was that this might also be in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COBURN. Let me remind the Chair of just one thing that occurred when that order was made. I had the floor upon a motion to suspend the rules to make this bill a special order for a particular day, setting aside all other orders; and the Chair, interrupting me, remarked that it would be best not to ask for that order, but to have the committee authorized to report at any time, and that I could make an arrangement with the Chair for an early disposition of the bill; that this would be better than fixing a special day for its consideration. So that I regard this as having a higher privilege than if it had been fixed for a special day. Whether the assignment of the bill to a special day would have exempted it from this point of order is a question I do not pretend to decide.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will observe that the right to discuss in Committee of the Whole any appropriation of money is one of the most important rights under the rules of the House; and the Chair would not feel authorized at any time to consider that point as waived inferentially; it must be done by direct action of the House. The Chair of course finds at times that this is a point which he might not desire to enforce, as he does not now; but his own sympathies upon any measure cannot govern him in his construction of the rules. The rule in question is absolute, and it is one of the most important rules of the House (if not the most important) for the preservation of the public Treasury. The Chair can never consider that rule as waived inferentially. It will, however, be the duty of the Chair on next Monday to give the gentleman an early recognition, so that he may have an opportunity by a suspension of the rules to secure the consideration of this bill in the House. The Chair would not feel at liberty to go further than this upon the record made in the Journal.

Mr. COBURN. Would it not be in order to make a motion at once to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. But that would not avail the gentleman unless he obtained previous consent to lay aside all intervening bills on the Calendar which would take precedence.

Mr. DAWES. As this is a matter that may affect the business of the Committee on Ways and Means on next Tuesday, I wish to inquire why the gentleman cannot move to go into Committee of the Whole on matters pertaining to the business of the Military Committee, to the exclusion of all other matters?

The SPEAKER. Such a motion cannot be recognized. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union has a Calendar which consists of bills of two classes. One class embraces those which have been made special orders by the House; the other those that are on the general Calendar. As the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] well knows, bills made special orders by the House can only be laid aside by a vote of the House; but bills in committee which are not special orders may be laid aside by a vote of the committee. If the House should now go into Committee of the Whole, and if in committee the gentleman from Indiana should move to lay aside each of the intervening bills, (of which there are probably one hundred,) this bill would be reached.

Mr. DAWES. Does not the suspension of all orders enable the House to-day to consider business of the Military Committee in the House and also in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. DAWES. Let me illustrate my inquiry. Suppose that the Committee on Ways and Means report on next Tuesday a tariff bill; of course it must go to the Committee of the Whole; but it was the expectation of the committee that after they had transacted their business in the House they could move to go into the Committee of the Whole to dispose of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see on what ground.

Mr. DAWES. Because next Tuesday, by order of the House, has been devoted to the consideration of reports from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman will observe——

Mr. DAWES. If the Speaker will indulge me a moment, the idea of the Committee on Ways and Means is that if Tuesday is devoted to considering matters from that committee, it means the consideration of such matters by any methods known to the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it means this: that it being considered improbable, if not impossible, that the Committee on Ways and Means should be reached upon the regular call of committees in the morning hour, (which would give the committee two hours, and an additional hour if anything should go over,) they were allowed next Tuesday in lieu of their privileges upon the regular call of committees; and therefore they will be at liberty on that day to do anything that they would be able to do on the regular call during the morning hour—nothing more.

Mr. DAWES. Under that ruling, the order which gave Tuesday to the Committee on Ways and Means would be of no avail to them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must remember his committee was anxious for two or three weeks as to whether they would be on call or not; and finding they would not be on call, this order was substituted. It was substituted to give the Committee on Ways and Means the precise right they would have if they were reached on call.

Mr. DAWES. The ruling, I will state, led on the part of the committee to this inference: On the day set apart for the business of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the third Friday of each month, when that committee reported bills which under the rules went to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, they immediately moved to go into committee for the purpose of taking up for consideration the bills they had just reported.

The SPEAKER. It was because the Committee on the District of Columbia was excluded from the regular call of committees. When the Committee on the District of Columbia had that privilege given to them, it was because they were stricken from the regular call of committees.

Mr. DAWES. Now Tuesday is given to the Committee on Ways and Means as to-day was given to the Committee on Military Affairs. Why are we not just like the Committee on the District of Columbia in regard to the business which we may report from the Committee on Ways and Means?

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, has simply to repeat what he has already stated. The Committee on Ways and Means is in precisely the same attitude they would be if they were reached on regular call. Besides, this is not a new matter; it occurs every Congress. The Judiciary Committee has Wednesday, the Ways and Means Committee Tuesday, and the Military Affairs to-day. They were all given these days because they could not be reached on regular call. It was not intended to extend the power to report anything which was not in order under the regular call. All parliamentary points which could be made against a report when the committee was on regular call, of course can be made against reports from the same committees when made on days assigned to them.

Mr. DAWES. If the Speaker will indulge me a moment more I will state that the order must mean more than that when it gave us that day instead of the regular call, because it gives us not one hour but a whole day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will observe that if the Committee on Ways and Means were reached on the morning call of committees they would have one hour and then a second hour, and if anything went over they would have the morning hour until that was disposed of, if it took six weeks.

Mr. DAWES. We have all day Tuesday and all the rules of the House to avail ourselves of. One of these rules is that we may move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider matters reported from the Committee on Ways and Means. If I understand it we not only have all day Tuesday, but we have all the rules of the House on that day at our command.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker begs to differ with the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONGER. Will it not be in order in reference to this bill to move to recommit it with power to report at any time for consideration in the House?

The SPEAKER. That will require unanimous consent.

Mr. CONGER. Could it not be done to-day?

The SPEAKER. Yes, if you get unanimous consent. It can be done on Monday, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana to move to suspend the rules for that purpose.

Mr. CONGER. Of course I refer to the military bill.

The SPEAKER. So the Chair understands.

Mr. KELLOGG. Has the Committee on Ways and Means been passed on the second call.

The SPEAKER. It has not, and the probability is it will not be reached on the second call?

Mr. KELLOGG. Have we gone through the second call of committees?

The SPEAKER. The call now rests with the Select Committee on the Mississippi Levees and they have pending in the morning hour a bill which will be the first thing in order in the morning hour, if we ever have a morning hour.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then the Committee on Ways and Means has had its first call.

The SPEAKER. Long ago.

Mr. DONNAN. I hope the Committee on Military Affairs will have the power, if the bill be recommitted to them, to report back at any time for consideration in the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make that request?

Mr. DONNAN. I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the bill for the reduction of the Army may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HURLBUT. I object.

Mr. DONNAN. Then I ask that it be referred to the committee with power to report it back at any time for consideration as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to recommitting the bill to the Committee on Military Affairs with power to report back at any time to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule?

Mr. GARFIELD. I must ask the gentleman to except the appropriation bills.

Mr. DONNAN. The appropriation bills are so far advanced I do not think it can interfere with them.

Mr. HURLBUT. This is too important a measure to be considered under any short rule.

Mr. COBURN. I give notice that on Monday, if I can get the floor for that purpose, I will move to suspend the rules, so as to have the arrangement made in regard to this bill which has been indicated by my colleague, the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. DONNAN.]

The SPEAKER. It will be the duty of the Chair to give the gentleman from Indiana the very first recognition on Monday to move a suspension of the rules in connection with this bill.

MARY E. GROSVENOR.

Mr. DONNAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3438) granting a pension to Mary E. Grosvenor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPEER. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. POLAND. The Committee on the Judiciary, authorized to report the bill at any time, have directed me to report back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3097) in relation to courts and judicial officers in the Territory of Utah.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Ways and Means a bill amending the customs and internal-revenue acts, that it may be printed and recommitted.

Mr. FIELD. I object.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, it was agreed to.

And accordingly (at three o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) If no objection be made that order will be made. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 732) supplementary to the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes;" which I presume will take but a moment.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The Committee on Railroads reported an amendment to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the Texas and Pacific Railway Company is hereby empowered to secure, by one or more mortgages upon the whole or any portion of its line, the construction bonds heretofore authorized to be issued, and to cancel the mortgage now on record with the Secretary of the Interior so far as the same can be done without prejudice to existing rights, and to substitute therefor the mortgage or mortgages hereby authorized, which substituted mortgages shall expressly reserve all rights which may have been acquired under the existing mortgage: Provided, That the aggregate of the said bonds to be issued under and secured by said mortgage or mortgages shall not exceed the limit heretofore fixed by Congress; and said mortgages for the division east of Fort Worth shall embrace the roads and property of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and of the Southern Transcontinental Railway Company, heretofore merged in and consolidated with the said Texas and Pacific Railway Company under the authority and requirements of the laws of the State of Texas; and which roads so merged as aforesaid shall for that and all other purposes be deemed and taken to be a part of the said Texas and Pacific Railway, and shall hereafter be subject to all the provisions and limitations of the act of Congress incorporating said company and of the supplements thereto.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained, particularly in respect to that part of it which declares that these other roads shall be taken to be a part of the Texas Pacific Railway Company for all purposes. I wish to know how that affects rights to public lands or any other of the rights which the Texas Pacific Company per se has obtained or is to obtain from the United States.

Mr. SCOTT. I will state very briefly the whole effect of the bill. The first clause of it authorizes the company to substitute for the existing mortgage anot er mortgage preserving all existing rights. The purpose of that is simply this: The original act under which the existing mortgage was placed upon the road fixed the amount at $40,000 per mile, and that is the amount which is now placed upon the road. Out of the funds obtained from subscriptions the company have constructed from three to four hundred miles of road, and now they are desirous of placing upon that end of the road a mortgage at a less rate than $40,000 a mile, because by doing so upon a completed and equipped line of road they can secure money at a much lower rate than upon a mortgage at $40,000 on the whole line.

That is the purpose of the first clause of the bill, and it is so evident that it needs no argument to show its propriety, and the bill itself requires that no existing rights shall be disturbed; indeed, that all existing rights shall be preserved. My information is that no bonds have been issued under the first mortgage except those which have been pledged as collateral security for some money advanced, and which are entirely within the control of the company.

The second part of the bill, about which the Senator from Vermont made special inquiry, gives no new rights so far as the United States are concerned to this company whatever. These companies have consolidated in pursuance of the acts of the Legislature of Texas which are named in that section. They are not strictly and technically upon the line which was originally designated in the act incorporating this company; that is, they are not upon, although near, the thirty-second parallel, but they make the continuous line from Marshall through to San Diego.

This bill was submitted to the Senator from Texas, [Mr. HAMILTON,] who is a member of the committee that reported the bill, and he finds no objection to it. He gave his assent to the reporting of the bill. The whole subject was fully considered in the Committee on Railroads, and no objection was found to reporting the bill in its present form, being a substitute for that which was originally introduced.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In order to protect the United States against some inconvenience that it has hitherto been subjected to by similar acts—not upon this line of railroad—I move to add this section:

SEC. —. That nothing in this act shall be construed or have the effect to entitle said corporation to any other or further rights to public lands or in any other respect as against the United States than such as by law it is now entitled to.

Mr. SCOTT. I see no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. Let me suggest to the Senator from Vermont that he include in his amendment, after the word "law," the words "and by virtue of this act."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at all. That is the very point I want to guard against. I do not intend, if I can help it, that this railway company or any other shall get further rights than the law gives.

Mr. SCOTT. As I caught the language originally, I thought there was no objection to the amendment; but I noticed the difficulty encountered by the Clerk in reading the language of the Senator from Vermont and feared it might not be entirely clear. Let it be read again.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will read it:

SEC. —. That nothing in this act shall be construed or have the effect to entitle such corporation to any other or further rights to public lands, or in any other respect as against the United States, than such as by law it is now entitled to.

Mr. SCOTT. I have no objection to that.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

THE PENSION LAWS.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2453) to amend an act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the laws relating to pensions," approved March 3, 1873.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the fourth section of the act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the laws relating to pensions," approved March 3, 1873, by adding the following:

Provided further, That all persons who, under like circumstances have lost an arm at or above the elbow shall be rated in the second class, and shall receive twenty-four dollars per month.

The Committee on Pensions proposed to amend the bill in line 6, by striking out the word "thereto" and inserting the words "after the first proviso."

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I do not know how often it shall fall to my lot to seem to interfere with the measures in charge of other Senators. It is not very agreeable to do so; but I feel bound, often enough to keep the Senate reminded of it, to call attention to the fact that legislation in this form is going to lead to confusion hereafter, and very likely to fail altogether. I do not think any such proviso will appear in the codification of the laws as the Senator refers to in this bill; I feel quite sure that no section will appear there numbered like that section; and therefore I suggest to the Senator from Indiana, as I have ventured to suggest sometimes before, that the true way to make this act effectual is, instead of this reference, to say in affirmative words, complete in themselves, what the law shall be as we mean to make it. If the purpose is to provide that soldiers who have been injured to a certain extent shall receive a certain grade of pension, that, I submit, is the way to state it; but if it be stated in this mode, it may fail altogether when the codified statutes shall become law, and if it does not fail it is certain by misreference and imperfect reference to lead to confusion, possibly to contrariety of understanding and hinderance and trouble.

As I said, it is not agreeable to be continually making suggestions to other members of the Senate in this regard; but if each Senator would reflect on this subject, it would relieve him and relieve me from the ungracious business of repeating these interruptions. Of course, I make the suggestion only in the interest of the bill.

Mr. PRATT. The Committee on Pensions of this body took this bill as it came from the House of Representatives. If they were to overhaul all these bills and cut them down to suit the views of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, it would amount practically to a prevention of the bills being acted upon in this body during this session, because the Senate is aware that we have adopted a rule by which we meet at eleven o'clock, and that gives but a very small margin indeed for the committee work, especially of those committees who meet once a week. The Committee on the Revision of the Laws, I apprehend, will not abolish the existing statutes; that is to say, they will remain in existence for the purposes of reference. Now, there is not the least ambiguity in this bill. It simply takes up a certain class of invalids—those who have lost an arm above the elbow—and puts them in the second class of those who have received permanent specific disability, and so gives them, instead of eighteen dollars a month, twenty-four dollars a month pension. That is the simple proposition. I imagine nobody could be deceived in reading this bill, as to what it meant. I hope, therefore, the Senate will act upon the bill, and pass it in its present form.

Mr. CONKLING. I should complain of the Senator from Indiana if I supposed he meant exactly what he said, or said exactly what he meant. He spoke of overhauling the bills that come from the House to suit the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. That, I submit to him, is rather an odd mode of stating the point. What is it to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws any more than to any other committee? And what has the Committee on the Revision of the Laws done which makes any requirement of the Senate? Nothing. Under repeated statutes, passed the first of them eight or ten years ago, a revision of all the statutes of the United States has been made involving a large expenditure of labor and money. The House of Representatives has acted upon that revision; it is here now awaiting action by the Senate; and the importance of doing it has been affirmed by succeeding Congresses, and by the vote of the Senator from Indiana among others, for I think I am not mistaken in supposing that without any division the last statute passed under which this work has been completed. Therefore the Committee on the Revision of the Laws have nothing to do with it except that they happen to be the members of the Senate intrusted with a somewhat vexatious, complex, and onerous piece of work.

Now if the Senator from Indiana thinks it is wise, after years have been devoted to codifying the statutes, after the other House has acted upon the revision and we are about to act upon it, to persist unnecessarily in putting our laws in such a form as to destroy the value of the work, I need not say to him that that is a matter of no more grief to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws than to the Committee on Pensions or any other committee of the Senate.

The Senator said that the proposition here was entirely simple, and he stated in a single breath what it was. Is not that the best of all arguments for stating it so on the record? Yet the Senator says the bill has passed the House in this form. Yes, a bill passed the House in this form which was here the other morning, which looked like a very complicated matter, a bill which was reported by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CHANDLER,] and this suggestion being made, we devoted ourselves to changing the form of it, and it required here in the Senate the labor of about ten minutes, I think, to do it, and then the bill was recast so as to conform to the necessity of the case.

One other word and I have done, because, especially in view of the remarks of the Senator from Indiana, I shall feel myself exonerated from rising on all occasions to remind Senators of what they understand as well as I do. The Senator says this is so simple and the reference is so obvious that it can never be mistaken hereafter. I want to repeat once more, and I wish every Senator to hear it, that the act to which reference is made here and every other statute of the United States is to be repealed. It has been repealed by the House; it is to be repealed by the Senate if we act favorably on the work. Why? Because having all been rewritten, recast, and condensed so as to go into a single volume, that and that alone is to constitute the whole body of statute law; and therefore this proviso will be repealed in terms, the act will be repealed in terms; and yet the Senator from Indiana, who is a distinguished lawyer, says to us there cannot be any doubt about it, the statute will exist to be referred to. Yes, I do not suppose anybody will go and burn up by the common hangman the present volume containing the statutes, but they not only will be disused and obsolete, but repealed in law and in fact, and as null as if they had never existed. Now, if the Senator from Indiana thinks it worth while to go on with this, I certainly have discharged my duty on this occasion, I think; and if any exception is taken by Senators to these reminders, I shall endeavor to make them very few in the future, for I certainly do not want to be officious in discharging the small measure of duty which may rest upon me in this regard; but if this legislation is to go on it will lead to confusion, and vitiate and in large part destroy all the usefulness of a work which has cost many thousand dollars and many years of labor.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, I have but a word to say in conclusion. There are a great many bills on our Calendar—I do not know how many—that are subject to the same objection which has been preferred to this bill by the Senator from New York. I repeat, if those bills are all to be overhauled, if they are to be sent back to the committees to be reconstructed so that they shall contain no reference whatever to existing laws, it will involve an immense amount of work and of delay. I wish to take the sense of the Senate upon this proposition now. I know that there are bills here that I have reported which contain the same objectionable feature pointed out by the Senator from New York. It will be a work of considerable art to construct an amendment to an existing law without making some reference to that law. That is precisely what the committee have done here. They have taken up an existing law patent to everybody, and said, we will extend one proviso to another class of disabled soldiers and raise their pension from eighteen dollars to twenty-four dollars a month. Now, that statute of March 3, 1873, will last as long as time lasts for the purpose of reference. It becomes incorporated in this bill. Therefore, as this question is going to be of frequent occurrence, I do not know a better time to ask the sense of the Senate upon the question than now. There does not seem to be any dispute about the language of this bill. I do not hear any objection upon that score.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PRATT. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. I do it to correct an error, as I think, into which he falls. He seems to suppose that it is to be incumbent upon us always, Congress after Congress, to change the form of legislation. I hope it will be changed, but I correct the Senator in that respect. As soon as action is taken upon the codified laws, the revised laws, and they become a volume, if Senators want to refer to acts as they stand by the title they will then assume and by the number of sections which will then be borne, they can do so. The objection is only to doing it during this brief interval. I do not think we ever should return to it. I think legislating by relation is a vicious way of setting traps for people and indefensible under any system or under any circumstances. However, if the Senate is ready to do it, and it is thought desirable, in place of saying what you mean the law to be, that in section so and so of such an act amended by such an act such a word shall be stricken out and another word shall be put in, so that those who want to find out what the law is hereafter are compelled to go through a process not quite as complicated as calculating an eclipse, but a good deal like it—if the Senate are wedded to that, they can do it by referring to this volume as it will be. The point now is, as we are about to act upon that codification and it is about to come into being, and we cannot refer to them, it is unwise to refer to statutes which are not only superseded but themselves repealed in terms.

Mr. PRATT. I barely wish to say that this bill is no other or different from the bills that have been enacted from the formation of this Government, in its structure. Wherever a law has been amended it has been amended by reference. That has been the common practice, and it will be the practice hereafter.

This is all I have to say on this subject. If the Senate think proper to recommit the bill to the Committee on Pensions, that is the end of this measure at the present session, because it is impossible for us to go over our work again and reconstruct all of our bills and adapt them to the views of the Senator from New York.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me the difficulty suggested by the Senator from New York might be gotten over very easily. Three words would change this bill so as to meet the difficulty made by the Senator from New York, and at the same time meet the concurrence of the Senator from Indiana. My objection goes to the merits of the bill itself.

One year ago Congress by a carefully revised law consolidated, codified, and amended the whole pension laws of the United States. It arranged the pensions into three distinct and well-defined classes. The first consisted of cases of total and absolute disability, where a person was unable to feed himself, or do anything without assistance, and required constant attendance. That was called a case of total disability. Then the second class consisted of those persons who could not get along in the ordinary functions of life without some assistance, who were compelled to have assistance to rise or to move about, who were not able to support themselves, who were deprived of all the means of locomotion, of both hands, of both arms, or both legs. These were cases of practical disability and constituted the second class. The third class consisted of those who had lost a leg or an arm, who were able to move about, who had the power of locomotion, who could use an artificial limb with facility, could earn a livelihood; for instance, one who had lost his left arm could still use his right arm for writing. These classes were carefully defined by law. One was to receive thirty-two dollars per month, one twenty-four, and the other eighteen.

A person who has lost an arm is included in the third class, and very properly so, because the loss of his left arm or his right arm does not absolutely disable him, nor is it within the middle class of disability which prevents him moving around so that he is required to have the constant attendance of some other person to aid him. The loss of an arm or a limb is a great misfortune indeed; but it is not a disability that disables a man from moving about and earning a livelihood in certain employments. Now, to change this classification by the exception made in this case, it seems to me, would mar the symmetry of the law. If you allow a person who has lost an arm at or above the elbow to enter into the second or third class of disability, you entirely change and mar the symmetry of the law and make other amendments necessary.

Mr. PRATT. Allow me to correct my friend at that point. If he carefully examines the law of March 3, 1873, which consolidates the pension laws, he will find the following proviso under the third class:

Provided, That all persons who, under like circumstances, have lost a leg above the knee, and in consequence thereof are so disabled that they cannot use artificial limbs, shall be rated in the second class, and shall receive twenty-four dollars per month.

Mr. SHERMAN. On the contrary I have read that, and it seems to me there is logic in that, because such a person cannot use an artificial limb; by losing his leg above the knee he is disabled of the power of locomotion, and therefore he may be rated in the second class; but can that be said of a man who has lost his arm above the elbow? Not at all; because if he has one arm still he is classed in the third class and properly described in the third class, being the case of one who has lost one leg or one arm, or is not so disabled but what he can move around and perform the ordinary functions of life.

I think therefore, in the kindness of heart of my friend from Indiana, we are running great danger of enlarging too much our pension-list. It requires some courage to stand up and resist a pension or even to deny that twenty-four dollars a month is too much for a man who has lost an arm in the service of his country. No one likes to do that; but there must be a limit to these pensions; there must be some defined rules which are just and equitable in themselves; and after long and laborious examination, after an experience of nine years since the close of the war, these rules were codified into a law passed at the last session which seems to have received the greatest care. It is logical all the way through. And now to take a class of persons who have suffered an injury by the loss of an arm above the elbow instead of below from the third to the second class, thus increasing the pension at the rate of six dollars per month or seventy-two dollars a year—for how many persons I will ask the Senator? How many are probably embraced in this provision? No doubt the Commissioner of Pensions can tell.

Mr. PRATT. I do not remember the number. I have a list among my papers of the different classes of permanent specific disabilities that I could refer to if I had a little time, but I do not remember now.

Mr. SHERMAN. I take it it is a pretty large number, because the disabilities by the loss of an arm must be very large in proportion to the whole number of pensioners. But that makes no difference as to the principle. Here is a proposition to increase the pension seventy-two dollars a year for every person so disabled; and it does not follow at all that a man who has lost his arm above the elbow is so much more affected than one who has lost it below, as to justify a discrimination by transferring him from the third to the second class.

I trust therefore that this bill will be allowed to rest where it is without being passed, and that the pension law which was only codified carefully a year ago will be left to work out its logical sequences. I desire to mention that my attention is called to the pension laws now because there are one or two features reported from the Pension Committee which involve an additional expense of six or eight millions a year and we must pause; we must look to it. There is one bill lying on our table, reported by the Senator from Indiana, that, if I am correctly informed—and he can correct me if I am not—will add to the pensions of the country, for a while at least, from six to eight million dollars a year. Under the circumstances I feel called upon to object to the passage of this bill unless there is some clear and logical reason for it.

As to the proposition of the Senator from New York it does seem to me that the Senator from Indiana ought to yield to it and state in a few simple words, which can be introduced by either Senator, what this law means, independent of the codification of 1873, by simply declaring that a person who had lost his arm above the elbow should be entitled to a pension in the second class. Indeed it could be worded in fewer words than are contained in the bill.

Mr. PRATT. I have looked among my papers since the Senator made the inquiry, and I find the following statement from the Commissioner of Pensions in a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives on the 15th of December last:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 15 1873.

SIR: In response to your request of the 11th instant, to be informed "how many there are totally disabled, or who are drawing pensions of $31.25 per month, under the first clause of section 4, act of March 3, 1873," I have the honor to state that an examination of the pension-rolls shows the names of 691 thus inscribed, and classified as follows:

Insane	35
For loss of both arms	32
For loss of both hands	3
For loss of both eyes	270
For loss of both legs	42
For other disabilities	309
Total	691

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. H. BAKER,
Commissioner.

Hon. J. M. RUSK,
Chairman Committee on Invalid Pensions, House of Representatives.

This does not answer the precise question of the Senator from Ohio. I am not able to give him the exact number that this bill will affect, but I apprehend it cannot exceed two or three hundred. The testimony of all the soldiers with whom I have conversed is that in the practical affairs of life a man who has lost an arm above the elbow has a less capacity to earn his subsistence than a man who has lost his leg above the knee. That is the general testimony. I have had two or three interviews with the Pension Office upon this very question. Although they are not very decided upon the subject, yet the inclination of the medical referee and of the Commissioner of Pensions is to recommend the passage of this House bill increasing the pension of this class of invalids from eighteen dollars to twenty-four dollars per month.

Now, Mr. President, as the morning hour is about expiring, I hope the sense of the Senate will be taken on the merits of the bill as it comes from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator from Indiana adhere to his intention of leaving the bill in the form it is, referring to a proviso in a certain section of the act of March 3, 1873?

Mr. PRATT. I do.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is proposed to pass this bill, I submit to the Senator from Indiana that it is very easy to change it so as to read:

Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act all persons now entitled to pensions under existing laws who shall have lost an arm at or above the elbow, shall be rated in the second class, and shall receive twenty-four dollars a month.

It will shorten the bill and avoid the objection of the Senator from New York.

Mr. PRATT. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

THE MARBLE ROOM.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer the following order, which is the usual one to give the Senators the use of the Marble Room during the rest of the session:

Ordered, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to exclude from the Marble Room and adjacent corridor during the sittings of the Senate, for the residue of the session, all persons not entitled to admission to the floor of the Senate.

The order was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask leave to call up the report of the committee of conference on the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, which is the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I desire to proceed with that; but before we go on with it, I should like to act on this report of the committee of conference, which I believe is privileged, and will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report of the committee of conference on House bill No. 1013, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1013) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5, 8, 9, 12, and 20.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 13, 17, and 19.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "fifteen," and in lieu thereof insert the word "eighteen;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the words "two hundred and fifty," and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with the following amendment: Strike out of said amendment the words "and sixty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

A. A. SARGENT,
LOT M. MORRILL,
H. G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
EUGENE HALE,
J. HANCOCK,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

THE CONGRESSIONAL PRINTER—EXPLANATIONS.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I find in the Washington Chronicle of this morning a letter addressed to myself, which seems to me to call for a brief statement or explanation.

In the course of a debate which took place here on the 19th instant, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] referred to some charges which as he understood were pending against the Congressional Printer and were under investigation. I did not remember any such charges at the time, and took occasion to say so. That correction or attempted correction of mine has brought out a letter from F. & J. Rives & George A. Bailey, proprietors of the Globe. It appears in the Chronicle of this morning. The original letter I believe came to my hands on Friday last, while I was preparing some notes from which I intended to address the Senate and did address the Senate on the next day. I saw that the letter was from this firm; I saw that it was quite lengthy, that it was accompanied by a printed pamphlet; and not having the time to attend to it then, I laid it upon the table in the committee-room; and as you are aware the Senate was kept here from its meeting on Friday morning until a late hour on Saturday morning, and I went to my home and only saw the committee-room this morning. So it happens that the first time I had the pleasure of perusing this letter was when it was placed in my hands this morning in the Washington Chronicle.

Mr. President, this letter seems rather to impeach the accuracy of the statement I made to the Senate the other day. That statement was in substance that I was not aware of any charges pending against the Congressional Printer. By way of correction this letter says that—

On the 31st of January last we placed before Senator ANTHONY several examples (out of many scores) of the Congressional Printer's method of accounting for the paper used in his office, and showing how he has for years systematically charged it in his accounts at a very much higher rate than its cost.

This allegation is that this information was laid before the chairman of the Committee on Public Printing. The chairman of the Committee on Public Printing is present; I have never known him disabled to speak for himself; and I think I shall leave him to speak in reference to this point in the letter. The letter goes on to say that—

Something over two months ago the House passed a resolution without a dissenting voice, after the same had been unanimously reported by its Committee on Printing, directing the joint committee to investigate the alleged abuses existing at the Government Printing Office. When this resolution reached the Senate it was referred to your committee, and to the best of our information it slumbers there yet.

Mr. President, I think the writers of that letter were somewhat mistaken. On the 11th of March a resolution was passed in the House of Representatives, which reads as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that grave abuses exist in the Government Printing Office; and whereas the abolition of the franking privilege will largely reduce the amount of public printing: Therefore,

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the Joint Committee on Printing be required to report, by bill or otherwise, whether the Government Printing Office cannot be discontinued, and whether large sums of money cannot be annually saved by a change in the method of doing the public printing; and that said Joint Committee on Printing have power to send for persons and papers.

This resolution reached the Senate, and was on the 18th of March referred to the Senate Committee on Public Printing. It was not accompanied by any charges or specifications setting forth what the "grave abuses" were, but it simply stated that it was "alleged" that such "grave abuses exist." The Senate Committee on Public Printing was at that time engaged in investigating certain specific charges made against the management of the Government Printing Office, and it was known to us that the House Committee on Printing was also engaged in investigating the cost of publishing the debates of Congress, in which investigation the entire management of the Government Printing Office had been called in question. The Senate Committee on Public Printing consequently decided not to recommend a concurrence in the resolution passed by the House until after the distinct investigations being made by the two committees should have been completed, when any distinct or direct charges not already examined by one or the other committee could be presented as a legitimate basis for an investigation.

The letter next goes on to say:

On the 13th day of April, about five weeks since, in our closing argument before the House Printing Committee, having under consideration the question of the publication of the debates, we distinctly and directly charged the Congressional Printer, in his very presence, with being a defaulter to the Government in his paper accounts to the extent of $49,000, and this, too, entirely exclusive of the overcharge for the paper consumed.

Now, Mr. President, all I have to say about that is these two things: First, that I have heard of it for the first time as I find it stated in this paper; that allegation was made in the course of an argument, says the letter, made before the House Committee on Printing, of which I am not a member, and at a time when I was not present. It is now given to the public through the columns of a public journal. It is communicated to me I suppose directly by letter, for I take it for granted this is a true copy of the letter addressed to me. That seems to be a direct allegation of misconduct in the Public Printer; and all I can say further to satisfy these gentlemen and the public is that I shall be quite in favor of inquiring into the truth of that charge, and I shall regard the issue to be simply this: whether the Public Printer is a defaulter, as this letter alleges, or whether the writers of this letter are liars. They make a direct charge; it is true or it is not true; and as an individual I am only anxious of knowing which it is. One of these two conclusions I think the committee will come to. This is all I have to say.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, as some of these charges seem to be made against me, I have a word to say. I will read these sentences of the letter:

On the 31st of January last we placed before Senator ANTHONY several examples (out of many scores) of the Congressional Printer's method of accounting for the paper used in his office, and showing how he has for years systematically charged it in his accounts at a very much higher rate than its cost; in some instances at three times its cost. We did not "insinuate" this, nor say we had a "suspicion" it might be so, but we made a direct charge that such was the case. We were ready then—we are ready now—and we shall be ready at any time—to maintain it. Almost four months have passed, and we have not yet heard that any action has been taken by Senator ANTHONY, or by your committee, in relation to the matter.

This is signed by the former publishers of the debates of Congress, the proprietors of the Congressional Globe, who are very respectable and exceedingly persistent gentlemen. Their complaint seems to be that the Committee on Printing have not followed their directions in a matter which they saw fit to place before us. Although I have great regard for the character of these gentlemen, and have more than once defended them against aspersions unjustly made upon them on this floor, I think that their constitutional right to instruct a committee of this body might be disputed by a strict constructionist.

It is true that a member of that firm called upon me, doubtless at the date which he states, brought up a number of packages of books and said that he had detected great fraudulent representations on the part of the Congressional Printer in respect to the amount of paper used by him, showed me certain public documents, and gave me his estimate of the amount of paper that was required to print them, and compared that with the amount returned as the cost in the report of the Congressional Printer. I was surprised at that statement, and I said that I knew of but one way of proceeding in such a case and that was to do it openly, to place it before the Congressional Printer and to ask him what his explanation was, to which he assented. I asked him to give me the details by which he arrived at the result. It was some time before I received those details. Immediately after receiving them, and after consulting with my colleagues, I directed the Congressional Printer to furnish us his detailed estimate of the cost of the paper used in printing the same books. I am not sure whether I showed him the estimate of Mr. Bailey or not at that time. I did then or afterward.

The general subject of the conduct of the Congressional Printer was then under investigation before the committee upon a memorial of certain employing printers of this city. They appeared before us and also made allegations similar to those of Mr. Bailey, in respect to the cost of paper rendered in the report of the Congressional Printer. We asked them to furnish their detailed statement. They did so; and on the 13th of April I made in behalf of the committee a report of fourteen printed pages, a considerable portion of it upon this subject, on which Messrs. Rives & Bailey "have not yet heard that any action has been taken by Senator ANTHONY or the committee." In this report is given at length and in full detail the estimate made by the employing printers, which did not differ materially from that of Messrs. Rives & Bailey. There is also the detailed estimate of the Congressional Printer on the same documents. Both are given in this printed report which has been before the Senate and the public for five or six weeks.

There has been no allegation brought against the Congressional Printer before the Committee on Printing upon any authority, with any specification, with any offer of proof, that we have not fully investigated. We investigated all the charges brought by the employing printers against him; and the result is in the printed report which I hold in my hand. Senators who desire to know the difference between the estimates made by the two authorities will find it there, the full calculations, the multiplications, and the divisions, and the additions all set out at length. We had that done and had it put into this report so that it might be comprehended by any one, however little he might be acquainted with the calculations of printing.

The employing printers supposed that the cost of the paper was six dollars a ream, and the Congressional Printer shows by the contracts that it was $8.90 per ream.

He says:

In charging the cost of paper Mr. Judd (he was chairman of the committee of employing printers) has adopted the price for which the contracts were awarded that are published in the same report, and he has also figured as uncalendered forty-five pound paper for one "example," when calendered fifty-three pound paper was used.

The contracts for paper are awarded by the Joint Committee on Public Printing late in January of each year. As it would not be desirable to have the office destitute of paper, there is generally enough of the previous year's supply on hand to use until the new contractors can manufacture and deliver what is ordered of them, which is often ten or twelve weeks. It thus happens that of the paper used in a year some has been purchased under the contracts of the previous year, and the remainder under the contract of that year. An average is consequently made of the cost and probable quantity used under each contract, upon which the figures of the estimates are based.

It was the opinion of the Committee on Printing that the explanation of the Congressional Printer as to the amount of paper he used was satisfactory. Mr. Bailey, who first called my attention to the alleged irregularities, also made another allegation as to the cost of the paper of the Coast-Survey Report, which he arrived at by taking the cover off the book, weighing the book, and multiplying that weight by the number of copies printed, which he thought ought to account, at least approximately, for the amount of paper used. I told him that he might as well weigh a suit of clothes to tell how much wool there ought to be in it.

I wish to say for the Committee on Printing—and I am sure my friend on the other side [Mr. SAULSBURY] will indorse what I say—that while we have investigated every charge that has been brought to us upon any respectable authority, upon any specific allegation, upon any offer of probable proof, we have not thought it our duty to repeat what we did do three or four years ago, at the request of certain printers in this city, who thought that the work which was done at the Congressional Printing Office might be done more cheaply for the Government and certainly more profitably to themselves by private establishments—we did not again throw out a drag-net to bring witnesses here without knowing or without being informed what they were to testify to, and then allow the prosecutors to try and find out something from them, that they did not know and only guessed at. Although our pay is not very high and perhaps our time is not very valuable, I think that the time of a committee of this body is worth more than to be wasted in investigations of that kind, where there is no charge, no proof, no accuser. We were asked in the course of this investigation to apply for permission to send for persons and papers, and to summon before us the heads of all the executive departments and the foremen of each department in the Government Printing Office, and then the person who made this modest request—it was not from the Globe office—thought he would be able to find out something that would be interesting to us. That we declined to do.

CENTRAL BRANCH, UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. SARGENT. I now call for the unfinished business.

Mr. WRIGHT. Before the Senator from California proceeds with his bill, I wish to give notice of my intention to call up a bill. On the 10th of March I reported from the Committee on the Judiciary a bill (S. No. 587) declaring the true intent and meaning of the Union Pacific Railroad acts, approved July 1, 1862, July 2, 1864, and July 3, 1866, and for other purposes. I then gave notice that it was my intention to call up that bill at an early day. I have not called up the bill for the reason that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] has been somewhat indisposed, and he asked that its consideration be postponed. The same request has been made by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.] I give notice now that it is my purpose to call up that bill at least during the morning hour on Wednesday for the purpose of getting consideration to it by the Senate. I give the notice at this time at the request of the Senator from Kansas, who I understand proposes to submit some remarks upon the bill. I wish to say to Senators now that they will find the whole subject very fully discussed in Senate Report No. 169, and it will save time in the discussion of the question if Senators can give time between now and then to read that report, inasmuch as all of the statutes governing the case are there recited, and the several questions that are raised on either side are discussed. I shall attempt on Wednesday morning to call up that bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I give notice that when the bill to which the Senator from Iowa has referred is called up it is my purpose to move to substitute for the bill reported by the committee a bill introduced by me on the same subject, the number of which I have now forgotten, proposing to refer the whole matter to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

SENATOR FROM ALABAMA.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I desire to state that after the expiration of the morning hour on Wednesday I shall call up the Alabama contested election case.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the Committee on the Revision of the Laws have directed me to report to the Senate three bills which I will name by their titles: First, a bill (H. R. No. 1215) to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, A. D. 1873. This bill, one of three which I am going to report, contains fourteen hundred and thirty-two printed pages. I report also the bill (H. R. No. 3349) to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, relating to the District of Columbia in force on the 1st day of December, in the year of our Lord 1873; and a like act from the House (H. R. No. 2879) revising and embodying all the laws authorizing post-roads in force on the 1st day of December, 1873. The three bills make an aggregation of matter which I hold up that Senators may see it.

In reporting these bills I wish to give notice that I shall ask—I do not ask now, because of the absence of many Senators—unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bills; a thing not unknown in our parliamentary history, although no such occasion for it as this ever arose before. The Senate will see that to read these bills in extenso would take a week, perhaps a fortnight, and nobody would listen to them. They have all been put in print and furnished weeks ago to every member of the Senate. Since that time I should say, however, many changes have been made, made with a pen, erasing sections, amending sections, and changing throughout the numbers of sections, so that Senators, if they wish to see the very words of the act as it has come from the House of Representatives will be compelled to resort to the Secretary's table and read for themselves from this copy, as to reprint it would be very costly and very onerous, and not attended with any compensation of convenience or value. The committee, as soon as the pending deficiency bill shall be disposed of, will ask the Senate to take up these three acts; and ponderous as they are, the work for the Senate will be, I might almost say, formal, because the Senate will be compelled to rely upon the action of the three sets of commissioners who have been employed upon this work, and the action of the joint committees of the two Houses during the last year, along with the amendments adopted in the House pursuant to recommendations made by their committee. The Senate will be compelled to take, as they are, these bills, or I fear to abandon them for this session. If we amend them here, the bills may fail in the other House, and the committees believe that they are now as nearly right as we can hope to get them by any additional process to which they can be subjected.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to ask the Senator from New York a question for information, as I do not know how this revision has been made. I inquire whether these commissioners or the joint committee have condensed the statutes, changing their phraseology and clothing them to any considerable extent in new language? I understood the Senator to say this morning that the whole statutes would be reduced to one volume in size; and from that I infer that there has been a condensation and necessarily a change in the phraseology of the laws.

Mr. CONKLING. If I understand the Senator, he is right in his conjecture. The commission finding, if you please, a page of sections relating to a particular subject, have condensed the true intent and meaning of that page of sections into words as few as they could employ for that purpose. Such has been the aim and object of the work. And now the whole body of statute law is to be in a volume not as large as that which I hold up; because this print is larger in size and the margin wider than it will be when it becomes a law-book. That portion of this volume [exhibiting to the Senate] will probably represent the size of the single volume into which the whole body of the statute laws has been carried, assuming the work to be perfect and effectual; and although phraseology of course has been changed, the aim throughout has been to preserve absolute identity of meaning, not to change the law in any particular, however minute, but to present in miniature or in condensation the law in all its parts as it was actually found to exist dispersed through seventeen volumes of statutes.

I will send these bills to the desk, saying to Senators that they will be left there, although they must not expect to see them printed and find them on their desks, in the hope that Senators will look at them; and I will say that I think it would be well for Senators to look at the last page and a half of the larger one of these acts, that page containing repealing and saving clauses, so that no right shall be lost by any inadvertence or oversight, and at the same time repealing all statutes except those now to be found in these revised statutes, so as to make them complete in themselves without reference to anything else.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan.) The Senator from New York, from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, reports several bills to go on the Calendar, and gives notice that at the conclusion of the pending bill he will seek the floor to call up those bills.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask that we proceed with the deficiency bill, and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be acted upon as the bill is read in order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3030) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1873 and 1874, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be acted upon as they are reached in order in the reading of the bill; and the Clerk will proceed with the reading.

Mr. WRIGHT. I beg to suggest, if it suits the convenience of the Senator from California having the bill in charge, whether it might not expedite its consideration if before its reading commences he explains the changes proposed by the committee, and the entire amount of appropriations contemplated by the bill. I of course desire to consult his convenience and preference on the subject.

Mr. SARGENT. I did not desire to take up the time of the Senate by remarks on the bill; but I shall very readily yield to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa by stating that the amount of the deficiency bill of last year was $11,000,000, and before that I remember one deficiency bill within a few years which amounted to $20,000,000; while this bill as it comes from the hands of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and as we recommend that it pass the Senate, will appropriate less than $4,000,000, an enormous saving in the way of deficiencies. There are few changes in the bill from the form in which it came from the House. It is printed of course with all the amendments which have been reported by the Senate committee up to the time we reported it back to the Senate. There are some other deficiencies which have been developed since which we shall recommend to provide for by verbal amendments.

The principal item of increase in the bill is for taking care of the Apache Indians. There the increase is some $300,000. That is the principal item of increase, and accounts for the larger figures of the bill in the Senate from the form in which it passed the House. When that amendment is reached, I propose if necessary to submit some considerations and facts to the Senate which I think will convince the Senate that the increase ought to be allowed.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me to ask him how much appropriation does the bill contain as it came from the House?

Mr. SARGENT. Three million three hundred and seventy-two thousand one hundred and fifty-five dollars and some cents.

Mr. CONKLING. How much now?

Mr. SARGENT. As reported back in the Senate from the committee it appropriates $3,850,863 and some cents. We propose by some amendments which have been offered by Senators and referred to the committee and adopted by it, to increase the amount to a figure less than $4,000,000. The amendments generally are small, and I do not think it worth while to take up the time of the Senate in speaking in detail of them. If any Senator will send for the printed bill as reported back, he will have the bill and amendments of the Senate committee before him. For instance, look at the items on the second page; although they occupy a good deal of room, it will be found that they are quite small items, one item of $668.84; another of $3,083.44; the next item is $148.82. These arise from the loss of exchange. It will be found that sometimes a whole page of the bill contains but very few dollars indeed, and the items are for the settlement of vouchers which have been approved in accounts that are regular according to law, and these amounts are necessary in order to square the books.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert after line 45, the following clause:

For salaries of United States consuls for fiscal year 1872, being amount due F. A. Perkins, late United States consul at Tahiti, eighty-nine dollars.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 59:

That the unexpended balance of the appropriation for a lithographic press and necessary materials, and for lithographic pressmen and laborers, in the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1874, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1873, is hereby made available for the purchase of a second lithographic press and the necessary materials.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 118:

For incidental and contingent expenses of the mint at San Francisco for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, $1,168.02.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 217:

For legislative expenses of Dakota Territory, for fiscal year 1872, being amount required to pay Brookings & Carney for articles furnished the late secretary of Dakota, as per finding of the accounting officers of the Treasury, seventy-one dollars.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 272 to increase the appropriation "for furniture and repairs of same, carpets, and similar necessaries for public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department," from $10,000 to $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the following amendment, to come in after line 441:

For compensation of the two commissioners appointed from civil life on the military-prison board, under the second section of "An act to provide for the establishment of a military prison and for its government," approved March 3, 1873, while actually on duty, $460. For traveling expenses of said commisioners and of the Secretary of War under said act, $1,500: Provided, That the duties of said commissioners shall cease after the expiration of the current fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the following amendment, to come in after line 473:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the removal and subsistence up to July 1, 1874, of the Kickapoo Indians who have been removed from the borders of Mexico and Texas to the Indian Territory, said account to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 475, to insert after the word "subsisting" the words "and civilizing;" in line 476 to strike out, after the words "Red Cloud," the word "and;" and in the same line, after the word "Whetstone," to insert the words "and other Sioux;" so as to make the clause read:

For this amount, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in subsisting and civilizing the Sioux Indians at the Red Cloud, Whetstone, and other Sioux agencies up to the 1st of July next, $200,000.

The amendmant was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was on page 21, line 487, to increase from $200,000 to $500,000 the appropriation "for this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to meet the deficiency in the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, to subsist and properly care for the Apache Indians in Arizona and New Mexico who have been or may be collected on reservations in New Mexico and Arizona, provided that this appropriation shall be expended only in behalf of those Indians who go on and remain upon said reservations and refrain from hostilities."

Mr. INGALLS. I hope we shall have some explanation from the Committee on Appropriations of the enormous sums that are appropriated in this bill for the deficiency in collecting and subsisting the Apaches of Arizona and New Mexico. In the section now under consideration the sum proposed by the committee is $500,000. On page 23, line 541, there is a still further appropriation of $423,426.32, and in line 550 a still further appropriation of $45,731.83; making in all for the years 1873 and 1874 an aggregate of $969,158.15 deficiency alone. It seems to me that the sum is so large that it requires some explanation from the committee as to the reason why it is now required.

Mr. SARGENT. As will be observed, the amounts referred to are for different fiscal years. The amount of deficiency for this fiscal year is not so great as the amount for the last fiscal year by some one hundred or one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, because we are getting a measurable degree of peace in Arizona Territory. I have in my committee-room, and can obtain in a few moments, a statement of the condition of affairs in Arizona in 1870 and 1871. Murders by the Apaches of men, women, and children, of Government employés, of peaceful settlers and travelers through the Territory, were so common, that they amounted to one or two a day. It was a most terrific condition of things, not merely retarding the development of the Territory, but utterly preventing it, preventing people going in there, and making it entirely unsafe for those who were brave enough to remain. This condition of things has ceased; and the papers in Arizona which most fiercely fought what was called the "peace policy" of the Government now say that during the last year they have had a condition of peace which was favorable to the development of the Territory, so that the people of it can travel in any part of the Territory with safety; that business of all kinds has revived and increased; and that the Government deserves the kind thanks of the people of Arizona for rescuing them from the terrible condition of things to which they were subjected under the old system.

The policy of the Government has been to take these Apaches, who amount to between nine and ten thousand—a very large body—from roaming over the Territory, and to put them upon four reservations in Arizona and New Mexico. They are the Cochise Apaches, and they are probably as brave men as ever were upon this continent. They are as reckless as devils, and they are as cruel. They think, and perhaps with some show of justice, that in the earlier history of these operations they were imposed upon and treacherously treated by the Government or officers of the United States or by irresponsible persons; and thinking that they had been deceived, that their wives and children had been violated and murdered either because of the carelessness of the Government of the United States or by its connivance, they became most implacable enemies of the Government and people of the United States, and swore eternal vengeance, and they carried this out for a number of years, making the Territory a slaughter-pen.

General Crook has taken these Indians under the orders of the President, and segregated them from the rest of the people, and put them on the reservations, and has announced to them "if you leave the reservations and are found in any other part of the Territory, you will be shot." The orders are to shoot them down like dogs or like wolves. On the contrary he has promised to them, "If you will remain on the reservation, we will provide you means of subsistence." The reservations themselves are not fertile, as very little land in the Territory is fertile; but what little there is of it is not given up to the Indians under this arrangement; but there is an actual necessity to subsist them in every particular. Of course this must be expensive. It would be expensive if this were done here in the city of Washington in the commonest manner. In that country where transportation is expensive, which is so very far off from the center of civilization, of course these expenses increase; but there is the same necessity in order to maintain peace in the Territory that we keep these Indians upon the reservations, and keeping them there that we feed them. Necessity and humanity both plead for that.

There is the same necessity in the case of these Indians that there is in the case of the Sioux. In the regular Indian appropriation bill for the current year we appropriated to feed the Sioux, and there are some twenty thousand of them, I think $1,500,000; and the bill passed by the House for the next fiscal year appropriates $1,200,000, and unquestionably the amount is too small and will have to be raised in the Senate. We have either to keep our promise to them when we segregated them on these reservations, or we have to fight them, and fight them with the right on their side.

If Senators know how expensive it is to fight Indians, there is no necessity of arguing on that point; if they they do not I should like to say that in the years 1864, 1865, and 1866 we had a Sioux Indian war, and we succeeded in killing forty-five Indians at an expense of $45,000,000. A commission which went out and examined into the whole matter, having at its head General Sherman, reported that this was the fact, that we had succeeded in killing that number of Indians at that enormous expense. In Arizona two or three years ago, before we gave these liberal appropriations, as they may be called, (and yet they are only about seventy-five or eighty dollars to an Indian to feed and to clothe him for a whole year,) we maintained three regiments of cavalry and a regiment of infantry. Now we maintain but two regiments of cavalry. The cost of a regiment of cavalry for nine months is more than the whole amount we appropriate in the regular bill and in the deficiency bill for these Indians.

If we prefer to make large expenditures for the military service rather than to make them for the Indian service, then it will be legitimate to object to these amendments; but if we prefer to save two-thirds of the amount which must necessarily be expended and to save the blood of our citizens which is shed upon the highways, and even where their little hamlets are invaded, and to save their wives and their children from being subjected to the horrors and barbarities of Indian war and do it by the cheapest and most humane system, then we must make these appropriations adequate to the needs of the service.

I believe there is no difference of opinion on the part of those who have examined this matter—the board of Indian commissioners, the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Committees on Indian Affairs and on Appropriations of both Houses, and the President of the United States. These matters have been passed upon by all of them, and the conclusion is the amendment which is here reported. It is less than the amount appropriated last year, and I am afraid it is rather cutting the cloth close, but still I recommend it with great earnestness to the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. It seems that there is some difference between the Committees on Appropriations in the two Houses from the fact that the committee of the Senate, as I understand, report an increase of $300,000 in the first item alone. What I desire especially to know from the Senator from California is, what is the reason that so great an amount of deficiency is required, why so large an amount was expended over and above the original appropriations that were supposed to be sufficient; and also I should like in that connection to know what amount was originally appropriated.

Mr. SARGENT. The amount originally appropriated was $250,000. The amount appropriated last year was $800,000. To meet immediate emergencies, when Congress met the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior sent in an estimate for a deficiency appropriation, urging that the sum of $200,000 be immediately appropriated to tide over the difficulty. It was not immediately acted upon, and a subsequent deficiency estimate was sent in of $300,000, making the amount which the Senate committee has recommended. That is the result of the addition of the items. Unquestionably if the full estimates had been sent in originally to the House, they would have put in the bill the $500,000 as we have done.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I understand this entire amount of $969,000 has been already expended in excess of the original appropriations, amounting to over $1,100,000 for the two years.

Mr. SARGENT. For the two years unquestionably; and what are you to do? Here the military puts upon four reservations ten thousand Indians.

Mr. INGALLS. I want to say right here that the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shows less than nine thousand, including men, women, and children.

Mr. SARGENT. The difference between nine and ten thousand is very slight. I think there are ten thousand, and so state. I think the nine thousand is an underestimate, but the difference between nine and ten thousand is of such little consequence that, to oblige the Senator, I will put it at nine thousand wild Indians.

Mr. INGALLS. They are not on reservations.

Mr. SARGENT. They are on reservations.

Mr. INGALLS. The report of the Commissioner shows that they are not.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know anything about the report of the Commissioner. I state that they are on reservations—the great bulk of them. The matter, however, as the Senator will observe, is made flexible in this: that the clause provides only for the Apaches "who have been or may be collected on reservations in New Mexico and Arizona." I do not know to what date the Senator refers, but I know that the condition of affairs now is that these Indians are on these four reservations with trifling exceptions; that they are kept there by the force of the bayonet; that the reservations are barren, giving not even a grasshopper for subsistence, and that we must feed them, and that the amount appropriated last year and the amount appropriated this year is no more than sufficient for it, and you necessarily compel them to burst their bonds through the lines of bayonets, to carry blood throughout the Territory, and employ your Army to suppress them at an immense cost, or else you have to carry out your promise and feed them, and to feed them this is not too much money.

Gentlemen talk about exceeding the appropriations. Will you tell me how in such a case, where the military under your laws and under the requirements of the President of the United States put Indians upon a reservation and call on the Indian Department to feed them, it could do otherwise than exceed the appropriations? Further on in the bill is a section which we propose to strike out, providing that any officer shall pay a fine of $2,000 if he expends any money or involves the Government in a contract calling for expending more than the amount appropriated. What would you do in case a war breaks out with Spain, as was threatened recently? I should like to know what you would do when the Modocs were ravaging through Northern California and Southwestern Oregon? What would you do in a case like that of these very Apaches where they are restrained by your military force within certain bounds with a dead line as effective as that about Andersonville, and left to starve there because your public officers must go to prison or pay an enormous fine out of their private fortunes if they make any contract to furnish any supplies whereby they may be fed? If we were managing here a district school, I could understand such discipline; but when we are handling the affairs of a great Government, it seems to me we have to act on larger principles, on broader ideas. We have got to recognize the condition of the country and make our appropriations correspond with its great necessities.

If the condition of these Indians is what I have stated, the amount expended for last year was no more than was absolutely necessary and the amount we ask for this year is less than the amount then expended; and perhaps the department can pull through with it.

Mr. INGALLS. I understand the Senator to say that the Indians now upon reservations are kept there by military force.

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. How many troops are required now for that service?

Mr. SARGENT. There is a regiment of cavalry and one of infantry now in Arizona.

Mr. INGALLS. At an expense of a million dollars per annum, I understand.

Mr. SARGENT. Unquestionably; and you would have to treble that amount if you have war, besides the loss of the lives of your soldiers, as we know by recent experience from which we have just emerged.

Mr. INGALLS. So that during the past two years the amount appropriated for the purpose of keeping these Indians upon reservations, including the military force and the amount required for their subsistence, has been something like $5,000,000.

Mr. SARGENT. Three or four millions for the last three years.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator further inform me for what these amounts of money have already been expended in excess of the appropriations?

Mr. SARGENT. Because they were required to put them on the reservations, feed them, and keep them there.

Mr. INGALLS. For what has the money been expended?

Mr. SARGENT. A very important consideration, and I call attention to it, is that in carrying out this policy it has proved to be an economical policy in that the Government thereby has saved millions and millions of dollars, besides the lives of its citizens.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. President, I have no further desire about this appropriation for the Indian service of the Government than to understand just what we are doing. I think the Senator from California, having this deficiency bill in charge, in one of the statements he made a short time ago, was somewhat hasty in saying that the Committees on Indian Affairs of both the Senate and House had concurred in this recommendation.

Mr. SARGENT. If the Senator will allow me, I meant the policy which has been pursued with regard to these appropriations. I did not mean to say that this specific item had been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. OGLESBY. Then I misunderstood the Senator. This very item now pending here in the deficiency bill as it comes from the House, providing for an appropriation of $200,000, was submitted early in this session to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, and the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate declined, by a vote of that committee, to recommend that the appropriation be allowed. Whether we were correctly informed or not, and therefore acted wisely, is another question. We went upon the theory that after the estimates had been made by the Indian Department of the necessary appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874—the present fiscal year—the Indian Department, conversant with the number of the Apache Indians in Arizona and New Mexico, with their character and habits, would make estimates for such appropriations as would carry out the policy of gathering up those Apache Indians and putting them on reservations at a fair and reasonable cost to the Government. From the 1st day of July to the 1st day of December, 1873—a period of something less than six months—the $250,000 appropriated by Congress for the purpose of gathering the Apache Indians on a reservation had been exhausted by the agents of the Government, before the fiscal year had half expired.

It struck the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate that there must be some extravagance somewhere; that there was a want of proper supervision by the Indian inspectors who had come into existence within the last year, and that the Indian agents who had control of this matter of gathering up and moving the Apache Indians upon these reservations were not acting judiciously; that there was not a proper supervision over them; that they were extravagant in their contracts, extravagant in their expenditures; and we thought it wholly unwarrantable in Congress now to go back and appropriate upon their mere say-so as many hundred thousand dollars as they might ask in addition to what had been given them to remove some seven thousand Apache Indians in Arizona, and some two thousand in New Mexico, making about nine thousand in all, as we were informed, including men, women, and children. They are a wild, ferocious, and brave tribe of Indians, That is no reason why the greatest possible economy should not be exercised by the agents of the Government treating with them. That is no reason why these administrative officers of the Government should be permitted to go and spend money right or left, with nothing before this body to show how they have spent it, except that the sum total is gone.

Let me say to the Senator from California that I have no earthly interest in this subject except as one Senator or one citizen of the country. Two hundred thousand dollars have been appropriated for the year 1874, and this deficiency bill asks for $300,000 more to be added. That will make $500,000 in addition to the $250,000, making $750,000. I do not know what the provision was for 1873, but this bill now asks for $450,000 for 1873. Here is over $900,000 in money to be expended upon about seven thousand Apache Indians in Arizona—between seven and eight thousand, I think the number is nearer seven thousand—for one and two years; and it did seem to me that the Committee on Appropriations ought to have been able to show to the Senate just how the fiduciary officers of the Government had expended the money, what their contracts were, what they had paid for beef, how they had gathered the cattle together, how they had distributed them, what they had paid for flour, what they had paid for meal, the character of the articles they had purchased for these Apaches, and whether the prices were extravagant or not. I am wholly opposed to permitting any agent of this Government under any ordinary circumstances to exceed the appropriations deliberately recommended by the heads of Departments and deliberately passed by act of Congress. Here we have an Indian service——

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator do the department the justice to say that Congress did not appropriate half the amount the department estimated for? You cut down your appropriations arbitrarily.

Mr. OGLESBY. Does the Senator know what amount they asked for in 1873?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir; exactly.

Mr. OGLESBY. What was the amount?

Mr. SARGENT. Five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. OGLESBY. In 1873?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. OGLESBY. What did they ask for in 1874.

Mr. SARGENT. Seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars. That is my recollection. Here is the Book of Estimates.

Mr. OGLESBY. What do they ask for the year 1875?

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] has charge of the Indian appropriation bill, and will report it to the Senate in a few days. I have not the charge of that bill.

Mr. OGLESBY. As I stated in the commencement of my remarks, I do not know what they asked for in 1873. Perhaps the Senator may be right in saying that they asked for $500,000. I am not sure about that. I know that they asked for $500,000 or more for 1874, and I know that $250,000 was voted to them, and I know that they went on pell-mell and spent the money before the 1st day of December, 1873, and I know that they come back here now and ask us to give them $500,000 more for that same year for this wild, savage tribe of Apache Indians in New Mexico. Although the Senator stated with considerable earnestness this morning that they are all now upon reservations, my recollection is that the argument made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs was that it was necessary to appropriate this amount to keep the Apaches now on reservations and to take care of them, so that through their instrumentality the roving bands of Apaches might be induced to go on the reservations. I understand that large portions of them are not on the reservations. The Senator can very well and very truthfully say they are upon them, but I do deny that they are all upon them; and it seems to me extravagant to vote $300,000 more simply because these officers have asked for it, without presenting their accounts before this body to show how they have expended the money heretofore appropriated.

I do not know what is the character of those agents of the Government; but I for one shall vote to retain the sum in the bill as it came from the House—$200,000—and not to make it $500,000 for the fiscal year 1874. I think it would be proper and right to refuse to concur in the committee's recommendation to increase that appropriation by $300,000 for those seven thousand Indians there. It will feed them on bread; it will feed them on bread made of wheat and bread made of corn; it will give them beef every day. They will live better than they ever did before in their lives, if you figure down the amount each Indian man, women, and child will receive. They are to be put upon reservations and fed in this sort of style by these agents of the Government, and we have no account before us to show how the money has been expended. I have no doubt the agents have reported to the Indian Commissioner exactly the amounts they have expended; I presume they have; but it is their own solitary report; it is their own statement of their expenditures. It strikes me that the Indian agents, or the men having control of these Indians, are taking considerable liberty to themselves when they go forward and exceed the appropriations for 1873, and exceed the appropriations for 1874, and then come back and ask us to vote them the money necessary to carry out such contracts as they have chosen to make with the Indians.

I listened to the Senator from California very attentively. He has given some information on the subject that I did not have, but I feel that the matter is not yet clear.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know how the matter can be made clearer unless I get a team and bring up all the vouchers which are in the Indian Department. Those are just as accessible to the Senator, and it is as much his duty to look into them as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs as it is mine as a member of the Committee on Appropriations. I have been examining this subject for some years, and have spent a great many hours of my time in the Interior Department looking over vouchers, looking over accounts, and endeavoring to arrive at the correctness of the estimates which were made. I have pursued that course so far as was necessary in this particular instance, and am satisfied that these amounts were necessarily expended; that the contracts were fair and honest; that a reasonable price was paid for these supplies; and that not a dollar more has been expended for these purposes than was absolutely necessary.

I furthermore recall to the Senator's mind as having some force in this case, when he talks about the department not expending a dollar more than was appropriated, the fact that they themselves estimated double the amount which we appropriated; that the House this very year has done the same thing, appropriated only one-half the estimates, I suppose to make a fine show for the coming elections when they want to be re-elected, or for some other reason better than that. Certainly for some reason they go on and arbitrarily shave down items that are not flexible at all; and if no more is expended than the amount which they provide we have a war upon our hands or other consequences of a very serious nature. I do not think it is a good plan to cut down the annual appropriation bills in order to put the amount in a deficiency bill; and I call the attention of the Senator again to the fact that notwithstanding this amount, over which there is so much quarrel and which is the principal item in the bill, this year we have a deficiency bill of less than $4,000,000, while last year it amounted to $11,000,000, showing that there is responsibility, that there is care in the administration of the different Departments of Government.

I know that Senators who live in the interior of the continent, far away from any danger to themselves or their property or their interests, from assaults by Indian tribes, can feel very comfortable over the alternative which is left us of some seven, eight, nine, or ten thousand wild Indians in the mountains bursting upon the towns and peaceful communities in this distant region, and carrying blood and devastation and conflagration in their track. I know that my friend from Illinois who represents the city of Chicago is not likely in his whole life-time to see any wild Indians unless he comes up to the Sioux country or goes down to Arizona. They never would hunt him up. He is in the position of the boy who told his father that "The fish would bite well that day," and his father said to him, "You go to school and they will not bite you." [Laughter.] So my friend, if he does not go where the Indians are, is not in any danger of being bitten by them. His interests are entirely safe. His constituents are safe, unless some of them should be traveling in the pursuit of business or pleasure in these far-off regions. But, sir, it is a very serious question to thousands of people in Arizona. It is a very serious question to all the people who live along the line of the Northern Pacific road whether we shall have an Indian war, which at best is bloody, which at best destroys the material interests of the region over which it ravages. It is a very serious question to them whether we shall have such a war; and they cannot take matters as cooly as Senators more happily situated and persons remote from these scenes, because it is with them a question of life and death, involving their existence as a community.

What the Apaches can do is evident from the fact that they held at bay three regiments of cavalry and two regiments of infantry, and compelled us by that more expensive method to pay twenty times the amount in supplies to keep these troops in the field. The question of the transportation of supplies now is swallowed up in the item which is necessary for the transportation of your troops and the supplies of those troops. And after all you kill very few Indians. They go from one mountain to another, from one fastness to another, and when the troops follow them they return. It is to save that expensive system that we propose that this amount shall be appropriated.

Furthermore, I say it is unbecoming the dignity of this great people, forty millions strong, with enormous resources, in dealing with these few savage, ragged tribes that we drive into the desert and hem in with our bayonets, to violate our promise to them. It is unworthy of us. If it is necessary to feed them at the expense of twenty cents a day per Indian—and that is the amount of this appropriation—suppose it is too much; it is unworthy of us to retain the twenty cents; it is unworthy of us, having made the promise to them and forced it upon them in spite of themselves, now to violate it and say that we will only pay ten cents a day, and if they starve let them starve.

I plead, therefore, for the good name of the United States. I plead for the peace of the country. I plead that we keep our promise to these Indians and give them the amount necessary to feed them. Sir, I will vote twenty times this amount if it is necessary to prevent an Indian war, for I know that thereby we save at least the amount which we may vote, and we save that which is far more precious than money, the blood of the women and children on our frontiers. I trust, therefore, this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I wish it were possible for the officers connected with our Government to make correct estimates of what money they want to carry on their plans. I do not believe it is possible, particularly in connection with the Indian Department. If it is deemed desirable on the part of the Government to gather the Apaches in all that country over which they roam and bring them on reservations, when the Secretary of the Interior sends in his estimate of what is needed, he bases it upon certain facts which he has before him; but it is not possible for him to have all the facts so as to form a correct estimate. He does not know and cannot know how many Indians will be removed, how many will go on the reservation. Therefore he cannot determine how much money will be needed to feed them on the reservation. Then it is very easy for those who are sent out for the purpose of gathering the Indians to gather more than the number estimated by the Department. Nor is that all. It is impossible for those who are sent on this errand to know how long they will be in gathering these Indians together. I understand they are scattered all through Mexico, some of them five or six hundred miles from the border, and so those who go after them and reach them far distant from our line and persuade them to come back and go on reservations. I say it is impossible for the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or for any other man to estimate accurately the amount of money which is necessary for this purpose.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. The remark that the Senator makes in regard to the impossibility of estimating precisely the amount necessary to be expended in advance is very true; but is it not likewise true that after the amount has been expended it will be possible for the department to send in the exact amount they desire to have appropriated? Now here is an appropriation for a deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, of $500,000.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Will the Senator put his question again?

Mr. INGALLS. I ask if it will not be possible for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior to furnish the Senate the actual amount that has been expended? This is a deficiency of an appropriation in advance, and certainly the Secretary ought to furnish us with the amount that has been expended, and not ask us to appropriate a gross sum leaving the amount to be computed hereafter when the vouchers are ascertained.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I do not see any difficulty in that. I do not know why the Secretary may not furnish, and he probably would furnish to any Senator who should ask it, the amount which has been expended.

Mr. BOGY. If the Senator will allow me, that statement was furnished to our committee asking an additional appropriation of $200,000 by the Secretary of the Interior. A full statement was given of the number of Indians, the amount expended, and why it had been expended, and upon that information at that time a majority of the committee declined to make the appropriation; but the information was given to our committee. The appropriation of $200,000 then asked for was only a temporary appropriation. It was not intended to be enough to carry us on to the 1st of July, 1874, but only to cover the amount of money which up to that time had been expended. That was the information given by the Secretary at length, and the papers are now with the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I was going to state still further, rather to confirm the statement of the Senator from California in what he said, that this appropriation in the gross amount is certainly very large, and it surprises some of us to imagine how such an amount can be needed; and yet our surprise will cease when we remember that these Indians are to be placed on a reservation and held there: that they must be fed, for if they are starving they must of necessity, to save life, leave the reservations and prey upon their white neighbors and suffer themselves to be shot down by our Army. It is far better to feed them than to suffer them to wander from their reservations. To hold them there will require not less than the amount estimated by the Senator from California and reported by the committee, as it seems to me. It is, as he says, only twenty cents a day for each one. The $500,000 divided among the nine thousand Indians is less than sixteen cents a day; but if you add to that the $250,000 which may have been expended for their support during the last year, it is for the entire year less than twenty-five cents each. Therefore, much as I regret the necessity of taking this great amount from the public Treasury, yet it seems to me it is a wise expenditure on the part of the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BOREMAN in the chair) put the question on the amendment, and declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. INGALLS. I call for a division.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the vote is taken I should like to ask the Senator from California if he has an estimate of the amount required for this fiscal year?

Mr. SARGENT. I have. I have looked into the amount; I have looked into the prices which were paid; I have looked into the whole question knowing that it was a grave one, that this was a considerable amount. I have looked into the reason why the House committee reported $200,000 instead of $500,000, and found that the estimate on which they acted was an estimate sent in last December, immediately on the meeting of Congress, stating that it was for an immediate emergency, and the subsequent estimate sent in by the Interior Department to cover the full year with the $200,000 made $500,000. The House simply acted on the first estimate.

Mr. INGALLS. Why does not the committee report the exact amount required?

Mr. SARGENT. We have reported $500,000 as the exact amount required. Would it please the Senator better if we should fix it at $500,000.06?

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to know the exact amount.

Mr. SARGENT. There is the amount in the bill. We have reported the amount; and I wish to say that the Committee on Appropriations have given as much care to this item as the amount involved required, and that was a great deal. I myself have made it a matter of study for several weeks. I have made frequent visits to the Interior Department on that very point. I have talked with gentlemen from Arizona in reference to it; I have talked with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in reference to it; I have talked with the Delegate from Arizona in the House in reference to it; and I am satisfied that the appropriation is absolutely necessary. I am no more disposed than the Senator himself to appropriate one dollar that is unnecessary; but where it is necessary for the service, where the national honor is involved, where the lives and property of our frontier citizens are involved, then it makes no difference to me, if the amount is necessary, whether it is $200,000, or $500,000, or $5,000,000. There are supreme objects of government which must be carried out by our legislation. There is a right which our frontier citizens have that they shall be protected in their lives and property; and when you put the Indian upon a barren reservation and say to him, "If you leave this dead-line which we put around you, you shall be slaughtered, you shall be shot like a wolf, but if you stay there we will feed you," the Indian has the right to require of us, even if it costs us $500,000 deficiency, that the amount of cattle and the amount of flour necessary for that purpose shall be given to him. Twenty cents a day is the amount required. My friend from Connecticut calculates it at sixteen cents a day. I made it twenty cents, because I made the number of Indians a little different from what he does. I say the Indian upon that reservation has a right to require that we keep our promise to him, and humanity requires it also.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to say a word with reference to this particular paragraph. Early in the winter I had my attention called to this deficiency in the appropriations for the Indians of Arizona and New Mexico. The appropriation made last year for this fiscal year was $250,000. Now what I object to in these appropriation bills is that in an annual appropriation bill we provide for $250,000 and then in the deficiency bill for a deficiency of half a million.

Mr. SARGENT. If my friend will study the Book of Estimates, which he had the opportunity to do upon the Committee on Appropriations, he will find that last year we did not appropriate more than one-third the amount of the estimates. There is the trouble.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not desire to study the Book of Estimates for the purposes of this argument. What I desire to call attention to is the fact that we appropriate annually a quarter of a million and then for a deficiency half a million. I called upon the Commissioner of Indian Affairs early in the session, I should think in December, and I found from actual investigation of the accounts that of that $250,000 appropriated for the entire fiscal year of 1874 the whole had been expended, with the exception of $9,000, as early as the 1st day of November.

Mr. SARGENT. Will my friend tell me how the department could help it? The Indians had to be fed. Congress appropriated $250,000 for that purpose. The department had shown Congress that that was not sufficient. What were they to do? Were they to leave the $250,000 in the Treasury?

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call attention to these facts with a view of showing the necessity that we shall have in advance the amount of these appropriations. I have no doubt the Senator from California has made a careful estimate on this subject, and I presume that this entire sum will be expended by the 1st of July next, and probably necessarily expended; but I think it is an incorrect way of appropriating money to appropriate so large a sum as a deficiency.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I think I can illustrate by one single fact the difficulty of making correct estimates and the difficulty in stopping when you have expended all the money which has been appropriated. Take for instance the removal of the Kickapoos. A certain amount was appropriated for their removal and it was limited to a certain time. On the 1st of July last that portion of the appropriation for the removal of the Kickapoos which had not been expended at that time was covered into the Treasury. A portion of the Kickapoos were then on their way to the Indian Territory. Now what should be done? You must stop them on the plains or press them on. If you stop them on the plains, you stop them where your appropriation stops; but that would not be wise; and although we should regret the necessity of pushing them on and going beyond the sum appropriated, yet the necessity would be upon the officers of the Government to do it, and they had better go on, even if by going on and conducting them to the Indian Territory and locating them there should be presented to Congress a deficiency in the appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, upon which question a division has been demanded. Is it insisted upon?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 19, noes 5; no quorum voting.

Mr. SARGENT. I will ask the Senator from Kansas if he insists on a further count?

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There does not appear to be a quorum present.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Kansas does not insist on a further count.

Mr. INGALLS. I withdraw the call for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the fact of the absence of a quorum being discovered, no business can be transacted until a quorum is present.

Mr. SARGENT. That fact can be ascertained by a count, if the Chair will count the Senators present. Quite a large number of Senators did not vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will count the Senate again on the same question, with a view of ascertaining whether there is a quorum present, and every Senator is requested to vote in order to ascertain whether a quorum be present or not.

Mr. INGALLS. I have withdrawn the request for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We cannot proceed with business, however, without a quorum being present, and it is necessary to ascertain it in some way.

Mr. SARGENT. There being no request for a division, it seems to me it might be presumed that a quorum is present.

Mr. INGALLS. The call for a division being withdrawn, there is nothing before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Business cannot proceed until it is known that there is a quorum present.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Clerk can ascertain the fact by a count.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (after a count by the Clerk.) It is now ascertained that there is a quorum present; and if no division be called for the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. In line 482 of this clause, page 20, after the word "Apache," I move to insert the words "and other," so that the clause will read "Apache and other Indians."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, as follows:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to provide, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, clothing, food, agricultural implements, and seeds for the Modoc Indians that have been removed to and are now residing within the Indian Territory, $10,000.

Mr. SARGENT. After the word "Interior," in line 491 of that clause, I move to insert the word "settlement," so as to make it correspond with the other provisions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 499, to increase the appropriation "to subsist and properly care for the Kiowa and Comanche, Cheyenne and Arapaho, and Wichita and other affiliated bands of Indians in the Indian Territory during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874," from $50,000 to $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 594 to strike out $693,838.28 and insert $1,018,838.28, as the total appropriations for the Indian service.

Mr. SARGENT. That is a mistake. It was supposed that the footing there needed correction; but afterward, on more narrowly scanning it, we found that it was not necessary. That amendment need not be concurred in. A footing there makes confusion, and it ought to be stricken out. Therefore the committee instruct me to move to strike out all after the word "cents," in line 593 to the end of line 603.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The amendment will be so modified if there be no objection. The question is on the modified amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, to strike out the words which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

In all, $693,838.28: Provided, That none of the moneys hereby appropriated for the payment of deficiencies in the Indian service shall be paid until the necessity for the expenditures shall have been examined into by the Secretary of the Interior and the board of peace commissioners, and approved by them, and the vouchers therefor approved by the Secretary of the Interior and the said board of commissioners. And the said board of commissioners are hereby required to make such examinations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the following amendment, to come in after line 615:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay Zebulon B. Sturgess, assistant secretary to sign land patents for the President, for the month of November, 1873, $122.20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. The Committee on Appropriations instruct me to move to strike out "$554.02" in line 631, in the item of deficiency for surveying the public lands in Oregon, and to insert "$1,162.95."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was after line 632 to insert:

For office of surveyor-general of California: For rent of office, fuel, books, stationery, and other incidental expenses, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, $957.13.

For office of surveyor-general of Washington Territory: For clerks in his office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1872, $701.09.

For office of surveyor-general of Louisiana: For clerks in his office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 683 the following:

To complete the grading and erection of a stone wall around the Columbia Hospital, $8,500.

For defraying the expenses of the board of health of the District of Columbia, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, $31,570.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from California to the last clause of this amendment. I understand that by this clause it is proposed to appropriate $31,570 in addition to prior appropriations for the board of health of the District of Columbia. I should be very glad if the Senator would advise us what was the amount appropriated for the board of health by the last appropriation bill and why it becomes necessary to make this additional appropriation for a purpose that it seems to me we ought to get rid of as soon as possible.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator of course knows, and so I presume does the Senate, that the board of health is a board created by Congress, the members of which are nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, having charge of the sanitary regulations of the District of Columbia, especially the city of Washington. The law creating them requires that they shall see that garbage is removed, that diseased meat is not sold, and that they shall attend to sanitary regulations generally. Their duties as provided by the law are quite extensive, and there is no suggestion in the law of the manner in which they shall be paid. In practice heretofore they have been paid about two-thirds by the District and about one-third by Congress.

The amount appropriated by the District heretofore has been for the ordinary and contingent expenses of the board, $83,000; for the garbage service, $65,000; for the pay of vaccine physicians, $7,316; making $155,416. Congress in 1873, by the deficiency act of March 3 of that year, appropriated $39,300, and for the current fiscal year and in the sundry civil bill at the commencement of the year appropriated $30,000, so that the total amount appropriated by Congress for this service has been $69,300 against $155,416 by the District. It would seem therefore that the District itself has paid and would appear to be willing to pay its full proportion at any rate of the expenses of this board, because it has paid $86,000 in excess of the amount paid by Congress. The estimate of the present board for this current fiscal year to cover deficiencies amounted to $95,000.

This board is not made up of politicians, as is well known. They are among the most eminent, if not the most eminent physicians in this District. The duties they are charged with are very onerous, and have been discharged with very great intelligence. For instance, we had the epidemic small-pox here last year, which was not stamped out finally until September. The deaths were between two and three a day. By their care it was, to use a phrase I used a moment ago, stamped out; and I believe that not a member of the family of any Senator or Representative was troubled with that disease, a most remarkable circumstance, as it was in all parts of the city and assumed a most threatening and dangerous form; but by their prompt measures, by their vaccination of ten thousand persons, by their segregating by means of the appropriation that we and the District gave them the persons who were attacked with small-pox from the common body of the community, establishing their small-pox hospitals distant from the town and defraying all the expense out of these appropriations, they succeeded in circumscribing and finally destroying the disease so that last September it vanished. Their expenses ran over into this fiscal year. From June to September the disease was exceedingly violent and dangerous, covering three months of the present fiscal year.

Now, to show the great value of the services of these gentlemen, the amount which they have reduced the tables of mortality in this District is very surprising. In 1870 the table of mortality against 1,000 individuals was 23.81, nearly 24 persons dying out of 1,000. In 1871 after this board went into operation the mortality was reduced to 21.09; in 1872 it was reduced still further down to 18.42; in 1873 it was reduced down to 16.12, and for the first six months of this year to 14.38. The last part of this year will probably be heavier, so that the death rate for the whole year will be about 15 per thousand. There are only two places on the continent as healthy as that; I believe none more so. The figures as to the comparative rates of mortality in other cities are given in one of the morning papers, and I do not know how I can verify them. This statement which I have made, however, I get from official sources.

We have great interest in the health of the Government officers, of whom we have thousands here, in the sanitary regulations of the city, the safety of the seat of Government, and in our own comfort and safety when we bring our families here, as we do, to remain about six months each year, and ourselves constantly visiting here.

The board, from all the investigation I can get, seems to be most economically and skillfully administered. Its members have very important and very extensive duties to perform, as for instance in removing all the garbage, night-soil, &c., from the city, which formerly was carried down and discharged upon the bank of the Eastern Branch and along the Potomac River, and any Senator riding out at any time going there will find crusted heaps of it yet a foot or two deep, where it is not yet taken off by the tides, a pestilence-breeder. Instead of pouring out all this vile and filthy fever-breeding substance along the margin of the rivers as heretofore, or dumping it in alleys, the most strict sanitary regulations are made as to discharging such stuff into the alleys, and the mass of it is taken in covered carts and carried down to the river, put on board close vessels made for the purpose, carried down the river and taken ashore and buried in pits made for that purpose. Of course, this is somewhat expensive, but the amount which it costs Congress to guard the health of this District and of its employés here, and to reduce the mortality in the way I have indicated, to make the District safer, to make this one of the healthiest cities on the continent, amounts to about $60,000 a year. At the commencement of the year we did not appropriate the amount that was asked for, which was about the amount appropriated in this deficiency appropriation bill and a little more. They have been extremely careful, economical, and close, rather too much so perhaps. This is on account of the embarrassment for want of funds. This amount, however, is honestly necessary, and I trust there will be no question in making such an appropriation.

Mr. WASHBURN. I wish to ask the Senator how he gets at the item of $31,000 rather than any other item as the proportion of the Government?

Mr. SARGENT. I do not get at the proportion of the Government. I do not know that it is not the duty of the Government to pay one-half; I do not know that the Government would be doing too much if it were to pay two-thirds, because we have such great risk in the lives and health of the people we bring here in official relations; and this amount is less than one-third. I have not calculated that accurately.

Mr. WASHBURN. What I mean is, how is it determined what proportion the Government shall pay? How does the gentleman get at this sum rather than any other?

Mr. SARGENT. After the District had made a much larger appropriation than we have, one-half, this deficiency is necessary in order to enable the board to go through the year. That is the reason why we recommend that this amount shall be appropriated, without any nice calculation as to the proportion.

Mr. WASHBURN. This is a deficiency without any reference to the District government, then?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir; this is necessary to finish up their work for the year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. After line 711, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I offer the following amendment:

For repairing and finishing in a thorough and complete manner the bronze statue of Jefferson, placing the same in the National Statuary Hall, and procuring a suitable marble base and pedestal therefor, $10,015.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 741, after the word "Washington," to insert "not before in use by the Government;" so as to read:

And hereafter no contract shall be made for the rent of any building or part of any building in Washington, not before in use by the Government, to be used for the purposes of the Government, until an appropriation therefor shall have been made in terms by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 800 the following:

Senate:

For clerks to committees, pages, horses, and wagons, for the fiscal year 1873, $8,000.

For expenses of heating and ventilating apparatus, for the fiscal year 1873, $63.83.

To pay John L. Hickman for services as laborer during the Forty-first Congress, as allowed by resolution of the Senate of March 3, 1873, $376.40.

To pay Rev. E. D. Owen for services as acting chaplain of the Senate, seventy-five dollars.

For clerks to committees and pages, $21,065.97.

For labor, $13,000.

For furniture and repairs, $4,000.

For mileage of Senators who took their seats after the passage of the act approved January 20, 1874, $1,155.20.

For reporting the proceedings and debates of the Senate for the Forty-third Congress, $36,000, to be paid according to the terms of the contract for such service.

Mr. SARGENT. I wish to amend the amendment before it is acted upon. After line 817 I move to insert:

For coal for the heating and ventilating apparatus for the fiscal year 1874, $500.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 841 and 842, to strike out "$25,185" and insert "$16,815" as the appropriation "to pay the five Official Reporters of the proceedings and debates of the House," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines 878 and 879, to strike out "$18,386.58" and insert "$31,772.29" as the appropriation "to reimburse the fund of the Reform School in the District of Columbia for work done and materials furnished in the erection of the building for the same," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out the second section of the bill, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That it shall not be lawful for any Department of the Government to expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or to involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriation. And any violation of the provisions of this section by any officer of the Government shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and be punished in the manner provided for violations of section 3 of the act approved July 25, 1868, and entitled "An act making appropriations, and to supply deficiencies in appropriations, for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes."

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to know from the Senator from California for what reason the committee strike out this section. The section simply provides that the officers of the Government shall not violate the Constitution of the United States. I do not think it is necessary to debate it at any length. The provision of the Constitution is that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in consequence of appropriations made by law." This section simply declares "that it shall not be lawful for any Department of the Government to expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or to involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations." In other words, there is nothing in this section except to declare that no officer of the Government shall violate the Constitution of the United States by using money in the Treasury not appropriated by law.

Since the war and during the war, some laxity has grown up in different Departments of the Government in regard to public money. An officer of the Government has no more right to order money to be taken from the Treasury of the United States for any purpose, except in pursuance of an appropriation made by law, than he has a right to commit murder, arson, or any other crime. It is just as much stealing to divert money from the Treasury of the United States for a purpose not authorized by an appropriation, as it is to rob your neighbor.

If this was entirely omitted, if there was no provision of this kind in the bill, then a motion to put it in would be different; but it is an offense of the highest grade to use public money except in pursuance of an appropriation. All the House intended to do was simply to declare that this violation of the Constitution should not be committed by any officer of the Government except upon the ordinary pains and penalties of a misdemeanor. It is rather singular indeed that such a provision is necessary. The only argument I know of in favor of striking out this clause is, perhaps, that it should not be implied by providing for punishing such an act as this that any officer of the Government would so violate the Constitution. It is here classed as an offense and punished as a misdemeanor.

It seems to me that probably in the last clause of the section the House has gone beyond the necessities of the case. I think it would be better to leave the section with the simple provision that any violation of the section by any officer of the Government shall be deemed a misdemeanor so as to subject him to the impeaching power of the House. It seems to me that to strike out this section entirely, without any provision whatever to prevent the misapplication of the public moneys, would be to invite the misapplication, especially as the fact has occurred in the last ten or twelve years that such violations of law have taken place. Perhaps if they be not punished or checked in some way they may occur again, so as to startle the country. If you assert the converse of this proposition, that any officer of the Government may expend money without an appropriation by law, you destroy the Government because the foundation of our Government, as well as of the British government, is that the law-making power shall have absolute control over all disbursements of public money. That was one of the things for which the barons at Runnymede fought; it is a principle of the British government at the foundation of it. They carry it to such an extent that the House of Commons will not allow a dollar to be taken out except in pursuance of an appropriation made in the regular budget. Everything has to be there defined. We have copied them to some extent; and no power, no right has been guarded with more anxious care by the founders of our Government than the power of the Legislature over the money that goes out of the Treasury. No money can be taken from the Treasury of the United States except in pursuance of an appropriation made by law.

Now, to say that it is no offense, that it shall not be punished as an offense, or that it is beneath the dignity of Congress to declare a violation of this provision of the Constitution an offense, it seems to me is not exactly logical. If there are occasions, as I would admit, when extraordinary power may be exercised, it ought to be done at the peril of the executive officer; and all such cases ought to be reported to Congress at once, and in my judgment the old English fashion of having a bill of indemnity ought to be required. Wherever in England an extraordinary power of this kind is used, a bill of indemnity is presented as a matter of course; and if the case justify it so as to make it an exception to the general rule, it is ordinarily passed.

It seems to me that to strike out this section put in by the House now would only be to invite the free use of the public money. No officer of the Government, from the highest to the lowest, from the President down to the humblest disbursing officer, ought to think it within the range of possibility that he could use under any circumstances public money except in pursuance of an appropriation made by law. If the amount appropriated is not sufficient for the purpose, Congress should be called upon to make it good. If there is an absolute impending necessity for the use of money, it ought not to be expended from the public Treasury until that necessity is met by an appropriation, or if the case be so extraordinary as to demand it, as in case of war or the like, Congress ought to be convened or the circumstances ought to be at once submitted to Congress at its meeting, and some provision in the nature of a deficiency bill or bill of indemnity ought to be provided.

Mr. OGLESBY. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. OGLESBY. The second section says:

That it shall not be lawful for any Department of the Government to expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or to involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriation.

This deficiency bill provides for paying some $900,000 for the years 1873 and 1874 for the Apache Indians of Arizona upon contracts made by agents under the control of the Indian Department, which is under the direction and management of the Interior Department. The contracts have been made; the provisions and supplies, as it is insisted, have been delivered, the money expended, the Indians have had the benefit; and we are now called upon to vote for 1873 and 1874 nine hundred and odd thousand dollars. I ask the honorable Senator from Ohio if that does not come within the purview and almost the letter of this section, and is not this section intended to prohibit a repetition of that sort of liberty?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is claimed by the proper executive officers that Congress by law has authorized these contracts to be made in certain cases. There are certain contracts that by law are authorized to be made in advance of an appropriation; but I would ask my honorable friend whether he would allow any officer of the Government to make a contract in advance of an appropriation that would commit the Government of the United States to expend large sums of money without law?

Mr. OGLESBY. I will answer the honorable Senator. When the vote was taken half an hour ago on the amendment introduced here by the Committee on Appropriations for $300,000 for the Apaches I voted against the exercise of that power by the agents. I voted against allowing it because I thought it a violation of law, and I think this section ought to be retained in the bill to prohibit such violations. There was no previous contract between the Government and the Apache Indians. There was an appropriation made by Congress. The Secretary of the Interior directed the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to place that appropriation in the hands of the Indian agents. The Indian agents made contracts by which they exhausted the $250,000 appropriated and exceeded it by over $900,000. The question I ask the Senator from Ohio is whether that excess of appropriation by those Indian agents was not a violation of the Constitution; was it not just such a case as this section is intended to punish? I am in favor of the section, and I hope it will be retained.

Mr. SHERMAN. As I understand, under the law as it now stands and the laws relating to Indian affairs, certain powers are given to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to make contracts in anticipation of appropriations. I doubt very much whether the assertion that these contracts were made without law is justified in fact.

Mr. OGLESBY. Does not the Senator understand that they were made for supplies in excess of the appropriations made by Congress?

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that if any officer of the Government takes the liberty of binding the Government of the United States to spend money in advance of appropriations or without appropriations being made, and without authority to make such contracts in advance, he violates the fundamental principles of the Government, and there are statutes now upon the book which denounce the penitentiary for the use of the public money for public buildings and various other purposes in advance of appropriations.

Mr. OGLESBY. I did not want to interrupt the Senator from Ohio, but it struck me that there was great wisdom in keeping this section in the bill, and it struck me that this deficiency bill which requires us now to vote $900,000 in excess of regular appropriations for the Apaches shows the necessity of just such a section as this.

Mr. SHERMAN. I entirely agree with the Senator from Illinois as to this section. I think it ought to be acted on in the bill, although in my judgment it would be better to declare that such a violation of the law should be simply a high misdemeanor, so as to make it clearly within the language of the Constitution an impeachable offense. I do not like the idea of sending our officers of the Government before minor judicial tribunals to be punished for this violation of the Constitution. I think it would be better just to declare in the language of the Constitution that such an offense is a high misdemeanor; and everybody knows that the result of that would be to make the officers responsible to Congress and to the power of impeachment.

I was not present, I would say, half an hour ago and did not hear the debate on the Apache question. I trust that the Committee on Appropriations will allow this section to stand, or modify it only so as to provide that instead of being punished in the courts in the manner here provided, the offense may be declared to be a high misdemeanor.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I certainly should be very sorry to have a penalty inflicted upon any officer of this Government if he was ordered to carry out a contract and that contract should imply an expense over and above the appropriation made to carry it out. If that should be the law, I do not think you would find many men ready to take the responsibility which rests upon officers in these high positions. I do not know how you could carry on the system we have in view with regard to Indian affairs if you restrict the public officer so that he shall stop his work when he has expended a given amount of money named in the appropriation bill. You order the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior to do a certain thing, and you appropriate a certain amount of money to pay for doing that. Where is his restriction? The limit of money is his restriction as to expenditure from the Treasury, but is he restricted from doing the thing? Certainly not. So it appears to me he must go on and do the thing commanded or authorized by the Government, even if it should cost more than the appropriation.

Now, do you mean by this section to hold the Secretary of the Interior responsible and make him a criminal for any such act? His duty would be this: he should not draw from the Treasury any more money than the amount which has been appropriated; and the balance which is due would be properly a claim on the Government, and he could come here in the form of a deficiency bill and ask that it be made up. I do not want any act to prevent that course of proceeding.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is not the slightest practical difficulty in this matter. This deficiency bill is perfectly proper. For instance, take the case of the Indians. Suppose $300,000 is appropriated for feeding the Apaches for the current fiscal year; and that by the 1st of October the $300,000 is expended. They have no right to go to the Treasury and get the money that they think is necessary to feed the Apaches; on the contrary, they must come to Congress, and Congress at once does what the Committee on Appropriations has done—supply the deficiency. That is perfectly proper.

Mr. SARGENT. Suppose Congress does not meet until the following December, what is to be done after the 1st of October?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Constitution provides that Congress shall meet every year. The money is appropriated for a year ahead. My honorable friend mentions to me the Modoc war, and another Senator mentions the case of the naval expenditure last fall. The Navy expenditure of $4,000,000 was made in strict accordance with law, because the money appropriated for the regular service of the Navy was not all expended. There were certain funds which by law were placed within the power of the Secretary of the Navy, which he transferred for that purpose; and under the law as it then stood the Secretary of the Navy was perfectly justified within the limits of the law in expending the $4,000,000 which he did. Congress did not think it was a wise expenditure, but it was perfectly within the limits of the law, because the law allowed at that time the balances of unexpended appropriations to be used for that purpose, and therefore there was no violation of law.

So with the Modoc war. The Modoc war certainly threw on the Army largely increased expenditures not contemplated when the appropriation act for the year was passed. Did that embarrass the Government? Not in the slightest. Large sums of money—sufficient had been appropriated for the whole fiscal year as was supposed; but within the fiscal year they had to absorb a large portion of the whole expenditure in a short period of the year; but before the year expired Congress met and the deficiency was made good. I have no doubt that many of the hundreds of thousands of dollars in this bill are to supply deficiencies in the Army arising from that cause.

Mr. SARGENT. Allow me to ask a question. Suppose instead of the Modoc war costing just what it did it had cost two or three times that amount, as it might readily; would you stop the war until Congress could meet?

Mr. SHERMAN. Would the Senator dissolve the Committee on Appropriations, and say that any executive officer shall expend all the money that is necessary to meet a contingency of this kind? It will never do. The whole power over the appropriations is in Congress. Congress makes the appropriations a year ahead. Congress may make mistakes, it may appropriate too little. But by the Constitution Congress always meets necessarily six months before the appropriations expire, and then it is the duty of Congress, and the duty devolves on Congress, to make good any deficiency that in its judgment should be provided for.

Sir, it is not in the nature of things to anticipate all that may occur a year ahead. Our Government is so framed and so organized that the power to appropriate money is always called into being at least seven months before the appropriations expire. At one time, according to the former practice, the appropriations all ran for the calendar year and expired on the 1st of January. That habit was changed more than thirty years ago because of the fact that it was known that sometimes unexpected demands were made during the recess of Congress, and if the appropriations were not made sufficiently far ahead it might compel executive officers to use money without an appropriation. Therefore the whole manner of making the appropriations was changed and the time for which they were made was postponed; and now the appropriations are made from the 1st of July to the 30th of June. If there is a deficiency in any item Congress meets in time to make good that deficiency. But let me warn Senators that if they once consent to a violation of this fundamental principle of our Government, so that an executive officer may take money out of the Treasury of the United States without an appropriation, we are at sea.

Mr. SARGENT. Allow me to ask another question. Does not the Senator know that there is no power now and could be none, whether this section be adopted or not, for any officer to take any money out of the Treasury of the United States without an appropriation by Congress? Does he not know that is not what it is proposed to guard against?

Mr. SHERMAN. What, then, is the objection to this section?

Mr. SARGENT. There is another proposition in it.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the section was not here I would say that no officer dare do it, but here is a section in plain apt words, put in the bill by the House of Representatives, and to meet cases that have actually arisen:

> That it shall not be lawful for any Department of the Government to expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year.

Do Senators propose that any head of Department or any officer of this Government shall expend money not appropriated by Congress? Is it proposed to make make lawful the act of taking from the public Treasury money not appropriated by Congress?

Mr. SARGENT. They cannot do it now; the Senator knows that.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the objection then to declaring it to be unlawful?

Mr. SARGENT. Because that is not what they declare unlawful. It is another thing entirely.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I will read it again:

> That it shall not be lawful for any Department of the Government to expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year.

That is one question. Does any one want to make it lawful to do that thing?

Mr. WEST. That is the law already.

Mr. SHERMAN. Suppose it is violated? The section goes on—

> Or to involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriation.

If the contract is authorized by a previously existing law, as a matter of course it is not covered by this language; but what right have these officers to make contracts that will compel the Congress of the United States to make future appropriations? They ought to make no contracts unless they are authorized to make them by law, or unless an appropriation has been made to carry them into effect. There may be some verbal criticism as to the language of the section; but this prohibition on the executive officers from expending money or from making contracts in anticipation of appropriations is fundamental.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish the Senator would tell me—I ask only for information—how do the words used here change the law as it stands now? Down to the word "appropriation" on line 6, of which the Senator has been speaking, how does the section change the law?

Mr. SHERMAN. I say it does not. I say it is the fundamental law, made so by the Constitution of the United States. But the House of Representatives have put in this section; it is simply the provision of the Constitution of the United States, and a declaration that any violation of this fundamental principle shall be an offense. If such violations have occurred, certainly they are offenses. I cannot anticipate that such violations have occurred. I cannot say that they have. The cases that have been put to me are not violations of law. The case put to me by the Senator from Connecticut is not a violation of law. Executive officers are perfectly at liberty to expend the whole appropriation made for a fiscal year in one month of that year, and may come to Congress to make good that deficiency; but we have it in our power to say whether or not they were justified in doing so; but that is not a violation of the law.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Let me ask a question. The language is "or to involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriation." Would going on to complete a contract after the appropriation was expended be a violation of this section?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir. Take the case put a moment ago. Suppose Congress should declare that the Secretary of the Interior should feed the Apache Indians and should appropriate $300,000 for that purpose; does he say that the Secretary of the Interior might use that $300,000 and then use as much more as was necessary to feed the Indians?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. He could not draw it from the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is precisely the thing that ought to be prohibited. There is one criticism on this language that I think might be made, for I certainly do not want to embarrass any of the operations of the Government. The language is, "or to involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriation." That ought to be "any contract not authorized by law," and then the section would be perfectly right. There are cases where the executive officers have the power to make contracts in advance of an appropriation, and this section ought not to apply to such cases. There is not the least objection to having them excepted. Where a contract is made in pursuance of law, although the amount involved in that contract is greater than the amount appropriated, there the officers are perfectly justified. That is the case in regard to Army supplies, the purchase of food and clothing, and a great many other things as to which the officers are authorized by law to make contracts for two or three years, although the appropriation may be annual; and this clause ought not to interfere with these cases. But they have no right to make a contract in anticipation of an appropriation unless that contract is specifically authorized by law. If they do, they violate a fundamental principle of our Government.

As I said a moment ago, I do not anticipate a violation of law in this respect, though this is a plain mandatory provision of the Constitution; and therefore, instead of providing for punishment by ordering the executive officers to be tried before a justice of the peace or other tribunal of that kind and harassed and worried by a prosecution, I would simply declare that any violation of that fundamental principle of the Government should be a high crime and misdemeanor, and there stop; and the Constitution comes in and asserts what shall be done in such a case as that if the case should arise. I know of no such case.

Of course there is possibility of an impending calamity befalling the country, an overriding necessity that might compel a violation of law. Such a case as that may arise, and there Congress ought to be called on to pass an indemnity bill or a deficiency bill or some other bill to cover this great overriding necessity; but I do not know of any such case. It is not an ordinary case of deficiency.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask the Senator from Ohio whether he thinks that any executive officer of the Government would take the responsibility in the presence of such a statute as this of expending any money for any purpose unless there was an appropriation authorizing the expenditure? Would he take the risk? The President has occasionally used the public property without authority of law, without an appropriation, to relieve the necessities of people in distress.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will tell me a case that can occur under our form of government where such a thing has been done I should like to know it. The cases that have been mentioned are not those cases. Appropriations are made a year ahead. The appropriations in the ordinary appropriation bills are for a year from the 1st of July next, and that covers the whole of another session of Congress. As I said before, there may be a deficiency in those appropriations, a thing that happens every day and may happen a thousand times a year. It is provided for by this bill to the amount of $4,000,000. Congress may be called upon to make a deficiency appropriation. The estimates that have been made have been made far in advance. The money may be expended even by the time Congress meets at the next session, and then the ordinary remedy of a deficiency bill comes in. But I do not know any case now in the history of our Government except it was that of Mr. Lincoln at the beginning of the rebellion, and even then he felt himself called upon to convene Congress.

Mr. SARGENT. Does the Senator say that he knows of no instance where the President himself has taken the responsibility of ordering the expenditure of money where there was no appropriation?

Mr. SHERMAN. If he does, he does it at his own risk.

Mr. SARGENT. I can show you that President Grant has done so.

Mr. SHERMAN. In what case?

Mr. SARGENT. In the case of Indian disturbances on the plains, where he has ordered extraordinary supplies for the Indians, there being no appropriation. He did it by express order.

Mr. SHERMAN. There can be no case of that kind, for the furnishing of those supplies always comes from the Army supplies. I do not believe General Grant ever violated the Constitution of the United States in this particular in his life.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not say General Grant violated the Constitution or violated his duty, but I say he did just the thing that I have stated.

Mr. SHERMAN. If General Grant took money from the Treasury of the United States without authority of law he did violate the Constitution; and I do not believe he did. He is too careful, too watchful. He may have made a large purchase of supplies or a large purchase of arms; he may have caused an unusual movement of troops; he may have purchased an unusual amount of supplies; but to say that he took money from the Treasury of the United States without authority of law is to charge him with a crime of which I do not believe he is guilty.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator is talking about one thing and insists upon talking about that, and I am talking about another. The President did just this: he laid the Government under obligations to pay in one year more than the appropriations which were provided by Congress. He did not take money from the Treasury in violation of the Constitution; and that is not what this section prohibits. Of course not a dollar can be taken from the Treasury and pass the hands of the accounting officers without an appropriation; but expenditures may be authorized to be settled afterward, if Congress sees fit. In the case of the President's order to which I referred, (proof of which I will get and lay before the Senate and the Senator if need be,) when the President made the order he simply made an obligation which Congress would or would not pay, as it saw fit. But he took the responsibility of exceeding the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would that come within this section?

Mr. SARGENT. Certainly; because this section provides:

That it shall not be lawful for any Department of the Government to expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or to involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriation.

The President did just that, but he did not violate the Constitution.

Mr. SHERMAN. In my judgment that was clearly in accordance with law. I cannot now turn to the statutes, but the law itself authorizes the President of the United States to make contracts for Army and Navy supplies for two years. It meets the very case. Senators may look at cases where the President has exercised the power to order a large purchase of supplies, but that is not in violation of law. It may be in perfect accordance with law. But, after all, the President of the United States never, in my judgment, and Senators will find it very difficult for them to show a single case in which he ordered public money to be used except in pursuance of an appropriation, or in which he ordered contracts to be made in the name of the United States except in pursuance of an authority conferred by law.

Senators, these are fundamental propositions. I would not have offered such a section as this, because I do not know the case of such an act by an executive officer, and unless I did know of such a case I would not provide a remedy; but the House of Representatives have put it here, declaring that no executive officer shall do what he has no power to do, and certainly when such a provision is in the bill it ought to be left in, although the remedy pointed out may not be the best in the world.

Mr. WEST. Will the Senator allow me to inquire of him how that will fortify the act of July 12, 1870, which in the same terms precisely makes that provision? What is the occasion to re-enact it?

Mr. SHERMAN. Please read that section.

Mr. WEST. Section 5 of the act of July 12, 1870, reads:

That all balances of appropriations contained in the annual appropriation bills, and made specifically for the service of any fiscal year and remaining unexpended at the expiration of such fiscal year, shall only be applied to the payment of expenses properly incurred during that year or to the fulfillment of contracts properly made within that year and such balances not needed for the said purposes shall be carried to the surplus fund.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am sorry to say that that law of 1870, with which my friend from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] and I are perfectly familiar, has not been observed in every case. These balances have not always been carried into the Treasury and controversy and difference of opinion have arisen; indeed, constructions have been given to that act which substantially make it nugatory. For instance, under the next section to that read by the Senator from Louisiana it is held by the Treasury officers that if an appropriation of a million dollars remains on the books of the Treasury, and that appropriation has been drawn against to the amount of $1,000, no part of the million dollars shall be transferred to the general fund by reason of the outstanding draft of $1,000.

Mr. WEST. Let me suggest to the Senator that within ten days he assisted here in this Chamber in obviating that very objection by an amendment on another bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that.

Mr. WEST. That point is out of the way, then.

Mr. SHERMAN. At the same time, when the House of Representatives call attention to the fact that there is or may be a possible violation of the provision of the Constitution which guards the public Treasury, more sacred than anything else, is it not wise to put some declaration on the statute-books that that provision of the Constitution, that provision of the fundamental law, shall not be violated by anybody except upon penalties? There can be no danger in it. I do not believe myself that any case has occurred where any executive officer of this Government has violated specifically this law, although I say that the law is open to amendment and open to criticism, especially that part which provides that no head of a Department shall involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of the appropriation. I think that ought to read, "or to involve the Government in any contract not authorized by law." That would cover the case and remove the only objection that has been made to the section.

There are certain contracts authorized by law in which they have a right to go beyond the appropriations where they observe those laws. For instance, sometimes in some appropriation bills providing for the construction of a light-house, the law itself expressly authorizes contracts to be made for the entire building, although only a partial appropriation is made. Those cases ought to be excepted from the operation of this section, so that where the head of a Department is authorized by the law to make a contract for more than the appropriation, it ought not to be affected by the mere want of an appropriation. All the head of a Department can do in such a case is when the money runs out to stop the work, and wait until Congress meets and provides for the deficiency, as would be done in the ordinary course of the operations of the Government.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I do not know but that I shall be willing to accept the interpretation of the law given by the Senator from Ohio; and yet it does not bear that interpretation, I think. If I were the head of a Department and were ordered to build a light-house and an appropriation was made for that purpose, with this law staring me in the face, I should stop when that appropriation was exhausted, though it was a positive injury to the work of the Government. I should feel under this law that if I did not stop then I should be violating the provisions of this act and be subject to a high crime. Therefore

I do not like this section of the act at all. I believe there are circumstances under which the officers of the Government must, as it were, get the Government in debt beyond the appropriations; not that they must take the money from the Treasury. Whether the Government shall pay that indebtedness is for Congress to determine; but that officers of the Government when directed to do a certain work should under certain circumstances perform it, though it may involve a greater amount of money than is appropriated for the work, I consider necessary.

Mr. KELLY. I shall vote for striking out this section, and I will state the reason why. I do not consider that simply contracting for the payment of money is drawing money from the Treasury; and I will state a case as a mere illustration of the propriety for striking out this section. In the year 1872 there were several bands of Indians collected together by the superintendent of Indian affairs, and placed on what is now known as the Malheur reservation. But no money had been appropriated for the purposes of their subsistence. They had long been hostile. They were subdued by the United States military forces, and then collected together as I have stated. The question was simply whether those Indians should be turned loose upon the community or kept upon the military reservation and there starve to death. They could not subsist, and it was simply an act of humanity on the part of the Government to anticipate appropriations and subsist them until Congress should pass a deficiency appropriation bill. I have an amendment to offer by and by to this bill for subsistence for that very purpose. I am very well satisfied that the Indian Department could not have done otherwise unless they turned the Indians loose again upon the community or permitted them to starve where they were. I do not think any evil will result from striking out this section. Indeed when any head of a Department knows that there is no appropriation he will be more circumspect and cautious about contracting for the expenditure of money, and this is simply authorizing a contract to be made to be paid in the future. Therefore I can see no policy in prohibiting it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will read to my friend the law to show that the claim I made has been the law for over forty years. The sixth section of the act of May 1, 1820, which I find in Brightly's Digest, which was modified during the war, provides:

> That no contract shall hereafter be made by the Secretary of State, or of the Treasury, or of the Department of War, or of the Navy, except under a law authorizing the same, or under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment; and excepting, also, contracts for the subsistence and clothing of the Army or Navy, and contracts by the Quartermaster's Department, which may be made by the Secretaries of those Departments.

That has been the law for forty years, and it was modified during the war in some particulars, but I do not know how now without a reference to the act. Then there is a law which authorizes the Postmaster-General to make contracts for the postal service—contracts for rooms for post-offices and the like. They are authorized specifically by law.

There is a general prohibition of law now against any contract being made by any head of a Department, except in the cases I have mentioned, which are mainly supplies for the Army and Navy.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Is there any necessity, then, for this section?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think there is. If the case has ever occurred within the knowledge of any one of a violation of the law, I think there is a case for prescribing a penalty.

Mr. SARGENT. I think the difference between the Senator from Ohio and the Committee on Appropriations results rather from a different point of view than a different purpose. He cites the provision of the Constitution which prohibits the taking of money from the Treasury except in pursuance of appropriations made by Congress, and says this section is designed to prevent an infringement of that provision of the Constitution. I do not so understand it. I do not understand that there ever has been an instance where money has been taken from the Treasury of the United States except in pursuance of an appropriation. If the Senator from Ohio is aware of any instance or any class of cases where this has happened, I should be very much obliged to him if he would inform the Senate what those cases are. If he knows of any case where money has been taken from the Treasury of the United States except in pursuance of an appropriation by Congress, I should be very glad to hear the instance.

Mr. SHERMAN. I said before that I did not know of any such case. The Senator said the President of the United States had done it, as I understood him, but he afterward changed his position.

Mr. SARGENT. No, sir; I did not say it originally and consequently did not need to change it. I said the President of the United States had authorized certain expenditures, not paying certain amounts, in view of threatening Indian hostilities, which expenditures were not authorized by any appropriation up to that time made by Congress, and when Congress met it was in its discretion whether it would recognize that act of the President of the United States, for the President exercised this power under the law of Congress which provided that he might do it under certain conditions.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say now that I do not know of any case where any head of a Department, certainly not the President, has drawn money from the Treasury without an appropriation, and I do not believe he could under the laws and regulations of the Treasury Department. But I suppose there are cases where contracts have been made without law.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no doubt that there are often cases where expenditures are incurred by that safer system of making regular contracts instead of leaving it to a mere quantum meruit, and the United States is required subsequently by its Legislature to appropriate money in order to pay off those expenditures. If there were no unforeseen emergencies arising I suppose this provision would be all right.

Mr. MORTON. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. SARGENT. Certainly.

Mr. MORTON. The first part of this section that the committee proposes to strike out reads:

> That it shall not be lawful for any Department of the Government to expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year.

I understand the Senator from Ohio admits that that is the law now.

Mr. WEST. Word for word.

Mr. MORTON. If it is the law, there is no use in re-enacting it. You cannot make it any stronger. Now we come to the remaining part——

Mr. SHERMAN. That is in the Constitution, I will say to my friend, but there is no penalty attached to its violation by law.

Mr. MORTON. The remaining part reads:

> Or to involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriation.

I understand the Senator from Ohio says that that will encroach upon the special authority given by law in certain cases to make contracts in advance of appropriations. If that is the case it ought to be stricken out. Therefore I think the whole ought to come out.

Mr. SHERMAN. To avoid that criticism, I will move after the word "contract," in line 5, to insert "not authorized by law."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Say "not expressly authorized by act of Congress."

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well. I think the words of the Senator from Vermont are better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to what I fear will be a practical difficulty under this section even if amended as proposed by him. For example, contracts are made for the material for public buildings, as the new State Department. That contract was made, of course, by the Secretary of State; and, as I understand, it was in this form: The person with whom the contract was made for the stone was to furnish the stone for the entire building at prices stipulated according to bids upon advertisements made. The appropriation was probably not equal to more than a tenth of the expense to be incurred in purchasing stone. The Department made a contract that the party was to deliver a certain quantity of stone within a specified time at a certain price, which price in the aggregate could be met by appropriations then made; but there was also an agreement in the contract that he was to furnish additional quantities of the stone for the completion of the building, subject to appropriations afterward to be made by Congress, and there was also a provision that in case the contractor did not furnish the stone according to the contract the Government might enter upon the quarry, take possession of it, and work it upon its own account.

This, as will be seen by the Senate, is a provision absolutely essential to the security of the Government; for if a contract were made under an appropriation for a tenth part of the quantity of stone necessary for the construction of a public building and there were no authority in the officers of the Government to go beyond that point, then the Government would be in the hands of the person who had furnished so much stone as had been agreed for under the contract.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Could not the contract be made provisional, so that it could be met if future appropriations were made?

Mr. BOUTWELL. That is the condition now, too; but will not this section put it out of the power of the officers of the Government to involve—that is the language—"to involve the Government in any contract" beyond appropriations already made? There is a contract unquestionably; it is a contract contingent in a certain sense, but nevertheless a contract.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a contract subject to the option of the Government.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I want to know whether as matter of law that would not be in the face of this statute if this section becomes a statute?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would not, in my opinion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should think that would be a very proper exercise of the authority of the Department to make a contract for the amount of stone authorized in the appropriation, and then with the option on the part of the Government to take further quantities if the Government should desire them or Congress should appropriate the money. I would not consider that a violation of the law at all. Indeed, I submit to the Senator himself, would he be willing or does he claim that any officer of the Government or head of Department should make a contract for the whole of the stone of the State Department merely because Congress appropriated $200,000 to commence the building?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I imagine it never has been done. Moreover, I do not believe that from the beginning of the Government until now there has been ever a dollar of money drawn out of the Treasury in excess of appropriations. It is so near an impossibility as a business matter that Congress may safely rest in the belief that it never can be done. Property may be taken and used for purposes not authorized by law; but money cannot be got out of the Treasury except by an appropriation. It is so near an impossibility that we need not concern ourselves about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no doubt about that, and I have no doubt the abuses that have occurred heretofore have been by the transfer of appropriations and by the use of appropriations for one purpose for another, or what is called the lapping over of appropriations from year to year. I have no doubt that nearly all the abuses about which complaints have been made have grown out of those things. I do not see myself how it is possible for any officer of the Government to get money from the Treasury of the United States except in pursuance of an appropriation by law.

Mr. BOUTWELL. There are at least three offices in the Treasury, managed by different persons, where an account of every appropriation is kept and the balance shown, and no money can be drawn out the Treasury upon a given appropriation except the requisition or warrant passes through each of these three offices and subject to the inspection of three different and independent sets of men, and their approval must be required; and when an appropriation is exhausted it is checked in the first office it goes to.

Mr. SHERMAN. The difficulty does not arise in the Treasury Department, because there the money is guarded so that it is impossible to get money out without an appropriation; but the Government is often bound by contracts in such a way that it cannot avoid payment, and we are called upon to make appropriations for deficiencies, when if the whole matter was left to Congress they never would have provided for the expenditure. That has occurred very often; and I think every provision of law which tends to guard the Treasury, which tends to protect the Government from these expenditures, ought to be enacted, and especially by the Committee on Appropriations, who have charge of these matters and who must feel sometimes the trouble about being called upon for deficiencies for objects not contemplated. It seems to me they ought to be willing to agree to this section.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, it has been said that the law is as provided in this section substantially. My friend from Ohio thinks it is so essentially, but I do not think it is so at all, or ever has been; nor do I think that the administration of public affairs would be at all practicable or possible with any such provision of law. More than that, this law itself by its necessary and inevitable logic and results would put every Department of the Government in the pillory, morally and legally. If my honorable friend will look to the existing law he will see why the Committee on Appropriations propose to strike this section out. Let us look now to all the law there is on this subject, and see if the Committee on Appropriations are not right in supposing that this section creates a public embarrassment instead of a protection. The act of May 1, 1820, referred to by the Senator from Ohio, is in this language:

> That no contract shall hereafter be made by the Secretary of State, or of the Treasury, or of the Department of War, or of the Navy.

That takes in all the Executive Departments except those created since. Now, if we stop there, we have exactly what this section is: no Department of the Government shall expend any money beyond the appropriations or involve the Government in any contract; and there it stops.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the law now so far.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No; not by a great deal.

Mr. WEST rose.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I know what my honorable friend proposes to refer to, and I will come to that directly.

If you stop there, you see there is an arbitrary rule that no Department shall expend any money beyond a specific appropriation, and no Department shall involve the Government in a contract. Now, I undertake to say that, according to the construction of this Government of the powers that are devolved upon the Executive Departments, you could not run the Government a year on that law. They do exercise a discretion; they are authorized to exercise a discretion; and they are expected to exercise a discretion in every public emergency; and yet you say that if in any of these instances they do any of these things, they shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to six months' imprisonment and to $2,000 fine.

Now, let us see whether there ought not to be some exception to that rule. There is none. It is absolutely inexorable. Mind you, it is not confined to the Executive Departments; it applies to all departments of the Government. In 1820, when the law to which my honorable friend from Ohio refers was enacted, they had this idea in their mind, but they had not the extreme notion which seems to pervade the parties who put this section in the bill. They proposed to say, very much in the language of this bill, that no contract should hereafter be made by any of these Departments "except under a law authorizing the same, or under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment; and excepting also contracts for the subsistence and clothing of the Army or Navy, and contracts by the Quartermaster's Department, which may be made by the Secretaries of those Departments."

Now here comes in a bill which proposes to repeal all that and put these Departments under an absolute edict that they shall not exercise in any emergency the slightest discretion, no matter what the public service demands. Which is the wiser, then? Do you not see, so far as the Government is concerned, so far as the law is concerned, it is all right and all well? There is the inhibition contained in the first part of the section, and there are the necessary and salutary exceptions; and therefore the Committee on Appropriations thought we had on this subject all the legislation necessary. There is an inhibition against the spending of anything beyond the appropriations, or making contracts without law, already upon your statute-book, and it is accompanied with a salutary exception necessary for the demands of the service, and there it rests. This bill comes in and repeals the whole thing, and says that if any officer dare do any of these things, no matter what the demands of the public service, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and liable to fine and imprisonment. For that reason it seemed very obvious to the Committee on Appropriations that this section was not necessary.

But, Mr. President, there is reason outside of this statute why this section ought not to be adopted. You will see that the exception in the act of 1820 applies to the War, the Navy, and the Treasury Departments. What do you say of the Interior Department, which has grown up since that time? Should not the rule apply equally to that Department? Is not the rule so far as domestic affairs are concerned more urgent on that Department? What is to be done with all your Indian relations? Look at the deficiencies in this very bill. In making appropriations in regard to that service it is utterly impossible for any mortal man to tell precisely what they ought to be; no man can tell. We make the best guess we can with regard to the Indians. It is not an exact service in any sense whatever. You could neither make a just administration, nor a wise, or expedient, or economical administration, without the exercise of a very broad discretion in regard to that service. And yet you perceive this section would put the Secretary of the Interior into the pillory if he undertook to exercise any discretion whatever in regard to a service that must necessarily, to be beneficial or economical, be flexible to some extent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask my friend a question. Is there any difficulty, Congress being in session during the whole of one session after an appropriation is made, in providing as in this bill for deficiencies for the current service of the fiscal year? You have in this bill a million dollars appropriated in that way.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let me give you an instance, and I can give you hundreds in regard to the Indian service. Here is an item for a deficiency of $500,000 for the Apaches. Could anybody foresee that? My friend says it is a million for two years. Very well; be it more or less, that does not answer the question. It is a flexible service. Take the Apaches. That is a good illustration. We have been maintaining in the Territory of Arizona three regiments of troops at an expense of about four millions annually, for the last five or six years. Two years ago, I think very wisely, without any warrant of law except in a very general way, the President sent out a commission to that country to make certain contracts with those Indians, and by force of authority, under the general provision of law, to exercise the discretion he had to induce those Indians to go on a particular reservation. He authorized that commission to make a contract with those Indians in a general way, coming of course occasionally within the inhibition here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was a treaty, you mean?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No; we had no authority to make a treaty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does the Senator mean? He had authority to negotiate one and submit it to us, had he not?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That has been questioned.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But does the Senator question it?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My honorable friend knows that the Congress of the United States has recently resolved that no more treaties shall be made with Indians. I do not think it touches the constitutional authority of the President to act. That is my belief.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the President had a perfect right to do what he did.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But it is equivalent to that, because the Senate of the United States having been a party consenting to that law, of course we would not exercise the authority of ratifying treaties afterward. But he did not undertake to make a treaty; he made an arrangement.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is merely another name for the same thing.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not controvert the point, because it has nothing to do with what I am about to say.

Now, what was involved in that? A very large expense, and we are appropriating for it here to-day. The idea was to get rid of that military rule. The idea was to get rid of maintaining three regiments in Arizona at an expense of $4,000,000 annually. It has worked well thus far. The Indians who have been on the war-path for many years in Arizona are quiet to-day. They have gone upon their reservations. We made an appropriation last year in the judgment of some people, in the judgment of the majority of Congress, ample for the support of these Indians; but as a matter of fact it turned out not to be ample. Now, what is to be done?

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask my friend again, is not that to be provided for by the very remedy he has provided; that is, by a deficiency bill during the current fiscal year?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But the expenditures had to be made before Congress met. There is the difficulty.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will see that, no matter if the amount was expended before we met, that was the amount that had been appropriated for the current year, but it ran out before the year was over.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But my information on the subject is that very large expenditures beyond the amount appropriated had been made; contracts had been made for supplies and all that sort of thing, and this appropriation is to meet those expenditures. Now, would anybody say it is wise on the part of Congress to apply this rigid rule to that Department, when it is not applied to the other Departments under the act of 1820? The absurdity of this proposition is that it undertakes to change the law in regard to the administration of public affairs, particularly in these Departments. It changes the whole rule of the law of 1820. There you will find the reasonable exceptions which are calculated to adapt the law to the practical affairs of administration, and without those exceptions there can be no such thing as a wise, economical, or beneficent administration of public affairs. That is the objection to this section. That is the reason, not to extend this discussion, why the committee thought on the whole that all that was necessary was substantially provided for by the act of 1820, and was not proper to be re-enacted here.

Another thing, Mr. President, I will advert to while I am up. I have gone on all fours with my honorable friend from Ohio in this attempt to confine the expenditures to the appropriations. I think within the last five or six years most wholesome regulations have been adopted to that end. By the act of 1870, referred to by my honorable friend from Louisiana, the spirit of this law is enacted, but it applies specifically to the expenditures of appropriations.

Mr. WEST. I hope the Senator from Maine now will allow me to interrupt him a moment on the subject I wanted to speak upon a moment ago.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. WEST. The first six lines of this section, which the Committee on Appropriations have recommended to strike out, are just, word for word and letter for letter, the language of the act of July 12, 1870.

Mr. SHERMAN. No penalty was provided.

Mr. WEST. Then you here provide the penalty. That is the reason I voted to strike out the section in committee—for the reason that the law worked efficiently without a penalty, and I did not see any necessity to provide one.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It will be seen then, Mr. President, that Congress has not been lax in this regard. It is true that an interpretation was put upon the act of 1870 by the Treasury Department the operation of which was different from what was contemplated by Congress. We found that while it was our purpose at the end of two years that all balances should be covered into the Treasury, as a matter of fact it turned out that under the practice of the Departments that applied only to appropriations against which nothing had been drawn for the two years. This year we have remedied that. With every disposition to co-operate with my honorable friend from Ohio upon this subject, my own belief is that this provision ought to be stricken out; that it gives no security whatever to the administration of public affairs, while it could not but be a very great embarrassment thereto. I hope, therefore, the Senate will concur with the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the question is put on striking out the section, I will ask to have the question put on the amendment I offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the pending motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I presume there is no objection to that; and then I wish to move another amendment to the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, I move to strike out all of the section after the word "misdemeanor," in line 8, and to insert before the word "misdemeanor" the word "high."

It seems to me, after the discussion we have had, there ought to be very little controversy about this matter. Under the law as it now stands there is no penalty for the violation of this prohibition. We have at least four laws prohibiting the misapplication of appropriations, and heretofore it has never been deemed wise, or it has never been done, to provide a penalty. I propose to insert after the words "the law" these words, now in the bill:

> And any violation of the provisions of this section by any officer of the Government shall be deemed a high misdemeanor.

That will bring his case clearly within the power of Congress to examine into it, and if proper cause should arise to impeach him. I think there is objection to compelling the officers of the Government to be called before ordinary municipal tribunals; but I think a violation of a constitutional provision of this kind ought to be declared an impeachable offense.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I certainly shall vote against the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Ohio. He is mistaken in supposing that we have not provided penalties against public officers charged with the management of the business of the Government for a failure to perform their duty. The act of 1846, the sub-Treasury act, which provides for the regulation of the duties of almost all the disbursing and contracting officers of the Government, provides severe penalties to be imposed by indictment and information. The Senator shakes his head. Well, I will get the act of 1846 and see.

Mr. SHERMAN. The act is very severe against disbursing officers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; they are officers charged with the performance of duty under the law, the protection of Government moneys. So the Senator is incorrect in saying that we have no precedents in the course of the Government for providing for punishing the executive officers of the Government for disobeying the requirements of law. The statutes are full of them. The sixteenth section of the act of 1846—a very long section which I will not now read—provides penalties against disbursing and receiving and all other officers charged with the care as well as the disbursement of the public moneys of the United States. Then when you come to the act of 1868, to which reference is made in this section for the amount of penalty, we find this express provision:

> And if any officer of the Government shall knowingly contract for the erection, repair, or furnishing of any public building, or for any public improvement which shall bind the Government to pay a larger amount than the specific sum appropriated for such purpose, such officer shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof by a court of competent jurisdiction, shall be punished by imprisonment not less than six months nor more than two years, and shall pay a fine of $2,000.

Mr. CONKLING. What act is that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The act of the 25th of July, 1868, volume 15, Statutes at Large, page 177. This act of 1868 was leveled at the only abuse which then occurred apparently to Congress, of running the Government in debt in spite of the will of Congress, and for which in justice toward the people, who could not inquire into the authority of public officers, we were bound to pay money out of the Treasury. It was merely an indirect way of getting money out of the Treasury which Congress had not appropriated, and making the Executive Departments of the Government the judges of how much the public interests should be subserved by expenditures, instead of Congress, to which the people and Constitution had remitted it. That was the evil.

There undoubtedly may be cases where it would be very inconvenient to have the law that way. Some great emergency may arise; but the Constitution has provided for that emergency, because it has authorized the President on any extraordinary occasion to convene that body, the legislative body of the Government, to whom the people and the Constitution have intrusted the management of their affairs in respect to how many contracts and how much money shall be made and expended. That is the redress, the remedy for any great emergency to which Senators refer about the Indians or anything else.

But leaving the law as it now stands and the practice as it now stands, without any penalties or punishments, we, in effect, as we find by yearly experience, leave to the discretion of the Executive Departments of the Government the very thing which the Constitution has left solely to our discretion; and that is the expenditure of public moneys out of the Treasury. It is perfectly true, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] says, that the actual money does not get out of the Treasury until it is appropriated, but if there is an actual obligation of the Government incurred, so that our honor and good faith toward the people with whom our officers deal require us morally to vote the money from the Treasury when we meet to make good these engagements which the law has not warranted that have been entered into, then in substance and effect it is exactly the same thing, so far as the people and their interests are concerned, as if the officers had got the money out of the Treasury in violation of law and spent it, because then all we could do would be either to let it alone or pass an act of indemnity.

We ought not to leave the law in that way, Mr. President. All the value there is in this second section now is in this punitive part of it; because the Senator from Ohio is perfectly well aware, aside from the amendment he has just put into it to make it more clear, that it is literally the existing law under the act of 1870, word for word. The seventh section of the act of July 12, 1870, for reference to which I am obliged to my honorable friend from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] who has it before him, is literally verbatim et literatim the first six lines of the second section of this bill.

Then there is the act of 1868, which precedes the act of 1870 to be sure, which is specially directed against contracts for public buildings; but there it stops. Now, is that limited application of prevention and punishment sufficient for public purposes? If there is any reason upon which there ought to be a limitation in respect to contracts for public buildings, that reason applies to all branches of the public service. The Executive Departments of the Government from their very nature are authorized by the Constitution and the law to execute the law and to do nothing else. They are not authorized to execute their own will and to do that which the law does not provide for. They are the mere instruments (who have no jurisdiction or authority whatever that the law does not confer upon them) to carry into effect the will of the people of the United States expressed by an act of Congress. That is their mission; and the sooner the Executive Departments of this Government learn, if they need to be taught—I do not say they do; I am not making any complaint of them—the sooner the Executive Departments of this Government come to understand perfectly that their mission is terminated when they have exhausted faithfully that which the law imposed upon them and stop there, the better it will be for the Government of the United States, the better it will be for public opinion, the better it will be for themselves.

Then, if an extraordinary emergency arises, the Constitution has pointed out the way by which it can be fairly met; that is to say, the two Houses of Congress are assembled by the President, which, in the present condition of the country, can be done at any time in eight days. The remotest Senator can get here in eight or ten days, and a quorum can get here in half the time; and they can provide, as the Constitution has intended they shall provide, for any public exigency that may arise.

Now, the Senator from Ohio says, in view of all this, agreeing with me so far, "I will lay down the prohibition, but I will not impose any penalty for the violation of it." It seems to me that that is altogether illogical. If he is to stand merely on an impeachment by the House of Representatives of every Indian agent, of every superintendent of Indian affairs, of every Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and so on, we do not need this section at all, because, with the exception of the verbal amendment he has just made in the first part of the section, we have got the prohibition already. All that we need is something which will enforce the prohibition upon the parties who violate it. We have got the remedy of impeachment already. It does not require an act of Congress to authorize the House of Representatives to impeach anybody who violates a prohibition of a statute, I take it. We do not have to provide by law that a particular misdemeanor by a judge or by a head of a Department in doing that which the law forbids shall be a misdemeanor, in order that under the Constitution of the United States the judge or the head of a Department may be impeached for it, I take it. If so, it would always be impossible to impeach a judge, because I do not know of any statute which declares that corruption in office by a judge of a United States court shall be a misdemeanor. There is not any such statute, of course.

Therefore, Mr. President, we now have, without this section, the prohibition that its first six lines create here. We have as respects public buildings the prohibition against contracts and punishment for the violation of it; but as to every other department of the public service we have the prohibition and no penalty. Now, if we are to have anything else, as we do in all other cases respecting public officers doing their duty, charged with the expenditure and keeping of public money and doing the same thing in the making of contracts, let us provide that there shall be a reasonable and proper penalty for the violation of this act. No honest officer need fear it; every dishonest officer ought to bear the punishment.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I would like to agree with everything said by the Senator from Vermont, as I do agree with much that he said; and yet I think the Committee on Appropriations have recommended wisely in respect of this section.

This is an era of reform; or if not an era of reform, it is an era of restlessness and change. I know of nothing that exists which there is not a disposition somewhere to revolutionize. If Pope were living now he would never dare to say that "whatever is, is right." If he wished to conform to the prevailing spirit he would have to reverse it and affirm that whatever is, is wrong.

What is there now upon this legislation that summons Congress to make any change? In 1820 a prohibition was put upon the statute-book against all expenditures and contracts in excess of appropriations save only in certain instances there reserved. Those reservations were deemed necessary. Under those reservations we went on for a long time. In 1868 it was deemed proper to apply specifically and by name that inhibition to public buildings and one or two other topics, improvements and so on. In 1870 it was thought wise to go still further and to denounce as unlawful the making of any contract to be answered in a sum of money, other than that for which appropriation had been made. Upon those three sections, as I understand them, with another section to which I shall refer in a moment, we rest to-day.

What is the criticism upon them? What harm has come out of them? The Senator from Ohio says that a section of the act of 1870 preceding that to which I have just referred, has been construed diversely or erroneously—the section touching unexpended balances; and he says that where a fund has been drawn upon in part it has been held to be so treated that this section does not act upon it. Admit it; admit if you please for the sake of the argument, that the interpretation has been not only mistaken but perverse, does the section now pending correct that? Not at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. That has been amended by a law passed at this session.

Mr. CONKLING. So I was going to say; that has already been corrected at this session. Therefore, no reference in reason can be made to that as excuse or vindication for this. It has nothing to do with it.

That supposed misconstruction of the act of 1870 having been corrected and prevented for the future, what else remains? The Senator from Vermont has found—and that is the last resting place of reason; it is the only thing upon which an argument or a piece of an argument can be founded—that this section of the act of 1870 which renders illegal, unauthorized, and legally impossible all contracts in excess of appropriations, does not also contain a denunciation of penalties of its own. I have two answers to that suggestion. Has anybody violated this section that ought to be punished and has not been? Has any difficulty occurred under it? Who is the man and what is the instance? If it exists, it summons the House of Representatives to its feet to explain to us why the grand inquest of the nation acting under the constitutional power to which reference has been made so often, has not redressed that wrong.

Is it true that some head of a Department has been violating this statute, and that we are paralyzed by the fact that no police justice is authorized to deal with him? The Constitution says that that is the very case upon which a presentment shall occur by the grand jury of the nation, the House of Representatives. Is there any evidence here, first, that an officer has violated the section, and second, that he cannot be dealt with because the House of Representatives has violated its plain duty, and therefore we must invoke the prerogatives of a justice of the peace or a United States commissioner to deal with him? I have heard no such thing. Several Senators, I think, have disclaimed all knowledge or information in that direction; and yet, with nothing moving us, we are now asked to incorporate in the statutes a provision—

That it shall not be lawful for any Department of the Government to expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or to involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriation.

And to follow that with a penalty, to be enforced by whom? Not by impeachment, as my friend from Ohio proposes; a work entirely of supererogation, as I submit to him. We cannot confer upon the House of Representatives any power of impeachment. The whole power that resides in that House, be the same more or less, is conferred by the Constitution, and these are mere idle words in respect to that. But as the section came to us from the House, a police court of some sort is to deal with these men. Why? It was suggested that instances have occurred where executive officers had taken the responsibility, without warrant of law and perhaps in violation of the letter of the law, of doing acts which they deemed right, urgent, unanswerable in their necessity. Suppose it were true when Chicago burned that one of the Executive Departments allowed food and raiment to be consumed by those who in an hour were prostrated from affluence to penury and starvation?

Mr. EDMUNDS. This act, let me tell the Senator, would not meet that.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not say it would, and if my friend will pardon me for a moment he will see that that is not the point of my observation. Suppose in a case of emergency like that, which would violate technically the act of 1870 or this act, in place of the executive officer trusting, as I think he may trust as long as this country remains a Christian country, and as long as we do not run stark mad about everything, that Congress coming together and finding he had acted in good faith and upon proper principles would by a deficiency bill or some other bill make him whole, we make the law in such wise that in lieu of that any informer or enemy may drag him into a police court and have him fined and imprisoned for an act entitled to the applause of the whole nation, and which in place of making him a criminal ought to make him the subject of universal commendation? As the law stands now, there is no difficulty about it.

It is said in history—perhaps that may cast some doubt upon it—that when an oath in ancient times was tendered to a public agent, he waived off the oath in terms, and took in place of it an oath to preserve the republic; and from that hour to this the public sense distinguishes between a violation of law blamable and vicious and that technical departure from the letter of the law which is only a deference paid to some supreme emergency. As the law stands now, every officer is free, at his peril and for reasons which must be not only satisfactory to him, but satisfactory to the law-making power, to take into his hands, in the presence of an immediate and sudden emergency, more than the literal power conferred by law, and to answer for it, whether it be by giving clothing to the drowning people of Louisiana, or whether it be by fitting out a gun-boat or arming a ship in order to prevent complications with Spain, and in order to prevent a national quarrel hurtful to our interests and threatening in blood, and he may feel tolerably sure that no diligent commissioner, no personal enemy, no prying and officious informer will be able to have him bound over by an examining magistrate, or indicted by a grand jury, or convicted by a petit jury, before Congress can meet and revise his act and pronounce judgment upon the question whether justifiably or excusably or otherwise he ventured upon the act he did.

A provision arming the House of Representatives with the right to impeach and the Senate with the right to try such a case is, it seems to me, as foreign to any useful purpose as words could be. A provision such as the committee found in the bill committing it to police courts to pursue the executive branch of the Government and visit punishment upon the executive branch of the Government for acts every one of which is cognizable by the House of Representatives and by us, it seems to me, in place of making a wise addition to the statute, is the doing of an unnecessary and a vicious thing. An event may arise in which it ought to be done, and I can specify that event exactly. It should be done whenever it turns out that the House of Representatives has not the courage, nor the virtue, nor the intelligence to impeach for high crimes and misdemeanors those who are guilty, or when it turns out that this body has sunk so low that it will not try and firmly adjudge of such accusations.

My impression is that if there be fault in this legislation, in place of there being too little of it already, there is too much. My belief is that had the legislation stopped with the act of 1820 and the act of 1868 extending the prohibitions to public buildings, public improvements, and so on, it would have been adequate and safer than it is now; but when we take into consideration the act of 1870, which deals with the matter of unexpended balances, and which has been re-enforced at this session, and which in the next section makes all contracts unlawful by whomever made unless they be within appropriations and the time covered by appropriations, it seems to me that we may safely rest, at least until we find that that law has been violated for want of a penalty, and find that the House of Representatives and the Senate together are unable to cope with such offenders as may be found. In the mean time I feel sure that we can get along without commissioners or prosecuting attorneys to supervise and intervene between us and the Executive Departments and see whether a warrant ought to be sworn out against any man for violating these provisions.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to confine debate on amendments to the pending bill to five minutes by any Senator on the pending motion, under the rule recently adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Senator had waited until the other side had been heard a little first.

Mr. SARGENT. This matter has been discussed for about an hour, and very impartially. I have confined myself to three minutes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; I can stand it if the rest can.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to get through with this bill to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from California.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to the second section of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I can have the ear of the Senate for a minute or two in reply to the Senator from New York, I should like it. It is now a quarter past four o'clock.

The Senator from New York, it seems to me, in effect, maintains a doctrine which, if carried out, would lead us to confer all power on the Executive Departments of the Government, without any restraint at all, upon the theory that when they abused them the Senate and the House of Representatives together could correct it, because he argues that we ought not to have any punishment for offenses of this kind or violations of the acts of Congress at all inasmuch as the punishment by impeachment is sufficient, and if that fails, then we can pass a law providing for punishment by indictment and so on. Mr. President, when the House of Representatives and the Senate get so, as he says, that they fail on impeachments, they will be very likely to be in a condition, so corrupted, as not to pass any punitive laws for such offenses, certainly not for those that have taken place already. Has the Senator forgotten that the Constitution of the United States itself provides that impeachments shall not have the effect to prevent criminal punishments, but that they are both to go together; that the party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment according to law? The Constitution undertook to defend the people of this nation by punishments for violations of acts of Congress, and it has always done so, and has made no distinction between high officers or low ones in respect to the duties it has imposed upon them.

Here we have an act which merely provides for punishing an offense against the laws of the United States. The Senator asks what could be done if the President and Executive Departments have not this discretion? What could have been done about Chicago? Why, sir, what the President did about Chicago does not come within this act, or would not have come within the act of 1870 if it had been in force then. This act and the act of 1870 only provide for the expenditure of money unlawfully and for the making of contracts for which provision has not been made by law; that is all. If the President of the United States, in great emergencies, chooses to employ some part of the public property that is in hand to aid distress and suffering, this law does not affect him at all.

There is no need, therefore, to cite cases of that kind and ask us not to pass this law on that account, because they do not apply. So of the floods on the Mississippi. All that is perfectly well provided for. So about the arming of ships for Spain. I undertake to say that I believe the Secretary of the Navy did not violate any law by incurring any expenditures or making any contracts that the law had not authorized. He acted, up to the time Congress provided for him, within the appropriations that he had, as I understand. I am sure the Secretary of the Navy did not violate any law on that occasion, and yet the act of 1870 was on the statute-book. If he did, it would be one good reason in my mind for passing an act of this kind, because I believe it to be of a most dangerous character for any Executive Department to put the Government of the United States on what you may call a war footing by raising armies or by fitting out navies, in order to be ready to engage in hostilities against a friendly power until the Congress itself shall have provided for that sort of thing, because if you are all ready it only takes one step more to involve the people in war by mere Executive interference. That is not right. There is no safety in that. Therefore I should not wish to have the instance of the Secretary of the Navy brought in question here as showing that such an authority as this ought to exist to authorize him to make use of money which Congress had not appropriated, or to incur expenses which Congress had not provided for.

If there is an emergency which involves the national honor, the Constitution, as I have said, requires the President of the United States to call Congress together to defend the national honor; and, as I have said, it can be done in a week as this country is now situated. Shall we therefore hesitate to protect the public Treasury against indiscreet expenditures of money, or in some future time criminal expenditures of money or the criminal incurring of obligations, and say that we will wait until some emergency arises? No, Mr. President, the time to pass good laws to protect the Treasury is in the time of good administrations, which the good laws will not harm, but whom they will aid to uphold, and then, by-and-by, if the evil day should ever come that you have a bad administration, you have a law that is ready for the offending officer to protect the people, and there would be a punishment that is already provided for the crime; whereas if you wait until he commits the crime, you cannot affix a penalty which will impose the punishment. I hope, therefore, that we shall stand upon this section as it now stands, leaving it as it ought to be if we really intend to protect the Treasury.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir; I have half a minute left.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. You can take the answer out of my time. I want to ask the Senator whether, in his judgment, this act if it should pass repeals the sixth section of the act of 1820 which I read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the sixth section of the act of 1820?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will read it again.

That no contract shall hereafter be made by the Secretary of State, or of the Treasury, or of the Department of War, or of the Navy, except under a law authorizing the same, or under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment, and excepting also contracts for the subsistence and clothing of the Army or Navy, and contracts by the Quartermaster's Department, which may be made by the Secretaries of those Departments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; it does not repeal that act.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is it not inconsistent?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think it is. It is in aid of it instead of being inconsistent.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This section reads without qualification "that it shall not be lawful for any Department of the Government to expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for any fiscal year, or to involve the Government in any contract."

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator asks me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The five minutes of the Senator from Vermont have expired.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Now if the Senator will interrogate me, he can do so in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I stand by the rule of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is very obvious to my mind that this section repeals the act of 1820. It cannot be otherwise, I think, because it is absolute in its terms and is to the effect that it shall not be lawful for any of these Departments to involve the Government in any contract. By the act of 1820 it was lawful to involve the Government in a contract for certain purposes, contracts for subsistence and clothing, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When the Senator is through, I can then make a motion which will enable me to reply to his question.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I was through. That was the only object I had in asking the Senator the question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to perfect the clause proposed to be stricken out by inserting at the end thereof: "but this act shall not be construed to repeal the act of 1820."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. By which I understand the Senator to think as I do.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will not interrupt me, in five minutes I will tell him what I think.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I know enough to be aware that interruption does not embarrass the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But it takes my time, which perhaps is to a better purpose. I will only occupy a moment on this amendment.

The act of 1820, which I have moved to except from the operation of this section, provides just what this act does in substance and in spirit for two or three of the Departments. It makes an exception as to two other Departments which might proceed to clothe the Army and to do the other thing there named without the limitation imposed by the act of 1820. Now I say that this provision in this section does not repeal the act of 1820. It may override that last clause and put all the Departments upon an equal footing; but as the Senator from Ohio suggests, that is not very easy to be said after the fact that the section now says that no officer shall involve the Government under any contract not expressly authorized by act of Congress. If that contract is expressly authorized by act of Congress, as it seems to me, he may still go on and do so. But what I wish to do—and if this is the effect of overriding that act I shall be very glad of it—is to put every Department on an equal footing. That is to say, when Congress has determined how much shall be spent in a year, they shall not in effect oblige us to spend more until we have the opportunity to judge whether it is right or not.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But my friend will see that the act of 1820 does eo nomine, in terms, give to these Departments a discretion. The Secretary of War may make contracts for subsistence and clothing of the Army; and so the Secretary of the Navy. That is an exception.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Now, my query was whether this section did not repeal that exercise of discretion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The act of 1870 repealed that act if it stands in conflict with it, and I think it does.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not think it did repeal it, but perhaps it did.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It must have been so if this act does, because they are literally the same.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Now my remark in the beginning was that this section is against the settled policy of the law. For that reason we proposed to strike it out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will excuse me now in my time, which has only a minute left, I wish to tell him that this section is according to the settled policy of the modern law, as I understand, since the act of 1868 about public buildings. When we found under a different administration, one that had gone before the present Administration, that things had been done which required to be stopped, we enacted the act of 1868 to stop them. Again, we find in 1870 that the best policy is in a well-regulated administration to have no Department permitted to involve the Government in expense, either directly or indirectly, until Congress shall have made provision for it, and so we say as to contracts and expenditures in 1870, it shall not be done. Now we say in 1874, if anything of this kind is done, we punish it as we do other misdeeds. That is all there is to it. Now I withdraw the amendment I proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont withdraws his amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I renew it for the purpose of saying that the case the Senator puts is not analogous at all. It establishes no such theory whatever. The act of 1868 applies to specific appropriations, and its policy can be well extended to that extent. When you make an appropriation for a public building you know what you are about. There is no flexibility to it, and none necessary at all; but when you come to deal with the public service such as that of the Army, you must have a discretion. So the policy of the law has established it in regard to all these Departments. It is equally true in regard to the Indian service.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator if he meant——

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will be a little more generous than my honorable friend was. I am not very saving of time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator will excuse me. The generosity of the Senator took more than half of my time.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Call on me for any generosity as to time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is he not himself one of the worthy authors of the act of 1870, which made the sweeping provision which this act contains except the penalty?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not feel the slightest embarrassment about that. I would have excepted then what I would except now. What I am addressing myself to my honorable friend is to show that we ought to have made an exception, and that no just or expedient or economical or safe administration it seems to me can be carried on without it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have carried on since 1870 under it without the least difficulty.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But upon an oversight. I withdraw the amendment that I offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.]

The Chair put the question, and declared that the negative appeared to prevail.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let us have a division.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. What are we to vote on now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let that be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The chairman of the committee insists upon having a division. I thought the vote was right; but if we are to divide, I prefer to have the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONKLING. The vote was in the negative on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio putting this as a high crime and misdemeanor. Does the Senator from Maine want to make a record of the yeas and nays upon that?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I understand the motion of the Senator from Ohio is to strike out that part of the clause which affixes a penalty.

Mr. SHERMAN. To strike out all after the word "misdemeanor."

Mr. CONKLING. That amendment has failed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It strikes out all that part which provides for proceedings in a criminal court.

Mr. CONKLING. And makes the offense impeachable. That amendment has failed. Is the Senator from Maine in favor of the amendment?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. He strikes out all after the word "misdemeanor."

Mr. CONKLING. But is my friend from Maine in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, I am in favor of striking out all that part of the section.

Mr. CONKLING. And making it a high misdemeanor?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It improves it to strike out that much.

Mr. CONKLING. It must be bad enough if that improves it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bogy, Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Cooper, Davis, Flanagan, Kelly, Lewis, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Ramsey, Sargent, Scott, Sherman, Tipton, and West—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckingham, Carpenter, Conkling, Conover, Edmunds, Hager, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Oglesby, Patterson, Robertson, Spencer, Wadleigh, Washburn, and Wright—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bayard, Brownlow, Cameron, Clayton, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones, Logan, Morton, Norwood, Pease, Pratt, Ransom, Saulsbury, Schurz, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, and Windom—35.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, to strike out the section as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the whole remnant there is left of it be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall not be lawful for any Department of the Government to expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or to involve the Government in any contract not expressly authorized by act of Congress for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriation; and any violation of the provisions of this section by any officer of the Government shall be deemed a high misdemeanor.

Mr. CONKLING. Did the amendment of the Senator from Ohio prevail?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. So that there is nothing left in the section except what has been read by the Clerk. Then I should like to inquire whether there is any thing in it beyond that which is to be found in the act of 1870?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Only characterizing the act.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is made a high misdemeanor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is "high."

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Vermont suggests that the word "high" is to be found in it. [Laughter.] It seems to me that actually and legally it is the same thing. It is simply repeating over the enactment, and then making upon it the general observation that to violate that or any other act would be a misdemeanor. That is the law now. If it is worth while to re-enact it, so be it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 874:

For the purchase of the original lot No. 1, square No. 683, in the city of Washington, containing about fifteen thousand superficial feet, with the improvements thereon, for a site for fire-engine house and for stables for mail-wagons and horses for the Senate, $18,000.

A single word in explanation of this amendment. The stables that are now occupied by the Sergeant-at-Arms and Postmaster of the Senate for the horses used in carrying the mails will soon have to be removed. They are upon the right of the public grounds, and it is rather important that they should be near the Capitol. In addition to that, there is the engine-house that stands upon the south side, that it is provided in this amendment shall be removed at once. It is therefore necessary that some other spot of ground should be provided for this engine-house. There is no other in this part of the city, and the Government of the United States has a very great interest at stake here in the Capitol, Government Printing Office, and navy-yard. In the present position of affairs of the District of Columbia it is perhaps more than we have a right to expect to suppose that the District will be able to make provision in time at all events for this removal, and it may be just on the part of Congress to at least provide a site, and possibly to put up the building, for the engine-house and give it to the District, for the sake of having an engine-house where it will be within convenient distance in case of any fire at the Government Printing Office, which is a very large building and very much exposed, as there are many large rooms connecting and communicating on each story with masses of combustible matter, so that if a fire should get in it would be almost impossible to prevent the entire building from being burnt up.

In addition to this, the lot here mentioned is owned by our Chief Clerk, and you are aware that the streets have been cut down so that the house must come down. We have felt under the circumstances that, while it was right for the Government to obtain a site that would be convenient for the purpose I have already indicated, it would not be right to pay more for the land than it is worth. The amount of land that is in this lot is 14,911¼ feet, so that if the purchase is made we really buy the land as low as it can be bought anywhere in this vicinity, as the price will not amount to more than $1.25 a foot.

Under these circumstances, I have no doubt that the public will be accommodated, not only for the stables but for this engine-house, which there will be ample room to locate on this site, and also for an office, if it should be required, for the architect of the Capitol extension.

The architect of the Capitol extension informs me that there will be material enough in the building now standing upon this lot to put up the stables for the use of the Sergeant-at-Arms and the Postmaster of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. Where is it?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Just one square, off the Capitol grounds, on Delaware avenue, between that avenue and North Capitol street.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following amendment to be inserted after line 455:

For this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay for the subsistence supplies purchased by the United States Indian agent for the Yankton Indians, and issued to them by the Indian peace commissioners between the 1st day of November, 1866, and the 10th day of May, 1867, $11,329.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that in order? It is a private claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the amendment been referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. ALLISON. It has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SARGENT. It has been, but at so late an hour that I have had no time to examine it. I will inquire if there is any letter from the Secretary?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it reported from a committee?

Mr. SARGENT. We have not had time to examine it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That it not the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa report this from any committee?

Mr. ALLISON. I will say that I do not report it from any committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then it is not in order.

DEATH OF HON. DAVID B. MELLISH.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, communicated to the Senate intelligence of the death of Hon. DAVID B. MELLISH, late a member of the House from the State of New York, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask that the resolutions of the House of Representatives be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolutions, which were read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 25, 1874.

Resolved, That a committee of five members be appointed by the Speaker of the House to take order for superintending the funeral of Hon. DAVID B. MELLISH, late a member of this body, which will take place to-morrow, (Tuesday,) at four o'clock p. m., and that the House will attend the same.

Resolved, As a further mark of respect entertained by the House for the memory of Hon. DAVID B. MELLISH that his remains be removed to Auburn, Massachusetts, in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms and attended by the said committee, who shall have full power to carry this resolution into effect.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these proceedings to the Senate, and invite the Senate to attend the funeral ceremony in the Hall of the House of Representatives to-morrow, at four o'clock.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the time and the occasion are not suited to a notice of the life or character of him to whose funeral we are thus invited. The death of Mr. MELLISH is one especially distressing. He came to congressional life first in December last, at the opening of the present session. He came with health and vigor. The excitement and the labor of his public life wore away his existence. He died of those perplexities and harassing demands of which so little is known except by those who endure them. A commercial revulsion had visited the country, and many persons believed that to Congress belonged the duty and the power of creating prosperity. Mr. MELLISH addressed himself with all his ardor and all his energy to the schemes financial in character which week after week crowded upon both Houses. The problems, the plans, the questions, the interests concerned, preyed upon him, absorbed his whole mind and attention, and became the themes upon which he labored by day and by night. After a few months his health was undermined by his exertions and the excitement which ensued; and he sank and died.

Of the lessons which this event teaches, I forbear to speak. It would not be proper, however, for me to omit to state that Mr. MELLISH was a painstaking, conscientious, industrious man, enjoying the warm regard of those who knew him, and he was known by many; and I must say too that his death and the manner of it carry deep distress to a large circle.

The nature of the resolutions sent us by the House suggests as the most appropriate notice to be taken of the event a resolution by the Senate which I have drawn up; it now lies upon the table, and I offer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York offers a resolution which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. DAVID B. MELLISH, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of New York; and that it will attend the funeral ceremony in the Hall of the House of Representatives to-morrow at four o'clock.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect for the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolutions were agreed to nem. con., and the Senate (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) adjourned.

Mr. DAWES. Under the ruling of the Chair on Saturday I desire unanimous consent that this bill be ordered to be printed and considered in the House under the five-minute rule to-morrow when business from the Committee on Ways and Means exclusively will be in order.

CURRENCY AND FREE BANKING.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am instructed by the Committee on Banking and Currency, under the authority given to the committee to report at any time, to report back the bill (H. R. No. 1572) to amend the several acts providing a national currency and to establish free banking, and for other purposes, with an amendment by the Senate; and I am instructed to recommend that the Senate amendment be concurred in, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and upon that I call the previous question.

I ask that the substitute of the committee be read, and in connection with the reading of it I will state for the information of gentlemen——

Mr. GIDDINGS. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has the right to debate.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to state for the information of the House that the substitute is Printer's No. 3540, and that it is accompanied by the Report No. 600.

The committee's substitute for the Senate amendment to the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864, shall be hereafter known as "the national-bank act."

SEC. 2. That section 31 of "the national-bank act" be so amended that the several associations therein provided for shall not hereafter be required to keep on hand any amount of money whatever by reason of the amount of their respective circulations; but the moneys required by said section to be kept at all times on hand shall be determined by the amount of deposits in all respects as provided for in the said section.

SEC. 3. That section 22 of the said act, and the several amendments thereto, so far as they restrict the amount of notes for circulation under said acts, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and the proviso in the first section of the act approved July 12, 1870, entitled "An act to provide for the redemption of the 3 per cent. temporary-loan certificates, and for an increase of national-bank notes," prohibiting to banks hereafter organized a circulation over $500,000; and the proviso in the third section of said act limiting the circulation of banks authorized to issue notes redeemable in gold coin to $1,000,000; and section 6 of said act, relating to the redistribution of twenty-five millions of circulating notes, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; that every association hereafter organized shall be subject to and be governed by the rules, restrictions, and limitations, and possess the rights, privileges, and franchises, now or hereafter to be prescribed by law as to national banking associations, with the same power to amend, alter, and repeal provided by "the national-bank act."

SEC. 4. That every association organized or to be organized under the provisions of the said act, and of the several acts in amendment thereof, shall at all times keep and have on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, in lawful money of the United States, a sum equal to 5 per cent. of its circulation, to be held and used for the redemption of such circulation; and when the circulating notes of any such associations, assorted or unassorted, shall be presented for redemption, in sums of $1,000, or any multiple thereof, to the Treasurer of the United States, the same shall be redeemed in United States notes. All notes so redeemed shall be charged by the Treasurer of the United States to the respective associations issuing the same, and he shall notify them severally on the 1st day of each month, or oftener, at his discretion, of the amount of such redemptions; whereupon each association so notified shall forthwith deposit with the Treasurer of the United States a sum in United States notes equal to the amount of its circulating notes so redeemed. And all notes of national banks worn, defaced, mutilated, or otherwise unfit for circulation, shall, when received by any assistant treasurer or at any designated depository of the United States, be forwarded to the Treasurer of the United States for redemption as provided herein. And when such redemptions have been so reimbursed, the circulating notes so redeemed shall be forwarded to the respective associations by whom they were issued; but if such notes are worn, mutilated, defaced, or rendered otherwise unfit for use, they shall be forwarded to the Comptroller of the Currency and destroyed and replaced as now provided by law: Provided, That each of said associations shall reimburse to the Treasury the charges for transportation and the costs for assorting such notes; and the associations hereafter organized shall also severally reimburse to the Treasury the cost of engraving such plates as shall be ordered by each association respectively; and the amount assessed upon each association shall be in proportion to the circulation redeemed, and be charged to the fund on deposit with the Treasurer.

SEC. 5. That any association organized under this act, or any of the acts of which this is an amendment, desiring to withdraw its circulating notes, in whole or in part, may, upon the deposit of lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States in sums of not less than $9,000, take up the bonds which said association has on deposit with the Treasurer for the security of such circulating notes; which bonds shall be assigned to the bank in the manner specified in the nineteenth section of "the national-bank act;" and the outstanding notes of said association, to an amount equal to the legal-tender notes deposited, shall be redeemed at the Treasury of the United States, and destroyed as now provided by law: Provided, That the amount of the bonds on deposit for circulation shall not be reduced below $30,000.

SEC. 6. That the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, cause the charter numbers of the association to be printed upon all national-bank notes which may be hereafter issued by him.

SEC. 7. That the entire amount of United States notes outstanding and in circulation at one time shall not exceed the sum of $382,000,000; and within thirty days after circulating notes to the amount of $1,000,000 shall, from time to time, be issued to national-banking associations under this act, in excess of the highest outstanding volume thereof at any time prior to such issue, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to retire an amount of United States notes equal to 40 per cent. of the circulating notes so issued, which shall be in reduction of the maximum amount of $382,000,000 fixed by this section; and such reduction shall continue until the maximum amount of the United States notes outstanding shall be $300,000,000; and the United States notes so retired shall be canceled and carried to the account of the sinking fund provided for by the second clause of section 5 of the act approved on the 25th of February, 1862, entitled "An act to authorize the issue of United States notes, and for the redemption and funding thereof, and for funding the floating debt of the United States," and shall constitute a portion of said sinking fund.

SEC. 8. That on and after the 1st day of July, 1878, any holder of United States notes to the amount of fifty dollars, or any multiple thereof, may present them for payment at the office of the Treasurer of the United States, or at the office of the assistant treasurer at the city of New York; and thereupon he shall be entitled to receive, at his option, from the Secretary of the Treasury, in exchange of said notes, an equal amount of either class of the coupon or registered bonds of the United States provided for in the first section of the act approved on the 14th day of July, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and the act amendatory thereof, approved the 20th day of January, 1871: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Treasury, in lieu of such bonds, may redeem said notes in the gold coin of the United States. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall reissue the United States notes so received, or, if they are canceled, shall issue United States notes to the same amount, either to purchase or redeem the public debt at par in coin, or to meet the current payments for the public service.

SEC. 9. That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize any increase of the principal or interest of the public debt of the United States.

Mr. BECK. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. BECK. I do not ask him to yield to me; I believe I have the right to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to say that I make the demand for the previous question under the instructions of the Committee on Banking and Currency, whose organ I am.

Mr. BECK. My parliamentary inquiry is this: whether the bill is now being reported as the regular order under the right to report at any time?

The SPEAKER. It is.

PAYMENT OF CUSTOMS-DUTIES IN LEGAL TENDERS, ETC.

Mr. BECK. Then I move that the rules be suspended for the purpose of putting upon its passage the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk

Mr. MAYNARD. Can I be taken off the floor in this manner?

The SPEAKER. A motion to suspend the rules would take precedence on Monday; but the Chair would immediately recognize the gentleman from Tennessee so that he might have an opportunity of testing the question whether the House will allow his committee to report the bill to-day.

Mr. MAYNARD. I make the motion to suspend the rules now.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] takes precedence.

The Clerk read the title of the bill offered by Mr. BECK, as follows: "A bill authorizing the payment of one-third of all duties on imports in legal-tender or national-bank notes instead of gold."

The bill, which was read, provides that hereafter one-third of all duties on imports may be paid in legal-tender or national-bank notes instead of in gold as now required by law.

Mr. BECK. I move that the rules be suspended so as to bring that bill before the House for consideration at the present time.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. If this bill is brought before the House for consideration, will not the gentleman from Tennessee have a bill before the House for consideration at the same time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee, by consent as the Chair supposed, was reporting the bill from the Committee on Banking and Currency under the right to report at any time; but that is not of as high privilege as a motion to suspend the rules on Monday. When the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky shall be disposed of, if any time is left, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee to move to suspend the rules so that he may report his bill from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. DAWES. I understand that the bill which I hold in my hand has been brought before the House by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The right of the gentleman from Tennessee to report that bill is not so high on Monday as is a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. DAWES. I am aware of that, but the motion of the gentleman to suspend the rules only has the effect to bring the bill before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. That is the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky in regard to his bill.

Mr. DAWES. Then will there not be two bills before the House at the same time?

The SPEAKER. Strictly speaking the House could vote to suspend the rules upon either bill. It is for the House to judge which bill they will consider, that of the Committee on Banking and Currency or that of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Will the Chair state what the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is?

The SPEAKER. It is that the rules be suspended and the bill which he offered, and which has been read, be brought before the House for consideration.

Mr. ELDREDGE. For consideration, when?

Mr. BECK. At this time.

The question was taken on seconding the motion of Mr. BECK; and on a division there were—ayes 68, noes 92.

Mr. BECK. I call for tellers on my motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BECK and Mr. MAYNARD were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 109.

So the motion to suspend the rules was not seconded.

CURRENCY AND FREE BANKING.

Mr. MAYNARD. I now move to suspend the rules so as to enable me on behalf of the Committee on Banking and Currency to exercise the right of the committee to report at any time an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1572) to amend the several acts providing a national currency and to establish free banking, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. That will leave the report subject to the rules of the House.

The question was taken upon seconding the motion to suspend the rules, and it was seconded.

The question recurred upon suspending the rules so as to enable the Committee on Banking and Currency to submit their report; and being taken, there were—ayes 110, noes 63.

Before the result of the vote was announced Mr. CESSNA called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BECK and Mr. MAYNARD were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 131, noes 76.

Mr. CESSNA. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, forty-five members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 131, nays 101, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albright, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Barry, Biery, Bradley, Bromberg, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Cason, Cessna, Clements, Stephen A. So the motion to suspend the rules was not agreed to, two-thirds not voting in the affirmative.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to say that as I will be liable to be taken off the floor if I report this bill to-day I will not do so, but will endeavor to report it to-morrow after the reading of the Journal. I now ask that the bill as it went from the House to the Senate be printed, together with the Senate amendments and the amendments proposed by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

No objection being made, it was so ordered.

CIVIL RIGHTS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to ask unanimous consent——

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to move that the House now resume the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I believe I have the floor. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 1, supplemental to an act entitled "An act to protect the citizens of the United States in their civil rights, and to furnish the means for their vindication," passed April 9, 1866, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, to be reported upon as the bill of the House now before that committee.

Mr. SPEER. Does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for that purpose.

Mr. SPEER. I object.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Then I move that the rules be so suspended as to take up the bill and refer it with that privilege to the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. Have not the Committee on the Judiciary the right to make reports on Wednesday next?

The SPEAKER. They have.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We now have the right to report the House bill on this subject at any time. What I ask is that the Senate bill on the same subject be referred to the committee with the same right. I move to suspend the rules for that purpose.

Mr. BECK. I call for tellers on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, and Mr. BECK were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 111, noes 75.

So the motion was seconded.

The question was upon suspending the rules and making the order indicated.

Mr. RANDALL. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 152, nays 85, not voting 52; as follows:

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to suspend the rules was agreed to, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the resolution was accordingly adopted.

DEATH OF HON. DAVID B. MELLISH.

Mr. TREMAIN. Mr. Speaker, the mournful duty devolves upon me of announcing to this House the death of Hon. DAVID B. MELLISH, a Representative in Congress from the ninth district of the State of New York, who died in this city on Saturday last, and to request that the usual and proper action may be taken with reference to this event. The time is so recent since we were accustomed to see our deceased colleague in his seat upon the floor of the House, that we find it difficult to realize the fact that we shall never again see him moving in our midst, and that the place which he recently filled will know him no more forever!

My acquaintance with Mr. MELLISH was so recent, never having known him prior to the assembling of the Forty-third Congress, that I do not consider myself competent, even if the occasion were appropriate, to pronounce a formal eulogy upon his life and character. It affords me, however, pleasure to attest that no member of the House was more regular in his attendance here or more earnest and devoted in the discharge of his official duties. He was a laborious student; and we know from the speeches prepared by him during this session, and from information received from other sources, that he gave all his time, and dedicated all his mental powers to the consideration of the important financial and other measures for the relief of the country which were pending before Congress.

Indeed, we have too much reason to apprehend that his excessive mental anxiety arising from the condition of the country, united with severe intellectual labors in the discharge of what he regarded as his official duty, contributed to derange his nervous system and finally to produce his untimely death. We who were his colleagues in the House can now recall eccentricities of conduct on his part during the later period of his service which indicated the presence of a mental malady springing from an overworked condition.

This is the second occasion during this present session that death has entered the Halls of Congress and striken down a representative of the people while at his post of duty. In the first case the victim was a Senator of Massachusetts, whose name was known and honored throughout the world; who had reached the highest position in the temple of fame; who was gathered to his fathers after a long and honorable career in the service of his country; and whose death was mourned, not only by the cultured, the learned, and the exalted citizens of the country, but also by millions of the humble and the lowly, who felt that they had lost their best earthly friend. In this case the victim was also a native of Massachusetts, who had become a citizen of New York, and had been chosen by the people of his adopted city to represent them in the national Legislature. He was taken at the commencement of his official life, while in the prime of his usefulness and vigor, full of ambition and hopes, and struggling to obtain an honorable name among the statesmen of his country. The lessons which these events are calculated to impress upon us are too obvious and too instructive to require comment from me.

I am certain that we shall all retain none other than the kindest recollections of our deceased colleague, of his gentleness, his devotion to duty, and his many virtues; and that our warmest sympathies will be extended to the bereaved widow and fatherless children who survive.

I submit the following resolutions:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five members be appointed by the Speaker of the House to take order for superintending the funeral of Hon. DAVID B. MELLISH, late a member of this body, which will take place to-morrow, (Tuesday,) at four o'clock p. m., and that the House will attend the same.

Resolved, As a further mark of respect entertained by the House for the memory of Hon. DAVID B. MELLISH, that his remains be removed to Auburn, Massachusetts, in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and attended by the said committee, who shall have full power to carry this resolution into effect.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these proceedings to the Senate, and invite the Senate to attend the funeral ceremony in the Hall of the House of Representatives, to-morrow, at four o'clock.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WOOD. Death always presents itself in melancholy aspects. It is at no time welcome, however relieved of attendant horrors, or however anticipated by preparation. Whether in the discharge of a high and noble duty on the field of battle, or on the bed of protracted illness, assuaged by kindness and the assurances of a peaceful hereafter, it brings pain to the dying and anguish to the living.

But when it comes in the form of that dark and mysterious power which no man can understand and no man combat—when the physical and the mental attributes both alike fall beneath its shadow and lay prostrate before its presence—it excites our deepest interest, and commands our awful reverence. It was to such a power that our deceased brother and associate yielded up his life. He fell before the great enemy of us all—dethroned of reason, unable to resist. Thus the circumstances of his illness and demise present unusual and melancholy features; it comes to us both as an admonition and an affliction. It forces the subject upon our presence in the midst of the discharge of the high duties imposed upon us in a way that compels us to pause to consider the obligations to a higher authority than the state; to a more august and exacting master than our own ambitions or personal responsibilities to the people we represent. But yesterday he sat in our midst. In yonder vacant chair he was to be observed an attentive and industrious member. It was there he commenced his career as a public man; a career which, though brief, has been more productive of personal sacrifices than has ever fallen to any other member of this or any other deliberative body within my recollection.

May his soul rest in peace, and his example of gentleness and kindness of heart be followed by others; and may the lesson taught us in his sudden separation from our councils impress us with the folly and wickedness of personal controversy, and the obligation which rests upon us of "charity and good will to all men."

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, when a little more than a fortnight ago I obtained leave of the House to absent myself from its sessions and seek for a season, needed repose in the quiet of my home Mr. MELLISH, whose death we mourn, was occupying his seat and had given no premonition that his career was to end so soon and so sadly. In the seclusion of my chamber I read with surprise the announcement of the manner in which he had been attacked, and watched from day to day the telegraphic accounts of the progress of his disease. On Sunday I learned that he was no more to mingle with us in our councils here.

My acquaintance with Mr. MELLISH began with the organization of this House. I soon marked him as a man of industry and of great simplicity of character and manner. Common interest in some of the questions before the House brought him into probably as intimate connection with me as with any other gentleman on this floor who is not a member of the committee upon which he served, and I found in him characteristics that are admirable in any sphere of life.

He was a laborious man. His brief biography in the Congressional Directory tells us that on finishing his academic course he went as a teacher from his native Massachusetts into my native State, Pennsylvania, and thence in the same capacity to Maryland. He then found employment in New York in the laborious employment of a phonographic reporter for one of the leading journals. He had been bred in a printing office—that of the Worcester Spy—which has graduated so many Representatives from different States to this Hall. At the end of what seems to have been an honorable career in his connection with the Tribune he found public employment as a phonographer, and subsequently in another position in connection with the customs of New York—a humble position, it was yet honorable. Thence he came here, and the characteristics he disclosed in this new and enlarged sphere proved how faithful and true had been his industry. I have rarely or never met so industrious a collater of opinion and fact, and I have rarely met one who presented the opinions and facts he had gathered with such singular fairness.

Now that he has gone from our midst it may be a study to some of us to turn to his speeches—very voluminous—some of them marred by defects of taste, but all illustrating a wonderful amount of labor and a fairness which was absolute in stating opinions whether they made for or against his own conclusions.

His career in his humble way had been an eventful one. The circumstances of his death proved it had been an honorable one. By accident during last week I saw a letter from him, written some three or four weeks ago, manifesting a desire to obtain, at least for temporary use, certain scarce volumes and deploring, in touching terms, the fact that though his life had been laborious it had not earned him the means wherewith to purchase admission to such libraries as would insure him general access to the books he desired to consult. The story I have heard since my return confirms that fact, and proves that while he had gathered knowledge and sought spheres of usefulness, he had not managed to gather about him the good things of this world.

As I remember him, moving round so quietly among us, it seems to me impossible that during my absence he should have passed hence forever; and brief as my acquaintance has been with him there have been instances in connection with him and there was that in the character he disclosed which will make me remember him as long as I shall remember those with whom I have had longer and more intimate acquaintance on this floor. Mr. MELLISH was in every sense a worthy man.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay a melancholy tribute of respect to the memory of a departed friend. I do so in obedience to the impulses of affection and the demands of merit. An honored member of this House has been stricken down in the early years of matured manhood, and in the midst of arduous labors and of usefulness. Again we are admonished that official position can give no immunity against the fell destroyer, Death. The lesson of the hour teaches the uncertainty of life, and reminds us that we should ever be ready for the summons to that world—

> ——from whose bourn
> No traveler returns.

I first made the acquaintance of Hon. DAVID B. MELLISH at the opening of this session of Congress. He and I were associated together as members of the same Committee on War Claims, and I had many opportunities to read his character and learn his qualities of head and heart. Nature had endowed him with an active, ardent temperament, and he entered into the performance of every public duty with an earnest zeal rarely excelled. The unremitting labor which he gave to his public duties were too great for his physical powers of endurance, and doubtless hastened if it did not originate the causes which brought his untimely demise. His vigorous and cultivated mind investigated and grappled with many public questions, and he has left in the published record of the congressional proceedings some of the results of his industrious researches.

In the labors of the committee-room he was no less earnest, careful, faithful, and devoted than in the performance of those duties with which the members of the House and the public are more familiar.

Here, as elsewhere, he exhibited a sincere respect for the opinions of others and a tender regard for their feelings. I think I venture on no uncertain or doubtful ground when I express the unequivocal opinion that in all that he said and did he was actuated by an honest purpose and a conscientious, upright sense of duty. He rests from his labors. And now we mingle the grateful memory of his virtues in public and private life with condolence for those who, more closely allied to him by ties of kindred, are called by a dispensation of Providence to mourn his sudden decease.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, I have been asked by the delegation from the State of New York to say a few words on this occasion, I suppose because our deceased associate was a native of the district which I represent and his kindred and friends are my near neighbors and constituents. But I cannot add anything to the impressive lesson of the occasion.

Mr. MELLISH was born in the town of Oxford, Massachusetts, in the year 1831. That community is perhaps one of the best types of New England character. The town was settled by a company of French Huguenots driven out from France after the revocation of the edict of Nantes, and the blood of the French Protestants, mingled with that of the Puritans, has descended to many of that people to the present day.

The character of the young man and of the town where he was born—as is the case with many of our best New England citizens and New England communities—was largely shaped by the influence of a Congregational clergyman who for many years ministered to the people there, and at whose church Mr. MELLISH and his parents and family were attendants. There could be traced in his character many qualities which came from the instruction which he must thus have received in early life.

Afterward he learned the trade of a printer in the office of the Worcester Spy, a paper founded by the celebrated Isaiah Thomas, in 1770, at Boston; driven from Boston at the breaking out of the revolutionary war by the British occupation, and from that day to the present famous throughout the entire country as a constant and influential advocate of civil liberty.

During Mr. MELLISH'S term of service in that office he must have had occasion to see and to know intimately that wisest of the sons of Massachusetts of the present generation, a man who for intellectual force, for enthusiastic love of liberty, has had no superior and scarcely an equal, Hon. Charles Allen, whose office was in the same building, and whose advice and friendship were much prized by the conductors of the paper. Trained in such a school, and under the influence of such examples, Mr. MELLISH could hardly do otherwise than acquire and carry into life the qualities which were in him so conspicuous.

The people of the district of the State of New York which he represented turned to Mr. MELLISH not as the representative of the prevalent political opinion of that district, but as a person for whose honesty, for whose kindness of heart, for whose popular qualities they entertained such respect that they were willing to send him to represent them in this House. His life since he took his seat here is known to the rest of his associates as it is to me. Industry, fidelity, honesty, plainness, and simplicity of life, kindness of heart, contentment with honorable poverty—certainly the most ambitious of us might well be willing at the close of life to exchange the most exalted objects of human ambition for the possession of such qualities and such a character.

His public career was brief. Yet that life was surely long enough for him which had ripened and matured such a fruitage. He was in mercy spared the consciousness of his danger. But, if he could have looked with unimpaired intellect into the face of the death he was about to meet, I am sure he could have truly said in the language of one of the great lights of the Catholic church:

Non ita vixi ut me vixisse pudeat, nec mori timeo quia bonum habemus dominum.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, there is a double sadness in the announcement just made of the death of our colleague of New York, for his mind was gone before his life. It is a double death we deplore. God "put out the light, and then—put out the light." The immortal part—the reasoning faculty—that which distinguishes man, so express and admirable, the apprehension angelic, was quenched before the heart had ceased to beat or the pulse to throb.

My colleague's gentle life closed under a cloud almost as weird in its boding and gloom as that which enshrouded the Capitol to-day.

I had little personal knowledge of the deceased before we met here. His uniform gentleness, mixed with his strange reserve; his readiness when approached to meet and reciprocate cordially all approaches toward friendship; the sweetness of his domestic life and his studious habitudes, marked him among us as a man of no ordinary mold. His aptitude for peculiar employments—type-setting and phonography—requiring the nicest physical and mental tension and attention to learn and practice, and to which he added the most conscientious, honest, and vigilant discharge of duty here, give to his character an individuality which does not often mark men in public or private life.

Doubtless, his sense of duty, and studious habits, contributed to that fatal malady which destroyed his reason and life. His death is an additional proof and warning that in all intellectual labor it is of the first consequence for advance in knowledge and learning that the mind, like the body, should be nourished with various kinds of food; that it is as indispensable to the bodily as to the spiritual health, to the sanity of the mind as well as to the body.

In the effort to endear his name to his constituents and gratify a laudable ambition his mind was fractured and his body fell. Yet who shall say, when he remembers what thin partitions divide wit from madness, who that knows under the harassing vicissitudes and trials of life how near we each and all may be to the terrible dethronement of reason, will not pause to reflect upon this singular career and end of my colleague? May we not commend his struggles in the line of honest duty as a pattern to imitate, while we avoid that oversedulous attention in one line of thought which invariably destroys? Especially should we, his companions here, send to his bereaved wife and family our sorrowing sympathy for their irreparable loss.

I am happy to-day, Mr. Speaker, in only one regard: the privilege of laying a May rose upon his bier.

The question being taken on the resolutions, they were adopted unanimously.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as the committee of five members directed to take order for superintending the funeral, Mr. SMART of New York, Mr. COX of New York, Mr. CLEMENTS of Illinois, Mr. HARRIS of Massachusetts, and Mr. MAGEE of Pennsylvania.

And, in accordance with the resolutions, (at three o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted by the workingmen of the city of Saint Paul, Minnesota, in favor of general legislation by Congress and certain amendments to the Constitution for the promotion of the industrial interests of the country; which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

THE CONGRESSIONAL PRINTER.

Mr. HOWE. I have received a communication to which I referred yesterday signed by F. & J. Rives & George A. Bailey, touching the official conduct of the Congressional Printer. I submit it to the Senate and move that it be referred to the Committee on Printing, and that the Committee on Printing be directed to investigate the truth of the charges made in this communication, and that for that purpose they have authority to send for persons and papers and to employ a short-hand reporter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin presents certain papers and moves that they be referred to the Committee on Printing, with the powers he has stated.

Mr. HOWE. As I take the floor for this purpose, I want to call the attention of the Senate to another misfortune that has overtaken me. Yesterday I tried to correct in the mind of the Senate, and I was in hopes to correct to some extent in the public mind a misapprehension growing out of a communication in the papers. I therefore read what Messrs. Rives & Bailey had communicated to the Chronicle yesterday, and I tried to contradict the material points in that communication. I have not looked at the record made up against me by those readiest of all writers who sit before me and in front of the Secretary's desk, and therefore what I actually did say I do not know; but I find in the Chronicle this morning that I am reported to have—

Called attention to a letter addressed to him by Messrs. Rives & Bailey, of the Globe, making serious charges against Mr. Clapp, the Congressional Printer, and stating that the Joint Committee on Printing had been made acquainted with these charges and the facts to sustain them, but had delayed to take action thereon.

Now, Mr. President, all I can venture to assert is that I did not mean to say anything like that. If I had not seen it in the newspapers I would not have believed that I did say anything like that; and if any correction should appear in the newspapers to-morrow morning as having been made by me, I want it understood by the Senate that I reserve the right to correct it the morning after. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does the Senator from Wisconsin propose to send this matter to a joint committee?

Mr. HOWE. No, sir; a committee of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPENCER. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom were referred a petition of citizens of the District, praying an appropriation for the construction of a bridge across the Anacostia or Eastern Branch of the Potomac River at or near the site of the present navy-yard bridge; and the bill (S. No. 758) to authorize and provide for the construction of a substantial iron and masonry bridge and of a causeway across the Anacostia or Eastern Branch of the Potomac River at or near the site of the present navy-yard bridge, have instructed me to ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the petition, and to report the bill with an amendment. I ask the immediate consideration of the bill. There is necessity for it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have so many bills on the Calendar that have been reported for a great many days, some of which I feel bound to reach, if I can, for the sake of the committees from whom they are reported, that I think we ought to take up those already reported first.

Mr. SPENCER. I appeal to the Senator from Vermont. There is a necessity for the construction of this bridge. The bill will take very little time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will not take any time to reach the bills on the Calendar that have been reported, if we can only begin on them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects; and the bill will go on the Calendar.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2545) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 775) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge over the Willamette River, at Portland, in the State of Oregon, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of George W. Hume, of Astoria, Oregon, praying the passage of an act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to direct the issue of an American register to the French brig Sidi, of Havre, recently wrecked at the mouth of the Columbia River, reported a bill (S. No. 855) authorizing an American register for the French brig Sidi, and a change of the name of said brig to that of Sea Waif; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2704) for the relief of Selden Connor, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1051) for the honorable discharge from their several positions in the Army of Captain J. Horace McGuire, First Lieutenant Henry R. Gardner, Second Lieutenant William D. McGuire, and Second Lieutenant William C. Reddy, all late of the Tenth Regiment United States Colored Artillery, (heavy,) and directing their honorable muster out of the service of the United States as of the date of their dismissal, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. COOPER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported a bill (S. No. 856) to incorporate the Oxygen Gas Company; which was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the motion to print the message of the President of the United States, transmitting a letter from the chairman of the civil-service commission in response to the resolution of the Senate of the 18th instant requesting "the answer in full received by the civil-service commission in reply to their circular addressed to the various heads of Departments and Bureaus requesting a report as to the operation and effect of the civil-service rules in the several Departments and offices," reported in favor of the motion; and it was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a motion to print the message of the President of the United States, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 15th instant, all papers and correspondence relating to the troubles in the State of Arkansas not heretofore communicated to either House of Congress, reported in favor of the motion; and it was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. The same committee, to whom was recommitted a report with the draught of a bill, have instructed me to report a bill to provide for the sale of extra copies of public documents and for the distribution of the regular official editions thereof.

The bill (S. No. 857) to provide for the sale of extra copies of public documents and for the distribution of the regular official editions thereof was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. ANTHONY. I shall ask in the course of a week to have that bill taken up and disposed of.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask that the bill be read.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is very long.

Mr. CAMERON. Then never mind.

PONTON BRIDGES ON MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2538) to legalize and establish a ponton railway bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien, have had the same under consideration, and have instructed me to report it back with amendments and to recommend its passage.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to consider that bill. It will take but a moment. It is almost impossible for me to be present continually on account of my committee duties.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The Committee on Commerce reported the bill with amendments.

The first amendment was in line 12 to strike out "two hundred and fifty," and to insert "three hundred and ninety-six;" and in line 13 to strike out "three hundred and twenty" and insert "four hundred and eight;" and to change the word "draw" to "draws;" so as to make the clause read:

Provided, That the said John Lawler and the said Prairie du Chien and McGregor Railway Company shall keep up and maintain a suitable ponton draw of not less than three hundred and ninety-six feet in length in the eastern channel and one not less than four hundred and eight feet in length in the principal or western channel of said river, and that said draws shall be opened promptly, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That the bridge heretofore authorized to be erected across the Mississippi River at or near Clinton, Iowa, by section 1 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the town of Clinton, in the State of Iowa, and other bridges across said river, and to establish them as post-roads," approved April 1, 1872, may be constructed and maintained as a pile and ponton bridge, subject to the terms, conditions, and requirements contained in the foregoing sections of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to legalize and establish a ponton railway bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien, and to authorize the construction of a similar bridge at or near Clinton, Iowa.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 858) to provide for the prepayment of postage on printed matter, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 859) for the relief of Rice Hughes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, it was Ordered, That the bill (H. R. No. 1760) to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

EASTERN BRANCH BRIDGE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand that during my temporary absence from the Senate the Senate has passed one or two bills immediately on the report of the committee, without thinking it best to go to the Calendar. I therefore wish to withdraw the objection that I made to the bill of the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. SPENCER,] because I do not wish it to stand in any worse attitude than the others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont withdraws the objection he made to the consideration of the bill reported by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know anything about the merits of the bill, but I think the Senator from Alabama ought to stand on an equal footing with others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill reported by the Senator from Alabama will be read.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should not like to consent to the bill of the Senator from Alabama being taken up without knowing something about it.

Mr. SPENCER. I believe that bill is now before the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The bill was read; and also the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to cause to be constructed across the Anacostia River, at or near the site of the present navy-yard bridge, in the District of Columbia, a substantial iron and masonry bridge and causeway; and the sum of $146,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction of such bridge: Provided, That the said Secretary shall construct a bridge upon such plan as shall cost no more than the amount herein appropriated. And provided also, That the said bridge shall be so constructed as not to interfere with the usual navigation above said bridge.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not want to object to the bill, but I want to know something about the necessity for this bridge. I know nothing personally about its necessity.

Mr. SPENCER. I will state for the information of the Senator from Delaware and others, that the present bridge across the Anacostia River is in a dangerous condition. Engineers say it is dangerous to cross on it at all at the present time. Last year we appropriated some $15,000 to make the bridge last until the present time. There is a letter with the papers from General Babcock, which states that there is an absolute necessity that a new bridge should be built immediately. There are two forts, a Government magazine, and the Government Insane Asylum on the other side of the river.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that that bill be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

QUARTERMASTER'S CORPS.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senate to allow me to call up and have disposed of now a bill which was being debated the other day when the morning hour concluded. It is House bill No. 3166. I will say to the Senate that I think it will take but a moment, because an amendment has been agreed upon which I am sure will be satisfactory to all persons.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3166) to correct the date of commission of certain officers of the Army, the pending question being on the amendments of the Committee on Military Affairs to the preamble of the bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. Now I have agreed to offer the following, which has been agreed on unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs, as a proviso:

Provided, That all appointments not conflicting herewith in the Quartermaster's corps made by the President, and confirmed by the Senate under the act of July 28, 1866, entitled "An act to increase and fix the military peace establishment of the United States," with amendments thereto, are hereby confirmed and declared to be lawful and valid as they stand on the list, and shall be hereby deemed to be such in the assignment of rank and the making of promotions.

That legalizes what has been done, and leaves the corps standing as it does now, with the exception of the particular officer covered by this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I move to strike out the preamble to that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion can be made when the bill is reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I now move to strike out the preamble to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, it was Ordered, That during the residue of the present session the Committee on Finance have leave to sit during the sittings of the Senate.

CONTRACTORS FOR WAR VESSELS.

Mr. CRAGIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 141) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and machinery.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CRAGIN. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the word "parties," in the tenth line, and inserting the following:

Provided, however, That the investigation of said claims shall be upon the following basis: The said court shall ascertain the additional cost which was necessarily incurred by said contractors for the building of said vessels of war and in the construction of steam machinery, in the completion of the same by reason of any changes or alterations in the plans and specifications required, and delays in the prosecution of the work, which were not provided for in the original contract; but no allowance for any advance in the price of labor or material shall be considered unless such advance occurred during the prolonged term for completing the work rendered necessary by the delay resulting from the action of the Government, and then only when such advance could not have been avoided by the exercise of ordinary prudence and diligence on the part of the contractors: And provided further, That the compensation fixed by the contracts between the contractors and the Government for specific alterations shall be conclusive as to the compensation to be made therefor: And provided further, That all moneys paid to said contractors by the Government, over and above the original contract price for the building of said vessels and the construction of said machinery shall be deducted from any amounts allowed by said court by reason of the matters hereinbefore stated; and if the amounts so to be deducted in any case shall exceed the amount allowed by said court, judgment shall be entered for the excess against such claimant in favor of the United States; and said court is directed to certify such judgment and record to the circuit court of the circuit where such claimant resides, and said circuit court is hereby vested with authority to issue execution and to enforce its collection the same as if said judgment had originally been rendered therein: And provided further, That if any of such changes caused less work and expense to the contractors than the original plans and specifications, a corresponding reduction shall be made from the contract price, and the amount thereof be deducted from any allowance to be made by said court to said claimants: And provided further, That all claims under the provisions of this act shall be presented within one year from the passage thereof and not afterward; and the claimants in their petitions shall stipulate and agree to accept and abide by all the provisions of this act.

Mr. BOREMAN. I should like to have the first part of the bill, the portion not to be stricken out, read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read that portion of the bill which will remain if this amendment should be agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the claims for building vessels of war and constructing steam-machinery, referred to and embraced in the act entitled "An act for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam-machinery," approved March 2, 1867, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, which is hereby vested with authority and jurisdiction to hear and determine the respective claims of the several parties.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. CRAGIN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. RAMSEY and Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3168) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works for rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 2545) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SAINT CROIX AND BAYFIELD RAILROAD.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 654.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 654) to extend the time for the completion of a railroad from the Saint Croix River or Lake, between townships 25 and 31, to the west end of Lake Superior and to Bayfield, in the State of Wisconsin.

The bill proposes to extend the time for the completion of the railroad from the Saint Croix River or Lake, between sections 25 and 31, to the west end of Lake Superior and to Bayfield, in the State of Wisconsin, six years from its passage.

The Committee on Public Lands reported the bill with an amendment, to strike out "six" and insert "five," before "years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MILITARY TELEGRAPH LINE IN TEXAS.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to take up House bill No. 1590, being a bill for the better protection of the frontier of Texas. It will take but a moment, and I hope the Senate will consider the bill at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (H. R. No. 1590) to provide for the better protection of the frontier settlements of Texas against Indian and Mexican depredations. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of War to construct and operate a line of telegraph, beginning at or near the city of Denison, in Grayson County, Texas; thence by the nearest practicable route to Fort Sill, Indian Territory; thence to Fort Richardson, Texas; thence along the northern frontier-line of settlements to Forts Griffin and Concho; thence to the Pecos River, at or near the mouth of Toyah Creek; thence to Fort Clarke, on Las Moras Creek; thence to Fort Duncan, on the Rio Grande; thence down the Rio Grande, via Fort McIntosh and Ringgold Barracks, to Brownsville, so as to connect the military posts which are now, or may hereafter be, established on the line with the military headquarters of the district; and appropriates $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to hear some statement about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object to its present consideration, or not?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not like to object if it is not likely to lead to discussion.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I hope the Senator will interpose no objection. It is a matter of some importance.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What is it?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. It is an appropriation of $100,000 to construct a telegraph line connecting the military posts on the western frontier of Texas. It is considered that it will increase the efficiency of the Army.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I remember about it. It was up here last year. I withdraw any objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CAMERON. I cannot see how they will use $100,000 in making a telegraph line along there. I move that the sum be reduced to $50,000.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. As the bill was reported in the House of Representatives, as I understand, from the Committee on Military Affairs, $200,000 was considered necessary by the officers of the Government; but it was cut down to $100,000, because it was supposed the Army could do the work. One hundred thousand dollars was supposed to be sufficient to purchase the material, and as I understand the Secretary of War proposes to build the line by the labor of the troops.

Mr. INGALLS. How long is the line?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. It will be more than a thousand miles, twelve hundred I should think, probably fifteen hundred; it is zigzag. If the appropriation will purchase the material I shall be very well satisfied, and the Army will do the work. I think myself that this is a very meagre appropriation for the work to be done.

Mr. CAMERON. I withdraw my motion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRE-EMPTORS ON MAKAH RESERVATION.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask consent to call up the bill (H. R. No. 2999) for the relief of Henry A. Webster, V. B. McCollum, and A. Colby, of Washington Territory, pre-emptors on the Makah Indian reservation. I am sure it will take but a moment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which directs the Secretary of the Interior to examine and consider the claims of Henry A. Webster, V. B. McCollum, and A. Colby, for valuable improvements taken possession of and used by the United States in enlarging the Makah Indian reservation on the Pacific coast and Straits of Fuca, in Washington Territory, by executive order of the President, dated October 21, 1873, and to adjust and settle the same on principles of equity, in view of the appraisement made by authority of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated April 25, 1873, not to exceed the sum of $23,608.34.

Mr. MORRILL, Maine. There ought to be some statement about that bill.

Mr. SCOTT. From some little experience about the amount of claims made for entries of Indian reservations in that region, I should like to hear from the chairman of the committee that reported the bill some explanation in reference to it.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I will simply state that a reservation was set aside for these Indians, but when they were placed upon it it was found entirely barren, and there was no possibility of sustaining them on the reservation. The President, by authority invested in him, added to the reservation a small portion of territory which was tillable, and on which they could do something toward sustaining themselves. Upon that addition to the reservation there had been some improvements. The improvements were made principally by these three men. Commissioners were appointed to appraise the improvements which had been made. One of them, if I remember aright, was appointed by the owners of the property and another by the Secretary of the Interior, and they selected the third. That appraisement has been made, and submitted to the Secretary of the Interior and approved by him. The bill has been approved also by the House of Representatives, and according to the examination which I have been able to give it, I have no doubt that it is a just and equitable claim. I have no doubt that the territory which was added was essential to the interests of the Indians, and that this is as fair an amount as we can reach to meet the justice of the case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 28.

Mr. PRATT. Before the bill is read, I wish to ask unanimous consent that Saturday afternoon, after three o'clock, may be set aside for the consideration of bills, general and special, emanating from the Committee on Pensions. There are between thirty and forty of them on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks that, by unanimous consent, it shall be agreed that on Saturday next, after three o'clock, the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PATTERSON. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that Saturday is Decoration Day, and we shall not be likely to be in session then.

Mr. PRATT. I forgot that. I withdraw the motion, then, and suggest Friday.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not wish to make an objection, but I wish to call to the recollection of the Senator from Indiana a general arrangement, I believe on all hands, that no special orders shall be made to the detriment of the appropriation bills. If he desires so small a fraction of a day as after three o'clock on Friday or on Saturday, I should hardly expect it would be such an interruption as those having charge of the appropriation bills would be disposed to interfere with. Still I should like to have the order made, if at all, subject to the general understanding that it is not to interfere with the appropriation bills.

Mr. PRATT. I have no objection to that.

Mr. RAMSEY. I suggest to the Senator whether he had not better make a motion more comprehensive, to proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the Calendar. His would fall under that class, and he would secure the passage of all of them, and interest the rest of us in staying with him to keep a quorum. Something ought to be done to dispose of the Calendar.

Mr. PRATT. I have one objection to that which I will frankly state. There is upon the Calendar a general bill enlarging greatly the scope of the act of 1871 giving pensions to the soldiers of the war of 1812. It is a bill in which the whole country is interested; that is to say all that portion of the country where there are surviving soldiers and widows of soldiers of that war. I am very much pressed on all hands to call up that bill. It will give rise to some debate. The private bills can be easily disposed of. There are reports in every case; and I presume there will be no objection to the private bills, and we can dispose of those in the course of half an hour, but this general bill will give rise to some debate; and that is the reason why I wish to have a part of a day assigned especially to the consideration of these bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to an understanding that on Friday next at three o'clock the Senate will proceed to the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Pensions, provided it does not interfere with any pending appropriation bill? The Chair hears no objection.

MACKINAC NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. Now I ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the bill I have referred to.

The Secretary read the bill (S. No. 28) to set apart a certain portion of the island of Mackinac, in the Straits of Mackinac, within the State of Michigan, as a national park, and the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SARGENT. Has the Senate agreed to the consideration of this bill at the present time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair heard no objection to its present consideration.

Mr. SARGENT. I think it is a bill that it will require more than one minute to consider.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. It has been before the country since the special session of the Senate of March, 1873, when the Secretary of War was invited to examine the case, and reported favorably. The Military Committee have reported in its favor and have reported an amendment which covers any objection that may be offered. The Government now holds two thousand acres out of six thousand on this island. The bill only gives the Military Department special charge of that land, that it shall be kept free from obstruction.

Mr. SARGENT. Bills of this character are the entering-wedge to subsequent appropriations annually made and swelling to a very large amount. The other day I had occasion to object—I dislike to do so because I dislike to interfere with other Senators who seem to be earnest in their measures—to a very large appropriation and other legislation concerning the Yellowstone Park.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. SARGENT. I wish to be heard on the bill of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I suggest to the Senator from California that the amendment proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs cuts off any expenditure on the part of the Government. There is no need of expense. It is only to take charge of the shrubbery. There are already drives throughout the grounds, and there is no necessity for any expenditure. The Government has a company of soldiers there. The Secretary of War and the General of the Army and the local officers have recommended it, and the Legislature of Michigan have also requested Congress that it should be set apart. I hope the Senator from California will not object.

Mr. SCOTT. This national-park business is getting to be a little larger probably than we are aware of. We had a few days ago a proposition to incorporate something like a national park at San Francisco, or at least to give San Francisco the privilege of making a park out of what is now a military reservation. This is a similar proposition, and I think it would be well that we group them together and see how much they are going to be before they are considered; and as the morning hour has expired, I am hardly making an objection to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the Chair calls up the unfinished business of yesterday.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3030) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1873 and 1874, and for other purposes.

Mr. SARGENT. On line 285, after the word "currency," I move to insert "for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the following amendment, to come in after line 287:

For paper, engraving, printing, express charges, and other expenses of making and issuing the national currency required to complete the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. By direction of the committee, I move to strike out in lines 568 and 569 "$37,907.48," and insert "$49,005.28," being an increase of $12,000 in the appropriation for incidental expenses of the Indian service in Oregon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator please explain that amendment?

Mr. SARGENT. This deficiency in the incidental expenses of the Indian service in Oregon arises from the fact that by a law of Congress a new reservation, called the Malheur reservation, was set aside for certain Indians in the State of Oregon, and the department was required to move the Indians to this reservation. This was accomplished before any appropriation was made for the purpose in the appropriation bill. An appropriation is now made for the support of that reservation; but between the time that appropriation became available and the time these Indians were put on the reservation this expenditure became necessary. That is the simple statement of the fact as I have it from the office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like the Senator to explain how it happens that the House did not provide $49,000 instead of $37,000. How did the House get $12,000, in round numbers, below what was the true deficiency?

Mr. SARGENT. The only reason that I know of is that this item of deficiency was not called to their attention. I presume that to be the case. I do not understand that they cut out this item, but simply that it was not submitted to them.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I am also instructed by the committee to move to insert after line 644 the following item:

For office of surveyor-general of Oregon: For clerks in his office for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1872, $600; and for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, $350.

These amounts, I am informed at the Land Office, were necessarily and honestly incurred, and that the clerks employed performed their duty to the satisfaction of the department. So far as these amounts are concerned, $600 for 1872 and $350 for 1863, in each case they are in excess of the appropriation made for that year. It seems, however, that the services were justly rendered and have been accepted by the Government, and as the amounts are small, the committee thought we had better appropriate for them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator whether the salaries of the clerks in the various offices of the surveyors-general are fixed by law?

Mr. SARGENT. The amount which is allowed to clerks is fixed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. This deficiency is not caused by a variation in their salaries, but simply by the temporary employment of clerks to this amount. In all the offices of the surveyors-general the amount of service of clerks varies according to the seasons of the year. In inclement seasons, when there is very little surveying in the field, there is less work, and then it is usually the case that they discharge all the clerks they can. They are paid by the month at so much a year; I think $1,200 a year. Some of them run as high as $1,500 a year. That makes an irregular amount, and it is sometimes difficult to calculate exactly how it will come out at the end of the year. This deficiency, I understand, is not caused by any increase of salaries, but from the circumstances which I have mentioned.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I understand the Senator to say that the law does not fix the salaries of the subordinate officers in the surveyor-general's office.

Mr. SARGENT. No, sir; it fixes the salary of the surveyor-general only. That is my impression.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And it is left, then, to the discretion of the department of public lands to regulate the salaries to be paid to the clerks?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As well as the number of clerks employed?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir; within the appropriation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But they do not keep within the appropriation.

Mr. SARGENT. The surveyor-general is notified of the amount of the appropriation and required to keep within it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But he says he does not.

Mr. SARGENT. Exactly; sometimes there will be a small deficiency, and sometimes a small amount will lapse into the Treasury. It is very difficult to come out within a cent of the appropriations for a year, as anybody must see in managing the affairs of a considerable office. We find that same difficulty in carrying out treaty stipulations. We direct that $20,000 shall be appropriated to purchase certain articles. On account of the variation of the market, they sometimes cost one hundred or two hundred dollars less, and sometimes one hundred or two hundred dollars over. I think myself that is a pretty close calculation, although I would rather they would keep within than go over the appropriations. I understand the salaries paid to these officers are about the same as those paid in Washington; for instance, for female copyists, $900; for clerks, usually $1,200, though there may be some second-class clerks. The department, however, vouches that this appropriation is necessary, and states frankly the reason of the deficiency as I have stated it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The statement of the Senator in charge of this bill, while it may be a satisfactory explanation of the necessity of paying this particular money, is certainly, if Senators will give attention to it, a very powerful argument in favor of retaining the last section in the bill as it came from the House; because it appears from his statement, which I have no doubt is correct, that we put our limitations upon the surveyor-general in the various States and Territories not by fixing in the law in advance how many clerks should be employed and at what salaries, as we do in the Treasury and other Departments, but merely by the amount of money appropriated for those purposes, and do not allow them to exceed the appropriation. Their only warrant in fact to employ anybody at all is to be found in the appropriation of money for such a purpose. Then, according to their own judgment of what the public service requires, they proceed to employ in excess of the appropriation and bind Congress to foot the bills in the end.

Mr. WEST. They do not bind Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator on my left says they do not bind Congress. If he is talking about the Constitution and the law, he is perfectly correct; but if he is talking about the course of human business affairs, he is not correct; and it comes pretty near being a technicality, if I may use such a word, to say that Congress is not bound. When you have a surveyor-general in Louisiana, if you please, for whom I see there is a deficiency of $2,000 here, we are not bound to make good that deficiency; but when he has employed a clerk, the clerk having been employed in good faith so far as the clerk is concerned, and that surveyor-general, too, if you please, and the clerk having done the service, Congress has never refused in such a case as that to pay, because it feels bound in honor to pay, and not suffer the employé, who has not been guilty of any wrong, to be cheated out of his labor and his time by the fact that the official agent of Congress exceeded his duty. It does not do to say that we are not bound. We are bound, and it is precisely because we are bound that the Senator from California very properly puts these sums in, which are due to these clerks.

I repeat, therefore, (and Senators cannot escape the consequences of this thing,) that this appropriation fortifies, if it needed any fortification, as it seems it does, the necessity of having a statute which shall absolutely prohibit, and punish as well as prohibit, the misdoings of these subordinate officers who undertake to judge, in the place of Congress, how much expenditure of money the public interests require. That is the point which I wish to make now; not to oppose the paying of these people who have been employed. That undoubtedly ought to be done. But I do commend to the attention of Senators, who are desirous of conducting this Government upon principles which alone can insure its safety in respect to financial affairs, to provide by law for some redress and remedy for this evil which it seems crops out in the service of the Government in whatever branch you turn to. I do not mean to say that the times are any worse now than they ever have been before. They are no doubt a great deal better. But, as I had occasion to say yesterday, now is the time, when you have an Administration that is endeavoring to improve the condition of the administrative affairs of the country, and a Congress that is desirous of retrenchment and of reforming abuses that may have grown up during long administrations; now is the time of all others, rather than in more difficult and dangerous and worse times, to so adjust the law that there shall be absolute protection to the Treasury, and an absolute prohibition against these officials from running the United States in debt when Congress has not provided the money for it. That is what I wish to call the attention of Senators to once more, if I may be pardoned for doing so.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On that point I will call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the general plan upon which these appropriations are made. Looking at the land service, the estimates provide, and it is uniform and always has been, for the office of a surveyor-general say for Oregon, as I have that before me: "Salaries, office of surveyor-general, $2,500; clerks in his office, $3,000." This comes from Oregon. There is nothing specific about it. The estimates for clerks vary all the way from $3,000 to $2,000, depending on the character of the business. Now, does not the Senator perceive that we touch a branch of the service in that particular where it is impossible for the Department to make an exact estimate? It is so variable in its character necessarily that it cannot be done. It is not a fixed service.

The Senator says this falls within the mischief of the rule which he would lay down absolutely in regard to all the service of the United States. I think it illustrates perfectly the impropriety of such an absolute rule. Does it fall within any supposed real abuse? The Senator from Vermont thinks that the fact that in the very case in point here you come for a deficiency illustrates precisely the necessity of such an absolute rule.

Now, Mr. President, let us look at this claim which is before us. These parties do not come here saying they have performed a service which had been provided for. They knew themselves that no appropriation had been provided for them. They could not go to the Court of Claims. The Land Office did not undertake to employ these men beyond the appropriation. They did not undertake to bind the Government. They simply state the fact that the Government having appropriated $3,000 for the service of clerks, they worked that out, and then it fell short, and these people worked on, not under contract with the Department that they should be paid, not attempting to bind the Government at all. They come here and state the fact that the appropriation was by so much too small; and that addresses itself precisely to the sense of Congress, the justice of Congress, if you please. If we think that it was injudicious and wrong, that it was not in harmony with the public service, that it was not a quantum meruit, in other words, we ought to reject it. If we think it of evil example, we ought to reject it. But if on the whole it was an oversight on the part of Congress in not appropriating so much, or, in other words, if the service was of that uncertain character that we could not tell precisely how much, and did not undertake to tell precisely how much, ought to be appropriated and in the nature of the case could not do it, and it fell short by $600 in the year 1872 and $350 in the year 1873, then I submit it is neither of evil example nor is it an illustration of a bad example, or in any way a bad practice on the part of the Government that it should be allowed. The Committee on Appropriations, looking at the thing, thought that the appropriation had honestly fallen short so much, it not being specific in its character but general, as all these appropriations are—I mean all for this particular branch of the service—and therefore felt disposed to consider that these clerks had outside of the appropriation performed the service and might fairly and properly be recompensed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I am sorry to see the respected chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, under whose banners I used to labor as a private soldier in defending the Treasury against exactly this sort of thing and in passing acts which should prohibit it and cut it up, appear on the opposite side, under the flag of an unlimited discretion to the executive officers of the Government, and saying to them what is equivalent to declaring, "We give you a general authority to employ clerks; we will provide as much money as we guess at this time, without knowing anything about it, may be sufficient; but it does not make any difference whether it is sufficient or not, we give you general authority to employ clerks; go on and employ as many as you like, and at the end of the year whatever remains to be made up we will make up, unless we are satisfied that you have been guilty of bad faith"—that is what it amounts to—"in employing these people." It may be a high political year, and there may be a land office where public lands are scarcely sold at all, as in some of the Southern States. I take Louisiana as an illustration, because it is under my eye, without any idea of the particular circumstances of the case. Certainly there are not vast amounts of public lands being sold there, and we find under this general discretion, after giving them $8,000 for clerks last year—that may have been for Oregon——

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That was for Oregon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We now propose to give a deficiency of $2,000 more. How much was it in Louisiana?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Six hundred dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the deficiency amounts to over three times the amount of the appropriation judged by Congress to be suitable for the last year.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator is mistaken in the figures.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The appropriation was $8,000; the deficiency here is $600.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am speaking of Louisiana.

Mr. WEST. The appropriation was $2,500 and the expenses were $4,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very good; that is it. The appropriation last year, what Congress thought was adequate, what Congress judged to be the proper necessities for the public service, was $2,500 and the expenditure was $4,500; in round numbers, 100 per cent. of deficiency. Now, under the bland notions of the chairman of the committee, apply that to all the Departments of the Government—and I do not know why you should not; it is a poor rule of equity that will not diffuse itself through all the administrative branches of the Government—and instead of spending $300,000,000 or $400,000,000, or whatever it may be, for the expenses of the Government, you will spend $500,000,000 or $800,000,000, and every regular bill coming back at the end of the session to be just doubled for deficiencies, we shall be told in the end, "This is the true way to do business; you must repose confidence in the executive branches of the service of the Government and they have expended this money in good faith; they thought the public service required it; now pay it; impose your taxes upon tea and coffee and other things and foot the bills, because the true theory of the Government is that the executive officers are to judge what the public necessities require, and the business of Congress is to furnish the money to pay for it."

That was the English royal theory precisely, that His Gracious

Majesty was to determine what the public service required to be done in the way of armaments and expenses and improvements, and then it was for his faithful people, being called upon, to vote these supplies. It is true, as the Senator from Louisiana would have said if he had been in the House of Commons or in the House of Lords in those days, "Why the Commons are bound to vote this money; to be sure the nation has run in debt; the executive departments have caused this money to be made due to persons who have performed the service in good faith; and therefore nothing remains but to tax the people and pay it."

I submit that that is not a sound principle. Of course the particular subject over which this question now arises is one which is merely incidental and trifling, and in order to make it seem more so the honorable Senator from Maine has taken the $600 item as a basis upon which to found his speech as a very slight case. I on the same principle, in order to get the average, may take the Louisiana item, where it appears the deficiency in round numbers is equal to the total appropriation, and in a State where I suspect the returns of moneys received from the sale of public lands would not show very much for the last year.

I do not make these remarks in any sort of criticism of the committee, I beg them to understand; but I am rather appealing to them to see, if they can, that there is some force in providing in some way to have a better control over this question of expenditures than we have if you strike out entirely the second section of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My honorable friend accuses me of artfulness in selecting the case of Oregon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; it was nature, not art.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Well, adroitness, dexterousness, something of that sort. The real fact is that the Oregon deficiency was the very question before the Senate; and therefore I took it properly for an illustration.

I agree with my honorable friend in the general principle which he advocates. I know how earnestly he has co-operated in that direction, and I certainly am as earnest as he is in the same direction. Mr. President, these deficiencies arise not from an abuse of this service by the executive department, but from the very character of the service and the very manner in which we appropriate. There is such a thing as a land service fixed by law, a land office in the several Territories and in many of the States. The service is irregularly provided for. We say that there shall be a land office in Oregon, and that there shall be a surveyor-general of that land office, and we fix his salary. We do not know precisely how much the business of the office will amount to. We cannot average that, or we have not attempted to do it, but we say that for the incidental expenses of that office, and for clerk hire, there shall be appropriated five, six, eight, or ten thousand dollars, according to our judgment or the judgment of the Commissioner of the Land Office, which itself must be imperfect, because the character of the service is not definite and certain. We give him a gross sum and tell him to do the work of that office. The sum runs out; the work increases during that year, and it turns out that it is absolutely inadequate to the performance of the service. What is to be done? One of two things: either to stop the service or allow him to go on with it and trust to luck.

Mr. President, in this instance the remedy is in our own hands. We do not authorize—no Department of this Government is authorized to spend one shilling beyond the appropriation made. In this instance they have not undertaken to spend any money beyond, but they have allowed the office to go on, they have allowed the business of the office to go on without an appropriation and without the promise of any payment on the part of the Department. If we believe that this is of bad example, we ought not to make this appropriation, and then these land officers will understand that the rule of Congress is inexorable, that the business must stop whenever the appropriation runs out. If that is considered sound policy, then we ought not to make this appropriation. If, from the very manner in which we conduct this service, there is in itself a margin of discretion, then I think the appropriation ought to be made.

Mr. SARGENT. I believe there is no objection to the item under consideration. I do not understand that the Senator from Vermont makes any objection to that; and perhaps it would be better for the other question to be raised directly when the bill shall be reported to the Senate. I should like, however, to make one remark with reference to the deficiency for Louisiana. If the Senator from Vermont will look at the previous Book of Estimates or look at the statutes, he will find that we appropriated for Louisiana the previous year somewhere about $4,500, and then we cut them down to $2,500. Congress is too capricious in making these appropriations. Sometimes, when there is a showing that there is likely to be more business before a land office than usual, or that it is desirable to close up the business of the land office and it can be done in a couple of years, Congress will increase the appropriation for the first year, and then the next year reduce it, passing the appropriation bill probably in the very last hours of the session, just before the new fiscal year begins to take effect. Notice does not get to the land office that Congress has cut down the appropriation, for some time. They have been running for the fiscal year, we will say, on $4,500. Congress forgetting that it had adopted a system of closing up the land office, and had increased the appropriation for one year intending to do the same for the next year, has not increased it for the second year. The land office goes on, the surveyor-general goes on in perfect good faith, and incurs obligations for the first month or two, before he gets notice that he is cut down and limited in the amount which he can expend, more than he would have incurred if he had known what his resources would be for the whole year. Consequently, when he comes to the end of the year, on account of this fickleness, if I may call it so, of Congress in changing the amount of appropriation, he finds that he has not enough really to carry him through to the end of the year, having expended more at the beginning of the year than he would have done if notified in advance of the exact amount he would have for the year.

I think we are a little to blame by making appropriations so capriciously, not following the same system. I believe it would be good policy to wind up the business in the Louisiana land offices in the course of two or three years. I think it could be done by somewhat increasing the appropriations we now make. The business there left is somewhat fragmentary. It is in surveying boundaries of Spanish grants, segregating them from the public domain, in picking out and making available to the Government the fractional sections and quarters of sections which are sold and the money goes into the Treasury. There is no necessity for dragging that along for five or ten years by making an appropriation just large enough to keep a little vitality in the office. It would be very much better to appropriate four or five thousand dollars a year and in two or three years close it up. But if some Senator, arguing in this manner, should persuade Congress to make such an appropriation for the first year, the next year Congress would very likely cut it down to an inadequate amount or to a less amount, and the surveyor-general would find after a month or two of his administration of the next year that his resources had been limited and that he had exceeded really the appropriation without intending to do it.

One other remark and I shall leave this general subject. I think it is a very fortunate circumstance that we are able to bring down the amount of deficiencies at the close of a fiscal year to 1 per cent. of the whole expenditures of the Government. That is about what this bill amounts to. It is about 1¼ per cent. That certainly implies no very considerable carelessness, and surely no corruption. I think this a matter of congratulation that at this end of the fiscal year 1874 we are able to wind up a deficiency bill in the Senate of the United States, after it has passed the House of Representatives, with less than $4,000,000 of deficiency, a saving of $7,000,000 of deficiency over the last fiscal year. But there seems to be no objection on the part of any one to this particular amendment, and I trust we shall have the vote.

Mr. WEST. Mr. President, the facts in connection with the land office business in my State have scarcely been properly represented to the Senate. The Senator who has just spoken said the principal business there now was in the survey of Spanish land claims. The truth is that the principal business is the adjustment as between the United States and the State of Louisiana of the ownership of swamp and overflowed lands, and the surveyor-general of that State has already recommended such an appropriation as would enable him to close his business within one year, amounting to some $15,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do the swamp lands have to be surveyed at the expense of the United States?

Mr. WEST. All the lands have to be surveyed at the expense of the United States Government to determine which are the swamp lands, and then they are to be ceded to the State; otherwise the United States would want to reserve its ownership, and it is interested in it. In this particular case the estimate for the year was $9,100, and Congress arbitrarily cut it down to $2,500. In lieu of the $5,600 he asked for, he comes in with a deficiency of only $2,000. So much for that State. Now with reference to the general principle that has been at issue here between the Senator from Vermont on the one side and the Senators from California and Maine on the other. I think the affirmative side has been sufficiently supported by them in reference to the second section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. While we are on this subject, I want to show you how much business the land offices in Louisiana, of which there are three it appears, did in the last fiscal year. I find by the Land Office report that the quantity of land sold for cash and bounty-land scrip at and above the minimum price of $1.25 per acre for the first half of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, was 492.68 acres. That was at the whole three land offices. At the Natchitoches land office they sold 4.12 acres. The total price was $1,943.82, all of which was received. Then of homestead entries there were 55,518 acres, for which the fees were $4,058, and the registers and receivers' fees were $1,481, making $5,539. The aggregate disposed of for cash and bounty scrip and homesteads was 56,000 acres, and the cash received $7,483.

So you perceive, Mr. President, that the amount of business done in the Louisiana land districts, for which we pay these thousands of dollars per year, is not nearly great enough to pay the expenses of the offices. We do not nearly get cash enough out of the public-land system in Louisiana according to the last report to pay the expenses of running it. Of course, as to homesteads, that ought not to be considered. We have provided by law that the homestead settlers shall be entitled to locate, and there shall be land offices where they can, and we ought to pay that expense. That ought to be taken into consideration, of course; but when you come to the business of disposing of the public lands by sale in that State, as I supposed, practically it is nothing at all. All that there is left of it is the homestead entries. What is the quantity of public lands in Louisiana I do not know; perhaps the Senator from Louisiana can tell me in round numbers?

Mr. SARGENT. I have been in favor for several years of closing the business of our Florida and Louisiana land offices. I agree with the Senator that it is unprofitable.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the Senator, then, to be acting in this bill now under the impression that what he has provided will effectuate the purpose of closing up those land offices?

Mr. SARGENT. I think it will do much toward it. I think this appropriation of $2,000 will go toward that end, and I think in the coming sundry civil bill we ought to pursue some policy making an appropriation of $5,000 a year for three years and wind it up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why do we have two separate appropriations, one in the legislative bill and another in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. SARGENT. On reflection, I suppose it is in the legislative bill; but I did not have charge of that bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is entirely correct, because I observe by the statutes that in the fiscal year preceding the current year the Louisiana land offices and several others were provided for in both the legislative bill and the sundry civil bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I will tell the Senator the distinction. The actual surveying is in the sundry civil bill, and they surveyor-general's salary and that of the clerks in his office is in the legislative bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator will find on looking at the two bills that the very same items, word for word, are introduced. I do not mean to say that all of them are, but a great many.

Mr. SARGENT. I remember the occasion now to which the Senator refers; and it was in pursuance of the policy of encouraging the settlement of the public lands in the Territories that larger appropriations were made, and consequently it looked like duplicating appropriations for the same objects, but in Louisiana and Florida the effort was to appropriate money enough to wind up the business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have we got any nearer winding up than before?

Mr. SARGENT. I think so, because every amount of business done of course completes it to a certain extent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not see it.

Mr. SPRAGUE. There is an error, it seems to me, in confining the discretion of the surveyors-general of the land offices. Whenever these offices are constituted, the sum of money for clerk hire is definitely determined and in many cases the number of clerks; and the estimates are furnished to Congress based upon the law as agreed upon when the surveyor-general's office is constituted.

Mr. WEST. The Senator from Vermont has cited the meager business that is done in the land offices in Louisiana as a reason why appropriations in that direction should cease, at the same time admitting that the laws with reference to homesteads are of that character to make it incumbent that the Goverment should be represented and have land offices open to afford facilities to settlers. Well, sir, I might with the same propriety quote some one-horse postal road in the State of Vermont, where we probably pay $1,000 a year for a contract to carry the mails and do not get probably $250 in return. Is not a facility to the Senator and his constituents effected? Is it not a facility that the law accords? And that he should rise here in his place and say that there is no necessity for this thing is strange. Let him carry out his doctrines through all the service; let us abolish all post-roads unless they pay; let us abolish all the service of the Government unless there is some equivalent return in dollars and cents. The return is in the general benefit that accrues to the community; and in my State particularly there is a division, as I stated before, going on between the United States and the State, and it is with that view that we should have this money appropriated. A year more or two years more will enable us to conclude the business of the land offices there, and then you will be bothered neither with appropriations nor deficiencies.

Mr. EDMUNDS. One single word and I shall have done. I will not speak of the public lands; I will only speak of post-offices and post-roads. I should be very glad to unite with the Senator in an economic point of view to provide for diminishing very largely that part of the postal service which is run at a great loss to the Government; and if we did it, I would suggest that in a very large region of country—I will not state where it lies—there would not be a post-route left. The Senator can guess where it is.

Mr. WEST. In Vermont, I presume. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is entitled to his guess. [Laughter.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I have one more amendment to offer from the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Chair would call attention to the resolution adopted on the 18th of May, and not heretofore enforced, limiting debate upon amendments to appropriation bills to five minutes by each Senator. Unless there is some change in that resolution the Chair will enforce it hereafter.

Mr. SARGENT. By order of the Senate, yesterday, it was to be enforced on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been enforced this morning in the pending debate; and the Chair has called attention to that fact and notifies the Senate that it will be enforced hereafter.

Mr. SARGENT. I shall be happy to conform to it. After line 711 I move the following amendment:

For foundation and pedestal for the bronze statue of the late General John A. Rawlins, authorized by act of Congress approved Apr'l 10,1872, $3,000; and the Secretary of War is authorized to place the same in Rawlins Square, or such other reservation in the city of Washington as he may select.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I offer from the Committee on Appropriations the following amendment, to come in at the end of line 711:

To pay Captain James L. Fisk, of Montana Territory, the amount due to him on settlement of his accounts as officer in charge of overland emigrant expedition, $7,862.37.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL. At the request of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, I offer an amendment to come in after line 846. The language of the amendment explains itself:

For compensation to C. H. Evans, statistician, the sum of $500 for services rendered the Committee on Ways and Means for procuring statistics during the Forty-second Congress.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to have some explanation of who this gentleman is and what services he rendered and who employed him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order that it is a private claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont raises the point of order that this is a private claim. The Chair holds that under Rule 30 the point is well taken, and the amendment cannot be entertained.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I shall have to submit.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to reserve for a separate vote the amendment striking out section 2 of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont reserves the amendment striking out section 2.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to reserve on the thirty-first page the amendment in lines 741 and 742 for the purpose of explanation at least.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The exceptions will be noted. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole with the two exceptions stated by the Senator from Vermont.

The unexcepted amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment striking out section 2.

Mr. EDMUNDS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. SARGENT. Had we not better take the question upon the amendment on the thirty-first page first?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has put the question on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, striking out the second section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the section be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out section 2 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall not be lawful for any Department of the Government to expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or to involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriation. And any violation of the provisions of this section by any officer of the Government shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and be punished in the manner provided for violations of section 3 of the act approved July 25, 1868, and entitled "An act making appropriations, and to supply deficiences in appropriations, for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is not the section as I understand that was stricken out. Before it was stricken out, it was amended. The motion now is to strike out the section as it was amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the section was amended and subsequently stricken out; and now the question is upon agreeing to the report of the Committee of the Whole striking out the section as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Striking out everything.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I merely wish to say, as the Senator from Maine has alluded to the matter, that if the Senate is not satisfied with the section as it stands and wants anything left on the subject at all, it of course will vote against striking it all out and then we can proceed to amend it as shall be thought proper, if it needs any amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. I raise a question of order, not so much for its value in this instance as otherwise. In Committee of the Whole, on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] about one-half perhaps in words of that section was stricken out. Then a motion was made to strike out the residue, and that motion prevailed. The question now, I submit, is upon concurring with the Committee of the Whole in what the committee did, not by two votes but by one vote; that is, the last vote. What did the committee do? It struck out all that remained of that section. What remained? The whole section less that part of it which had previously been stricken out. I submit to the Chair that if the question were to be put as suggested, the Senate would lose the opportunity of voting upon the real question; and if I may so say—of course I do not use the expression offensively—the question would be falsely put to the Senate, because the Committee of the Whole having stricken out a section as it then stood which had come to be only five lines for example and to mean a certain thing, would be compelled to vote upon striking out a different section, to wit, those five lines with five other lines, meaning another thing.

So I suggest to the Chair that the first question must be upon concurring with the amendment made in Committee of the Whole. What was that amendment? It was to strike out the second section as it had been amended; not to strike it out as it had not been amended; and although in this case the point may not be of much value, I submit to the Chair it would introduce great disorder into the proceedings of the Senate if in place of voting in the Senate on the actual amendment adopted in committee, we were not to be allowed to vote upon that at all but to vote upon a different amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have understood the Chair already to rule that the question is upon striking out the section as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was the ruling of the Chair. The present occupant was not in the chair when this action was had yesterday in Committee of the Whole. Of course he has no desire other than to carry out the action of the committee. He has already ruled that the question was upon agreeing to the amendment made by the Committee of the Whole, which was to strike out the section as it had been amended by previously striking out the latter part.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I agree with the Chair entirely.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I respectfully do not agree with the Chair. I do not wish to appeal, for it is of no practical consequence here; but I do not want it drawn into precedent. What would be the result? Suppose we choose to strike out the whole of this bill after the enacting clause in committee, section by section, vote by vote; the idea that when the bill is reported to the Senate we have got more than one amendment altogether to the bill is to my mind an unsound idea. All that the committee has done, when you put it all together, is to strike out the whole bill after the enacting clause. The question then would be on agreeing to that amendment, just as when on the other hand we make a general amendment to a bill by forty different votes in committee on a substitute reported from a committee. When it is reported to the Senate it is one single amendment; we do not vote on all the branches that made it up. Just so in committee on striking out section 2 in this bill. We struck section 2 entirely out; we did it by two steps; that is, we first voted to strike out the last part, and second we voted to strike out the first part; and it was all out. Now the question is, when it comes into the Senate, whether the pending question is on retaining the part that stood last in the bill or retaining the whole question. I think the pending question properly and lawfully is whether we will agree to the amendment made in Committee of the Whole, which by two votes was to strike out that whole section as an entirety. But practically I do not care, so that I understand precisely what the question is that is to be submitted to the Senate. If the Chair thinks he will only submit to the Senate that which we struck out last, that is, the first paragraph, and will so state it so that we all understand it, it practically comes to the same thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no misunderstanding between the Chair and the Senator from Vermont; and the question submitted by the Chair is in accordance with his understanding of the case as it now stands. The Chair understands that the question is upon concurring in the amendment made by the Committee of the Whole to the bill to strike out section 2, upon the last page of the bill, that section having been previously amended in Committee of the Whole by striking out the latter part of the same. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. CONKLING. And also, if the Chair will pardon me, the section having been amended before a portion was stricken out, by the insertion of another word which I think fortifies the ruling of the Chair. The Chair may remember that the Senator from Ohio moved to strike out all after certain words and to insert previously the word "high," so that it would read "shall be a high misdemeanor." So new matter has been put in; and therefore, also, I submit that the ruling of the Chair is clearly right as to the mode of presenting the question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We disagreed to the motion to amend by putting in the word "high," did we not?

Mr. CONKLING. Not at all; we adopted it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not care how that is; I only wish to understand the question. I now understand the Chair to rule that the question upon which we are to vote by yeas and nays is whether we will strike out the first six lines of this section, the first clause, which was the last part that was voted on in committee.

Mr. CONKLING. As amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As amended by striking out the latter part of the section previously.

Mr. CONKLING. And inserting the word "high" so as to make the offense a high misdemeanor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no appeal from the decision of the Chair, the Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire to have the section reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report it.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first six lines of the section are as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall not be lawful for any Department of the Government to expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or to involve the Government in any contract not expressly authorized by act of Congress for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriation.

Mr. SARGENT. The only information the Senate can have from its Committee of the Whole is the final action of the Committee of the Whole. The Committee of the Whole determined to strike out the whole section. That is reported to the Senate, and only that. The Committee of the Whole do not report the processes by which it succeeded in striking out the whole section; first a third, then another third, and then the remaining third. The Committee of the Whole simply reports that it struck out the second section; and the question of concurrence with the Committee of the Whole is in its action in striking out the second section.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator from California a question? Suppose in Committee of the Whole an amendment had been moved and carried to strike out in the second section all after the first word and insert provisions touching for example the Coast Survey; and subsequently on motion the section thus amended had been stricken out. Does the Senator think that the true question here would be on striking out the second section as it originally stood, or as it actually was when the committee struck it out?

Mr. SARGENT. I think the question would be simply on striking out the second section. I will give the Senator an example. Take the very instance that he supposes. What report would you make to the House of Representatives if you amended their bill? In the process of our legislation, we in the first place amend the second section and then strike out the whole section. What do you report to the House of Representatives? You report that by your amendment you have struck out the second section of the bill, and all the House have to act upon is that amendment striking out the second section, and they have no information officially as to the antecedent steps that you took, that you put it in this shape, and then in that shape, and turned it over a dozen times, until finally you struck it out. You send the bill back to them amended by striking out the second section.

Mr. CONKLING. I agree with my friend there; but his point of departure, I submit, and where his argument fails is in this: He says the question would be on striking out the second section. Of course it would; but the question is what is the second section? Is it what you did in fact strike out, or what you did not strike out? When you come to make report to the House of Representatives, of course he is right in saying that the report is that the second section of the bill was struck out. But the point at present between us, not relating to the House at all, relates simply to the verity of our proceedings. Can it be possible that when in Committee of the Whole we struck out a section which relates to the Coast Survey and the question is whether the Senate will agree with what the Committee of the Whole has done, we are to vote upon striking out a totally different section relating to a totally different topic, so that we can never know whether the Senate does confirm what the Committee of the Whole has done or not?

In this case, instead of the section being left as it has been read by the Clerk it was left in this way: the words which he has read, with the words following that whoever violated this provision should be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and there the clause stopped; and the word "high" was inserted before "misdemeanor," so that it read that whoever should violate this section should be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor.

What were the arguments made upon that? The Senator from Vermont and others suggested "That is wholly unnecessary. The power of impeachment does not reside in a statute; it resides in the Constitution; and how superfluous it would be for us to enact a provision of that sort!" Thereupon the Senate struck it out. Now the Senator says the question is not whether the Senate will agree with what the Senate did in Committee of the Whole, but whether the Senate voting upon a wholly different thing will agree that a section different in character ought to have been stricken out if it had been, which in truth it was not, in Committee of the Whole. I submit that if there is any rule which requires that, it is wrong.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator raises no difficulty in the matter. We have only to do with the final action of the Committee of the Whole as reported to the Senate. Before that time there was a section before the committee. We put one word in this line and struck out another in another line. We turned the section over in all directions and could not get it to suit us, and finally struck it out. It was the final striking out that was reported to the Senate; and that is the question now before us.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not want to prolong this debate, but in order to show that I am not mistaken, in view of what the Secretary read I beg now to read from the RECORD of yesterday's proceedings:

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the whole remnant there is left of it be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall not be lawful for any Department of the Government to expend in any one fiscal year any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or to involve the Government in any contract not expressly authorized by act of Congress for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriation; and any violation of the provisions of this section by any officer of the Government shall be deemed a high misdemeanor.

Then followed the question upon striking out that, simply that; the Senator called it a remnant, a part of the second section as it stood, with the word "high" interpolated into it in order to change entirely the jurisdiction at which it was aimed to make it applicable to proceedings by impeachment in place of being applicable to ordinary proceedings before judicial courts. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] hands me his bill which he marked at the time and marked in accordance with the suggestion that I have made. The Committee of the Whole adopting an amendment, which amendment was to dispense with a part of the section and to change and perfect the residue, the question was when that amendment prevailed upon striking out what had then come to be the second section. Now the suggestion is that the Senate is to vote, not whether it will concur with the Committee of the Whole in striking out the second section as the second section was and was voted upon, but whether it will concur with the Committee of the Whole in a vote which never took place in Committee of the Whole, for the Committee of the Whole never voted to strike out the second section as it originally came from the Committee on Appropriations; and thus if the Senator from California be right, while the Committee of the Whole did one thing, under guise of concurring or disagreeing in that we are to pass upon a wholly different thing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the effect of following the logic of the Senator from New York by the Senate now would be to take a vote as it stands here in the bill on the first half of this section. Suppose we agree to the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole as he styles it, and that is the recommendation confined to these six or eight lines; and suppose the Senate vote in the affirmative and concur with the committee, what is the standing then? What has become of the rest of this section of the House bill? Has the Senate ever voted upon it? No; the committee voted upon it, but that is not the Senate. There is no question, then, left for the Senate on a certain important part of this House bill to vote upon at all that cannot be so on the text of a bill coming from the other House or the text of a Senate bill. It is true undoubtedly—and probably that is what leads my honorable friend from New York into the position that he occupies, I think falsely—that the words which we once inserted in committee, we having finally struck them all out again, are lost and gone; they are not before the Senate at all because they never get here; they did not come from the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The Committee of the Whole invented the words proposed by the Senator from Ohio, and then got sick of them and discharged them; and we discharging them discharged the text of the whole section. Now, when we come into the Senate those words that the Senate disagreed to and reconsidered, though not in form reconsidered but finally rejected, are not before the Senate at all, no matter which way we vote upon the question now pending. If we vote nay upon the question that is now pending, then we retain in the bill the words which the Chair submits to us, or as I think he ought to submit to us the whole section, then we retain that, and can amend it as we think may be desirable afterward. But if we do not vote so, then, as I said before, we have voted in the Senate upon one-half of a section of a House bill, and upon the other half we take no vote at all. Although we did vote upon it in Committee of the Whole and acted upon it, and yet we never have any right to act upon it in the Senate. That cannot be so, I respectfully submit.

But, as I said, I did not rise to have any contest with the Chair upon which way he may think it best to put the question. If, as I understood the Chair to rule, the question now submitted is upon the first six or eight lines, and that is all the effect of this vote now ordered to be taken is, then I wish to move an amendment. But if I understand the Chair to mean that these words that the Senate in Committee of the Whole inserted have been lost altogether by being finally rejected with the rest, the question now is on retaining or striking out the whole of this section as it stands in print simply, which I understand to be the true question, then of course I do not wish to move an amendment. If the Chair holds me to his ruling, I wish to amend the part proposed to be stricken out by adding the very print of the residue of the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no other object than to carry out the wishes of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course not. I did not mean to intimate otherwise.

Mr. SARGENT. What is the ruling of the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled that the question is on concurring in the amendment made by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole to the bill, as amended, by striking out the second section of the bill after it had been amended by the committee by striking out the final clause after the word "misdemeanor," in line 8.

Mr. SARGENT. What becomes of the final clause?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is out.

Mr. SARGENT. If it is out, I do not care about raising an issue on words.

Mr. WEST. I do not rise to elucidate the precise point of order that is raised; but I rise to lay before the Senate the particular steps that the Senate took in Committee of the Whole to amend this section.

The Senator from Vermont speaks of two steps. There were positively three steps, and in this order: The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] moved to insert and strike out. He first moved to insert the words "not expressly authorized by act of Congress," and then to insert "any violation of the provisions of this section by any officer of the Government shall be deemed a high misdemeanor," and then to strike out from line six. The vote was taken on the motion of the Senator from Ohio first to insert, then to strike out, and then on a subsequent motion to strike out the whole section. Now it is for the Senate to determine what will be its action in the Senate upon the subject as it was left upon the motion of the Senator from Ohio, which was a vote of insertion and striking out. That may have some bearing upon the case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the ruling of the Chair now to confine this vote to all that part preceding the penalty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Preceding the penal clause.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I move to amend the part proposed to be stricken out by adding the punitive clause as it stands in the printed bill, which I ask may be read from the desk.

Mr. SARGENT. I suggest that that is not in order until we find out first whether we concur with the action of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg pardon of the Senator. When the question is before the Senate on concurring in an amendment made as in Committee of the Whole it is open to amendment and to concur with an amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. I am open to correction on that matter. My judgment would be the other way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that the motion made by the Senator from Vermont is in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I hope the words I propose shall be inserted will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be added, as follows:

And be punished in the manner provided for violations of section 3 of the act approved July 25, 1868, and entitled "An act making appropriations and to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes."

Mr. EDMUNDS. If this amendment is agreed to, I shall then move to strike out the word "high."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I do not know that I understand the effect of this amendment; but it seems to me to be this, that you hold the head of a Department responsible for all that is done under him, responsible for the acts of all his subordinates. If a subordinate should be guilty of an act prohibited by this section, would the subordinate be punished, or would the head of the Bureau or Department be held responsible? I think that is of some consequence. I do not like the provision at any rate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is so important, that I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SARGENT. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made in Committee of the Whole striking out the second section of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I moved an amendment to that by adding the words which stand in the last six lines of the print, the Chair having ruled that those words were not before the Senate on the motion to concur with the action of the Committee of the whole, but that the first eight lines were before the Senate. Thereupon I moved to add from lines 8 to 14, inclusive, to the pending proposition.

Mr. SARGENT. I raise the point of order that the motion of the Senator from Vermont is not in order, and that the true question is, Shall we concur with the action of the Committee of the Whole striking out the second section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair since coming in has consulted with the Senator who was presiding at the time this question was raised, and now has his concurrence in reversing the former ruling, and holding that the question before the Senate is, Will the Senate concur in the amendment which was made in Committee of the Whole. Now, the question is what was that amendment which was made? It was first moved to strike out the second section. Then, to defeat that motion, in Committee of the Whole it was moved to perfect the part proposed to be stricken out. It was perfected by amendments. Nevertheless the main motion in the Committee of the Whole to strike out the second section prevailed, and that was what was done in Committee of the Whole: the second section was stricken out. Now, the Chair is of opinion that the question in the Senate is, Will the Senate concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, which was to strike out the second section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Chair if the amendments made in Committee of the Whole by the introduction of the words offered by the Senator from Ohio are now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I entirely agree with the Chair. That is what I insisted on in the first place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the Committee of the Whole to strike out the second section of the bill, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. On that question I should like to know where we shall be, provided the Senate concur?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The second section would undoubtedly be stricken out of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If we do not concur, then where shall we be? What will be the condition of that section? Will it be left as it was amended in Committee of the Whole?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senate do not concur, the section will stand in the bill, and be subject to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Stand entire? What becomes of the amendment that was made in committee which does not come up here?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the section will stand entire as it is in the bill, subject to amendment in the Senate like any other section.

Mr. CONKLING. Although it had been amended in Committee of the Whole?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Committee of the Whole to the part proposed to be stricken out were merely intended to defeat the motion which was made there to strike out the second section. They did not have that effect, however. The Senate did, notwithstanding the amendments, strike out the second section, and the question in the Senate is, will the Senate concur in striking out the second section? If the Senate do not agree to that, then the second section stands in the bill as it is, not as it was amended in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Allow me to suggest the precise condition of that section. When the vote to strike it out took effect upon it, it was, I suggest, on the section as perfected by the Senate, to use that language, or as amended by the Senate by striking out the final clause of the section; so that when the vote we are now to take upon it operated, it operated only upon the second section as amended. Now my query is, whether the vote to concur with the vote of the Committee of the Whole striking out the second section covers anything more than the second section as it was after it was amended?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Suppose it had first been moved in Committee of the Whole to strike out the last five lines of the section, and that had carried. Then in Committee of the Whole it was next moved to strike out the first five lines, and that had carried. It was then moved to strike out the rest of the section, and that had carried. Then the whole second section would have been out of the bill by an amendment in Committee of the Whole; and coming into the Senate the question would be whether the Senate would concur in the amendment striking out the second section. In other words, the second section was stricken out by several processes in the case I suppose; but here the Chair understands the amendments which were made in Committee of the Whole to the part proposed to be stricken out were mere attempts to defeat the motion to strike out the whole of the second section. They did not, however, have the effect to defeat that motion, because the Committee of the Whole, even with the amendments, struck out the whole second section. The vote therefore was on that. The committee amended the bill by striking out the second section. Now the question is, will the Senate concur in that amendment which struck out the second section?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The difficulty in my mind is just this: that the amendments to the section had perfected the second section so that the second section when the vote striking it out took effect upon it was a different thing altogether from that upon which the Senate acted in the first place; and the question which survives and comes up here is the one which struck out the second section as amended; and by no possibility, I suggest, can it revive that part which did not come here, nor does the motion of my honorable friend from Vermont cover it. He reserved the vote by which the second section was stricken out; and thereupon I made the inquiry whether any other reservation was made in the bill except that one and another proposition. So I suggest again that that portion of the second section which had been stricken out by a vote theretofore does not by any possibility reach the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that this section being in the bill, the question is, will the Senate concur with the Committee of the Whole in striking it out. That is the pending question now. Any Senator can move any amendment he pleases to the second section to prevent its being stricken out, and he may if he pleases move the same amendments which were moved to it in Committee of the Whole, and the Senate may adopt those amendments, and then the question will come whether the second section, as amended, shall be stricken out.

Mr. ALCORN. At the risk of detaining the Senate a moment, I will say something in regard to the question before the Senate, more for the purpose of testing my judgment in regard to the rule. An amendment was pending in Committee of the Whole. There was an amendment adopted to the section. Then there was a subsequent amendment offered, and that was also adopted, as I understand. Then a motion was made to strike out the section as an entirety; and that motion prevailed. Now we come into the Senate; the question is whether the Senate will concur in the action of the Committee of the Whole, in striking out the section. Should that motion carry, the next question comes then, will the Senate concur with the committee in adopting the first amendment that was adopted; and will it concur finally in the adoption of the second amendment. And so we have three votes in the Senate precisely as we had three votes in the committee, if perchance we shall fail to concur with the Committee of the Whole in striking out the section as an entirety. I merely suggest this to see whether I have up to this time caught the correct idea, for I do not read the rules; I take them in rather by absorption. I wish to see now whether I have absorbed an idea in regard to the correctness of this ruling.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made to this bill in Committee of the Whole by striking out the second section, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Chair will pardon me a moment. The Senator from Vermont has withdrawn his amendment, I understand.

Mr. CONKLING. The question is on striking out the original section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has no amendment pending.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Those who favor the action of the Senate as in Committee of the Whole will vote "yea."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those who wish to strike out the section will vote "yea," which is for concurring in the action of the Committee of the Whole in striking out the section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And those who wish to have it stand will vote "nay."

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 36, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Boreman, Boutwell, Buckingham, Cameron, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Jones, Kelly, Logan, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norwood, Patterson, Ramsey, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Scott, Tipton, West, and Windom—36.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Edmunds, Fenton, Hager, Harvey, Ingalls, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Pratt, Schurz, Sherman, Sprague, Wadleigh, Washburn, and Wright—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Bogy, Brownlow, Cragin, Dorsey, Ferry of Connecticut, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Howe, Johnston, Lewis, Pease, Ransom, Spencer, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, and Thurman—22.

So the amendment of the Committee of the Whole striking out the second section was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the next reserved amendment, which was in lines 741 and 742 to insert the words "not before in use by the Government;" so that the clause will read:

And hereafter no contract shall be made for the rent of any building, or part of any building, in Washington, not before in use by the Government, to be used for the purposes of the Government, until an appropriation therefor shall have been made in terms by Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like the Senator in charge of the bill to explain why those words were inserted by the committee. It appears to me, at the risk of being impertinent in looking after this legislation at all——

Mr. SARGENT. I cannot hear the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I say, at the risk of suffering for impertinence in looking into this bill, I wish to ask the Senator from California what the purpose of the Committee on Appropriations was, and the grounds of that purpose, in inserting the words which have been inserted in Committee of the Whole. The clause as it came from the House reads:

And hereafter no contract shall be made for the rent of any building, or part of any building, in Washington, to be used for the purposes of the Government until an appropriation therefor shall have been made in terms by Congress.

Now, the committee propose to insert "not before in use by the Government;" so that if any contracts have already been made, there may be relettings, or rehirings rather, by the Government for any length of time and at any price, and with any favorite, without the previous authority of Congress and providing for the means. That is the effect of the amendment of the committee. The necessity for this legislation, if it exists at all, it appears to me is just as great in respect to any building now occupied after the lease runs out as for any building which has not already been occupied by the Government. It so struck me, and I therefore reserved the amendment in order that the Senator from California might give us an explanation on the subject.

Mr. SARGENT. I will give the reason which influenced the committee. I am not entirely sure that the legislation itself is called for by any public necessity; but the committee assumed with reference to buildings now occupied by the Departments, as we had made appropriations for them year after year right straight along, that we had sanctioned the use of those buildings. Of course no Senator can doubt that these buildings are absolutely essential for the uses of the Departments, at any rate as a rule. I do not know but that they might be crowded into a little less space. Perhaps instead of using a building containing thirty rooms, they might possibly get along with fifteen or twenty rooms; but as a rule we assumed that as Congress had made the appropriations year after year for buildings now in use by the Government, it had sanctioned the use of those buildings and the contracts for their use and occupation. Therefore we did not wish to imply that the Departments had done wrong in that matter.

Furthermore, right in the midst of the season, before Congress

meets, or in the absence of Congress, or before any legislation could be obtained in the matter, a lease might expire of a building which had been occupied by the Government perhaps for three or four years, and to turn the Government into the street, which would be the right of the landlord of course if there was no contract for rent and no payment of rent, might very seriously embarrass the Government. As Congress seemed to have sanctioned these contracts up to this time for buildings in use and to admit that the accommodations that are now used are necessary for the purposes of the Government, the committee thought we ought not to forbid the further use of those buildings. Of course if an improvident contract is made for any building heretofore in use by the Government and too large a rent is paid, it is within the control of Congress, and we can refuse to pay the rent they charge and get other accommodations on our attention being called to it.

These, I believe, are the only reasons which governed the committee in their action on this subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator mean to say that we make specific appropriations for each one of the buildings that are hired for the various Departments in this city?

Mr. SARGENT. No, sir; I mean to say, however, that in most cases we do so, and if the Senator will look through the appropriation bills, he will find that we appropriate in the different bills for the rent of such a building and such a building. Some small buildings with limited accommodations I think are covered by the contingent appropriations, and in that case it is mentioned in the contingency. I think if the Senator will refer to the appropriation bills, he will see hatt in many cases we make specific appropriations for particular buildings.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It may be that the House is entirely wrong in putting any limit upon the rental of buildings or upon the prices that are to be paid for them. The judgment of the Senate, I imagine, is that way from its vote on striking out the second section, and that the true plan is to repose an unlimited discretion in the various officers in the Executive Departments. If that is the will of the Senate, of course I have not a word to say. But if there is any wit in the House proposition at all, it applies just as much to buildings that we may have occupied at some stage or other, for this amendment actually runs back to any time, as to buildings that may hereafter be occupied. The language is "not before in use by the Government." It does not say not now in use by the Government, but any building that at any time, during any reasonable period back, going back to 1860, we may have hired would be open to hiring under this bill as the amendment of the committee is, although we may not have occupied it for five years. So that if there is any value in the clause of the House at all, if it is a move in the right direction, I certainly speak with great deference to the views of the Senate on that subject; it may be a move in the wrong direction, because it certainly is in the direction of limiting the discretion of the executive officials in the various Departments of the Government, and that may be a wrong theory; but if it is a right theory, as the committee appears to have considered it to be by leaving it to stand, then the theory ought to apply as well to future contracts for buildings that we may have occupied before as to future contracts for buildings that we have not occupied. The real question is not as to the nature of the building; the real question is as to the economy of expenditure, and that has not any connection with the fact that we are in that building or may wish to go into another. It has relation only to the question of the value of the building. That being the case, we may be just as much injured in point of money by a rehiring of a building by a Department as by the hiring of a new one, I submit to the Senate. But, as I said, I do not want to occupy the time of the Senate upon a subject which is perhaps already decided.

Mr. SARGENT. I listened with great deference to the views of the Senator, and I will make a suggestion which I think will obviate one of the objections he makes; and that is, that instead of the word "before" the word "now" be inserted, so as to read, "not now in use by the Government." This language was drawn up by myself. It was not intended to sanction the reoccupation of any building that may have been heretotore occupied by the Government that was not occupied at the time of the passage of the bill. That modification I think will obviate the principal objection the Senator makes. I therefore move to amend the amendment made in Committee of the Whole in line 471 by inserting the word "now" instead of the word "before."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that amendment will be regarded as agreed to. The question now is on concurring in the amendment as amended.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 18th instant, a report of the Chief of Engineers of the Army relative to the preservation of the Falls of Saint Anthony.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that that lie on the table for the present without any further order.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of State with a copy of the report of the commissioners to inquire into depredations on the frontiers of Texas; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a message of the President of the United States, transmitting a report from the Secretary of State, and accompanying it copies of all papers on file or on record in the Department of State respecting the claim on Brazil concerning the Caroline; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 249) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to give to George A. Armes, late captain Tenth United States Cavalry, an honorable discharge, to date the 7th day of June, 1870;

A bill (S. No. 477) granting a pension to Jemima Maxwell;

A bill (S. No. 540) granting a pension to Fanny Newcomb, mother of Irenus Newcomb, late of Company H, Sixth Regiment Vermont Volunteers;

A bill (S. No. 568) granting a pension to Hugh P. Lytle, late a private in Company H, Thirty-second Ohio Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 2181) granting a pension to Jennet H. Nisbet;

A bill (H. R. No. 2202) for the relief of William B. Thomas, late collector of customs at the port of Philadelphia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2738) for the relief of the Foundry Methodist Episcopal church of Washington City.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2343) making appropriations for the current and contignent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, to report it back with sundry amendments. I give notice that I will call this bill up for action of the Senate at the earliest practicable moment.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 2343) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SAULSBURY and Mr. CONOVER submitted amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3168) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works for rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I reported a bill from the Committee on Appropriations yesterday or the day before, in regard to the centennial celebration. I gave notice at that time that I should ask the attention of the Senate to the bill at an early moment, and I think it due to the subject that I should call it up at the present time. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I gave notice yesterday that at the conclusion of the deficiency bill I should move to take up in order three bills which lie on the table. I understand, however, that the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] wishes to be absent upon some call which he cannot avoid, and therefore wishes to proceed at once with the consideration of this bill. I do not feel at liberty, if I were able to do so, to stand in the way of his wish, and therefore I say that upon the centennial bill being disposed of I shall ask the Senate to take up these other bills, all Senators observing that my purpose will be accomplished in a very short time, because unless it be the pleasure of the Senate to accept the bills as they stand, they must fail, and accepting them, of course the consideration will be very brief. They will not stand in the way of the Senator from Maine or anybody else. He will see that final action in substance must result one way or the other immediately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York gives notice that after the centennial bill is disposed of, he will move that the Senate proceed to consider the bills reported from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and will ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bills be dispensed with.

Mr. BOREMAN. I give notice that as soon as the bills referred to by the Senator from New York are disposed of, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 44) to establish the Territory of Pembina, and to provide a temporary government therefor.

Mr. RAMSEY. I want to appeal to the Senator from New York to allow me to call up the bill (S. No. 651) to provide for the transmission of correspondence by telegraph before the matter comes up of which he gives notice.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. RAMSEY. I ask the Senator to allow me to call up this bill when the time comes, in lieu of the bill to which he refers.

Mr. CONKLING. What is it?

Mr. RAMSEY. It is the bill to provide for the transmission of correspondence by telegraph.

Mr. CONKLING. The franking privilege being now disposed of and this lying next to that in the heart of the Senator, of course we shall all rush as he will to the consideration of that bill, whenever it is convenient for the Senate to do so.

Mr. RAMSEY. I understand, then, that the Senator will allow me to call up this bill in lieu of the one he proposes to take up? [Laughter.]

Mr. CONKLING. I will hold on to mine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the centennial bill, so-called?

Mr. SARGENT. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the centennial bill.

Mr. SARGENT. Is that motion debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is debatable within the rule, not affecting the merits of the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, by joint resolution of both Houses the time has been fixed for the adjournment of Congress, and it is very obvious unless Congress pays attention to the great and pressing matters which are before it, to the exclusion of mere fanciful or doubtful schemes, we shall be compelled to rescind the resolution by which we agreed to adjourn on the 22d of June, or else to leave very much important public business undisposed of.

For several days the centennial matter was debated in the Senate. There was a full and fair discussion upon it. The necessity of an appropriation by Congress to carry out the centennial scheme was urged upon our attention by all the arguments which the able Senators from Pennsylvania could produce, re-enforced by pamphlets and personal solicitation by outsiders, who pressed upon us in every direction about the Capitol and our homes; and, notwithstanding, the Senate, by a two-thirds vote save one, with the obvious intention of killing the bill, referred it to the Committee on Appropriations. There can be no doubt of the purpose of the Senate in the vote which it took at that time. The consummation of that vote was most strenuously resisted by the Senators from Pennsylvania and all the friends of the centennial bill in Congress and out of it, under the representation that such action would be to destroy the chance of any success of this scheme and entirely destroy any hopes of its realization.

After that careful and elaborate debate, which at that early stage of the session we were able to give the subject, it seems to me that it is not wisdom to bring up the proposition again toward the close of the session, when we are crowded by important business of the highest character, without time sufficiently to deliberate, under the speculative idea that the Senate may be induced to reverse its well-considered opinion at that time, not upon any new arguments that have been advanced or any new showing made, but upon the bald, naked skeleton of facts which then was held up to the Senate. Not a fact has happened within the last month and a half relating to centennial matters which was not then known and discussed during that debate. There is not an argument which can now be made in this body which was not then presented to the Senate. Ability and ingenuity were both exhausted in lauding the scheme and in pressing it upon the Treasury of the United States.

Sir, this scheme is not more attractive now than it was then. It demands no less a sum from the Treasury of the United States now than it did then. It is no less now than before an inappropriate celebration of the centennial anniversary of national independence. It is no less true now than it was then that Congress had declared by successive bills that under no circumstances whatever should it become a charge against the Treasury of the United States. All these considerations of force then are of force now. In view of all these facts I ask if Senators are disposed to occupy the time of the Senate for several days to come, as must be the case if it is insisted upon, in the consideration of this bill. There certainly need to be some potent arguments advanced in favor of it to so influence the minds of Senators, and under the rules those arguments cannot now be advanced, because the merits of the proposition cannot be discussed on the pending motion. The simple proposition before the Senate is, shall we from importunity inside these Halls or outside of them give more time to the discussion of this matter, which heretofore we have discussed so amply and which we fondly hoped we had disposed of at least for this session, and certainly many of us hoped forever?

Now, sir, I am opposed to this. I am opposed to this bill in every stage of its progress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that is discussing the merits of the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I am opposed to taking up this bill, and to its passage; and now, at one stage of the progress of the bill, I make these objections. When in order I shall say that I shall oppose the bill in other stages of its progress, and give reasons therefor.

Mr. CAMERON. I do not know whether I shall be out of order when I state a conversation which took place between the Senator who has just spoken and myself in regard to this bill in committee.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would not state that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the Senator should not disclose what took place in committee.

Mr. CAMERON. I think it is but fair that I should say that a member of that committee agreed to make the report which is here now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that is out of order. The transactions of a committee are privileged and secret.

Mr. CAMERON. I suppose I may say that the bill provides that in no event——

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I suppose it is in order to have the bill read for information. Let it be read for information from the desk.

Mr. CAMERON. I will first state that the bill provides "that the United States shall not be liable, directly or indirectly, for any expenses attending such exposition, or by reason of the same;" and I may say also that the people of Pennsylvania will carry on this exhibition themselves if they are prohibited from expecting any money from the United States by the bill. Now I ask that the bill be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill and the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will make a single observation. I think, under all the circumstances, the Senate ought to take this bill up at the present time and settle it one way or the other.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that I shall vote to take up the bill because I believe the Senators from Pennsylvania and others who have this matter in charge ought to be heard on this subject before the Senate. I do that, however, without being committed to the bill. I have heretofore been opposed to it, and I expect to vote against it when it comes up; but I will do this in justice to Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That borders on discussion of its merits.

Mr. SCOTT. There is one reason why I wish this bill taken up, and I will endeavor to state it, and I think it ought to be taken up if there were no other reason. The Senate has been told that we ought not to take it up because it is a doubtful or fanciful scheme, because it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations with the obvious intention of killing the bill, because it is now sought to be taken up through importunity; and I wish the opportunity of showing that all these reasons are not correct, and I think it is due to those who are interested in this measure that after such reasons having been assigned for its not being considered, the bill ought to be considered at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to take up the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 34, nays 8; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Boreman, Boutwell, Buckingham, Cameron, Carpenter, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Jones, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Patterson, Ramsey, Robertson, Saulsbury, Scott, Spencer, Sprague, Washburn, West, and Windom—34.

NAYS—Messrs. Edmunds, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Pratt, Sargent, Tipton, and Wadleigh—8.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Bogy, Brownlow, Chandler, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Howe, Johnston, Kelly, Lewis, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Pease, Ransom, Schurz, Sherman, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, and Wright—31.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1394) in relation to the centennial exhibition.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment to add the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the United States shall not be liable, directly or indirectly, for any expenses attending such exposition, or by reason of the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I certainly do not want to interfere with this bill of the Committee on Appropriations, but the reading of it reminds me of a description a friend of mine gave to me of it this morning. He said, "I invite you to dinner with me to-morrow, but you must dine at your own expense." It reads thus:

That the President of the United States be requested to extend, in the name of the United States, a respectful and cordial invitation to the governments of other nations to be represented and take part in the international exposition to be held at Philadelphia, under the auspices of the Government of the United States, in the year 1876: Provided, however, That the United States shall not be liable, directly or indirectly, for any expenses attending such exposition, or by reason of the same.

We invite our foreign fellow-nations to attend a grand repast and dinner on the 4th of July, 1876, with a proviso that it shall be at their own expense. Mr. President, I move to strike out the proviso of this bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Has not that just been adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that it has been.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is the motion in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator raise a point of order on the amendment?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I raise that question, whether the proviso having just been adopted, it is not now in order to strike it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not if the point is made.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do make the point. Mr. President, there is more apparent than real wit in the comment that the friend of my honorable friend from Vermont lavished upon the bill this morning. There is a little bit of history connected with this bill which renders it readily to be understood that there is no very essential wit in that remark.

The necessity for this bill is supposed to arise in the minds of the centennial commission, from the assumed fact that a misapprehension exists in the governments abroad as to the real relation of the Government of the United States to the international exposition contemplated in the act of 1871. It is said that owing to certain transactions on the part of the State Department—very proper in themselves I think, and which do not in any sense whatever reflect on that Department—the American representatives abroad had got the impression, and had communicated it to foreign governments, that this was not a Government affair; and the inference drawn from that was that the Government of the United States was anxious to rid itself of all connection with it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have you any papers showing that fact?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am only saying at this moment what the understanding of the centennial commission is and not saying whether that is the fact or not. They assert that they are greatly embarrassed by that fact. Hence the necessity for this bill. They think it is necessary. Under these circumstances it came from the House of Representatives to obviate that supposed necessity, either real or imaginary. It is known to members here that the Senate hesitated to adopt it and sent it to the Committee on Appropriations, not to ascertain that fact particularly, but I suppose to consider all the facts that were properly to be considered in connection with the whole subject.

Now, Mr. President, I am only to allude to two or three principal facts in this case, in order to explain the views of the committee on this subject. Beyond all question, the Congress of the United States is committed by the act of 1871 to the holding of an international exposition by way of celebrating the centennial anniversary of the declaration of independence. It is so expressly declared. I will read the first section:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That an exhibition of American and foreign arts, products, and manufactures shall be held, under the auspices of the Government of the United States, in the city of Philadelphia, in the year 1876.

It would not seem that the question of the propriety or fitness, so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, of holding an international exposition by way of celebrating the centennial of the declaration of independence, is now an open question. Congress in the most solemn manner did declare that fact. That is a principal fact lying at the foundation of any consideration of this question. And it provided for certain other things in connection with it to that end. Having declared that, it provided for a centennial commission, which commission was authorized to make rules and regulations to provide for the exposition, &c. Thereupon the President of the United States was requested, such rules and regulations having been authorized and certain other proceedings having been had by the centennial commission, to make public proclamation and to direct the Secretary of State to communicate those facts and the principal facts that such international exposition would be held under the auspices of the Government of the United States in 1876, in the city of Philadelphia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does the Senator understand to be the meaning of the word "auspices?" What is it to be "under the auspices of the Government of the United States?"

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Under its favor, under its sanction, under its authority to some extent, probably; but there is no reason to doubt what it means in this case. It does not mean that it is to be under the direction of the Government of the United States. It is under its sanction. It is not left, I think, if you look into the history of the two acts of Congress, in any doubt whatever as to the actual condition of the Government of the United States. It intended to favor, it intended to promote it indirectly by its good offices, to sanction it and promote it by its good offices, taking care at the same time, in the same acts, to say that it would not be involved in any of the expenses which might arise out of that transaction.

Having declared in the act of 1871 that such international exposition should be held under the auspices of the Government of the United States, it went on to provide the machinery for carrying out this enterprise. I may say here that the Government of the United States was not swift to move in the enterprise. It originated in 1870. In December, I think, of that year a memorial was presented to both Houses of Congress from the State of Pennsylvania, the city of Philadelphia, and the Franklin Institute of that city, proposing this international exhibition by way of celebration. As I have already stated, Congress seems to have adopted it and declared accordingly in 1871. Having provided for this, and having provided also that the Government of the United States should incur no expenditures in regard to it, that its Treasury should not be involved directly or indirectly in any expenses attending it whatever, it became necessary to provide the ways and means for holding this international exposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Notwithstanding the legislation to which the Senator refers, like this proviso, that the United States should not be involved in any expense, were we not immediately applied to and urged to make provision for the expenses by the same people?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I am not aware of anything of this sort until this session, when there has been a strenuous effort——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is not the Senator aware that on an appropriation bill within two or three years past there was an attempt to make provision for $20,000 for the printing of this centennial commission stock?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If that was ever brought to my attention it has escaped my recollection entirely; but it may be so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a fact.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But, Mr. President, it will be seen by what took place in 1872 that the Government of the United States did not undertake any part of the expenditures; but on the other hand, while it declared that this great exhibition might take place under its auspices, and in the language of the act that it should be held under its auspices, and that it would extend to it its good offices, it did provide in the original bill that the Government should not be liable for any of the expenses. By the act of 1872, which is an act of incorporation of a company called the centennial board of finance, the ways and means were provided; and a reference to that act shows clearly that the Government of the United States in 1872 was still carrying out its purpose, extending its good offices, but at the same time not involving the Treasury of the United States in any expenditure. By that bill it will be seen that for the means to carry on this enterprise an appeal was to be made to the American people, and very properly I think. So this act incorporated certain gentlemen in different parts of the country, whose business it was to be to sell the stock necessary to raise the funds, to wit, some $10,000,000, supposed to be sufficient to carry out the enterprise.

The present bill came to the Committee on Appropriations under these circumstances. They came to the conclusion that there was no liability on the part of the Government incurred to make any expenditures in this behalf. On the other hand, it did seem to the committee that the Government had gone so far in the declaration that this international exposition should be holden under its auspices, that it was hardly expedient to say, under all the circumstances, after all that had been done on the part of Pennsylvania and the people of the country, that Congress would withdraw its sanction and refuse to pass an act which those who are managing the matter under its auspices really believe to be essential.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator what he means by Congress withdrawing its sanction? Have we been asked to pass any bill repealing what we had done?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Perhaps I am not quite accurate in my statement as to withdrawing its sanction. Perhaps I did not express myself very felicitously in saying that Congress is asked to withdraw its favor. In other words, these people understand, as I have already stated, that the relations of the Government of the United States to this enterprise are misunderstood abroad.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What evidence has the Senator of that?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The evidence that our representatives abroad say so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator read us a letter from any representative of that kind?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have not got any here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has the Senator seen any?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir; I have seen the debates in the other House of Congress, and I have numerous statements here to that effect from persons who have come before the committee, and I think there is one in the volume before me.

The committee under all the circumstances, as these people believed they were embarrassed in foreign countries from the fact that a misapprehension had sprung up there as to whether the Government of the United States intended to countenance this enterprise or not, whether it was being carried on by a private corporation, or whether it was under the auspices of the Government, believed it but a reasonable thing that the Government should make that clear, and at the same time reserve its original position that it would not involve the Treasury of the United States in the expenditures.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is this the relief that these people, as the Senator calls them, applied for to Congress in the first instance, or was it something else that they insisted we should do?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have no knowledge of anything prior to that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was the bill that was debated before? Was it this bill?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This is the bill—the bill now before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was there no application for assistance in the way of funds?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. None whatever, that I am aware of.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that the centennial commission, or this corporation, as the Senator understands, have always faithfully observed the provisions of the old act of Congress which gave them existence, in not undertaking to call upon the United States, or authorize anybody else to do so, to furnish any funds for this affair.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is sufficient for me to say that there is no proposition of that kind before the Committee on Appropriations; and there is none that I am aware of in this body.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator understand himself that this proviso is understood by all parties, the applicants and all, as being a real provision which is to free us hereafter from any demands upon the Treasury?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I understand this——

Mr. CAMERON. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let me hear the Senator from Maine first.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My understanding is that there is no liability on the part of the Government of the United States whatever; but as this is a distinct proposition to give an invitation in distinct terms, the Committee on Appropriations, believing that the Government of the United States ought to keep its original position intact, thought it worth while to make this declaration of the Government that it would not be responsible, in order to be in harmony with the original proposition of the Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do I understand the Senator to mean that the people who ask for this legislation in aid of their enterprise are satisfied with this proviso and assent to the understanding that the United States is not to be responsible in any way in point of money, but only to give the concern its favor and friendly good offices in the way provided by this bill?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My friend——

Mr. EDMUNDS. This a matter between a private corporation and the United States, and I want to know for one precisely what the real truth is about the terms on which this act is to be accepted.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I will state to the Senator with the utmost candor what I believe on this subject. These people came before the committee and were told that as this was a proposition before the Committee on Appropriations, the Senate of the United States might probably think it had some relation to appropriations, either present or prospective, and that they would be good enough to tell us exactly the condition of their finances, the condition of the whole enterprise, what their prospects were in regard to it, how much funds they had, what the expenses of the whole enterprise would be, how far they had resources, and what their reliance was. It was apparent that the gentlemen connected with this enterprise were looking to the Congress of the United States for some aid, because at the very time when this bill was before the committee a bill to that effect had been introduced into the other branch, if I may be permitted to allude to it, for an appropriation of $3,000,000. It could hardly therefore be disguised from the committee or from this body that these people would be very glad if Congress could see its way clear to aid the enterprise by an appropriation in money; but that is not necessarily involved in this proposition. Morally it may be; and that is for each Senator to judge for himself. The committee did not feel authorized under all the circumstances to report the bill back and recommend its passage, without an express declaration on the face of it that it should not be construed to mean an appropriation either present or prospective.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But does or does not the Senator understand, as he has been in communication with these gentlemen, that notwithstanding this proviso, if it turns out that they do not have funds enough to meet the results of the operation, they will apply to Congress to make up the deficiency in the end?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What their understanding on that subject is, I have no right to say. I do not think myself that it is at all beyond the probabilities that they may come back to Congress another year and ask for an appropriation.

Mr. CAMERON. I wish the Senator from Maine would let me reply to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. With great pleasure.

Mr. CAMERON. I say that this bill will be accepted in good faith. I do not believe that the people of Pennsylvania will ever ask for one cent. I assure the Senator if I am here as a Senator, as I likely shall be, I will not ask for one cent, nor will I in any way be accessory to passing any appropriation for this purpose.

It will be remembered that this bill when it was here originally was placed in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations against the wishes of the friends of the bill. About the same time there was a bill pending in the House proposing an appropriation of $3,000,000. That bill was defeated, and after its defeat the people of Philadelphia and the people of Pennsylvania went to work in their own way to raise the money among themselves. They have subscribed $4,570,000, and I feel sure that if they get no help from other States the State of Pennsylvania will foot the bill and pay it.

This proviso was put into the bill by my consent. Representing the people of Philadelphia who have charge of this affair, I went to the committee and I was told by a member of the committee that he would agree to report the bill if he might be permitted to make such an amendment as has been presented. So it is before the Senate now, only asking authority to carry out the machinery of two separate bills enacted by Congress heretofore.

I ask the Clerk to read the paper sent here by the gentlemen in charge of the exhibition which expresses their views and wishes probably better than I can, and then perhaps I will say a word more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The communication will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, May 21, 1874.

To the honorable the Senate of the United States:

The memorial of the United States centennial commission, in session at Philadelphia, respectfully shows:

That by act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, the President was authorized to appoint a commission "whose duty it should be to prepare and superintend the execution of a plan for holding an exhibition of American and foreign arts, products, and manufactures under the auspices of the Government of the United States." That your memorialists were duly appointed such commissioners by the President, and that the especial duty imposed on them by the act creating them was to conduct an exhibition the great feature of which should be its international character. In all of their official acts since organization, they have recognized and proceeded upon this idea. That the same act provided for a proclamation by the President of the United States of the fact of such an exhibition being determined upon and the communication of such proclamation to foreign governments through the Department of State. In accordance with this provision, the President, on the 3d of July, 1873, issued his proclamation "cordially commending the celebration and exhibition in behalf of the United States to all nations," and the State Department communicated the same to all nations, together with the regulations adopted by the commission. That numerous foreign governments, acting on the proclamation and believing from it as well as from the words of the act which authorized its issuance, have accepted what they supposed to be an invitation from the Government of the United States; while in our own country patriotic citizens have subscribed largely to the stock of the board of finance under the belief that they were contributing to the holding of an international exhibition.

On the 3d of November, 1873, after the proclamation had been communicated and accepted and the subscriptions made, the Secretary of State, influenced by a sense of official duty, issued instructions to the diplomatic representatives of the country, directing them to explain to the several governments to which they were accredited that the Government of the United States had extended no invitation to them to participate in the proclaimed exhibition, and subsequently the duties connected with the international exhibition were transferred to the Department of the Interior. By this action the only channel through which the commission could carry out the duty imposed on it with foreign nations has been closed, the means necessary to the successful conduct of an international exhibition taken away, and the holding of such an exhibition rendered impossible. Unless this channel be reopened, it is idle for them to attempt to secure any representation from other nations. The result of such an action is too clearly evident. The international feature must of necessity be abandoned; the subscriptions heretofore made be either lost or greatly endangered, and the official duty of your memorialists crippled and their functions destroyed. Having acted under the sanction of the very words of the acts of Congress and under the indorsement of the solemn proclamation of the President, on a line of policy consistent since their organization, your memorialists now find themselves in a position in which either honorable retreat or further advance is impossible. They would therefore earnestly pray your honorable body to take immediate action on the bill now pending before the Senate, which is designed to remove the obstacle now interposed, which is entitled "An act relating to the centennial celebration." Unless a decision is made during the present session, its future passage would come too late to secure the object desired.

If, therefore, it is the intention of your honorable body to have the commission continue to discharge the duty originally imposed upon it, your memorialists feel they have the right to respectfully ask the immediate passage of the pending bill to enable them to conduct an international exhibition. And they will ever pray, &c.

In obedience to the unanimous vote of the commission.

JOS. R. HAWLEY,
President United States Centennial Commission.
A. T. GOSHORN,
Director-General.
JOHN L. CAMPBELL,
Secretary.

Mr. CAMERON. I now return the floor to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I was about to state one or two facts probably in regard to the situation of affairs in connection with this enterprise, which I think due to the parties who are managing it. It may be some answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Vermont also, as to the probable fear of any liability of the Government hereafter. I do not think the Government is under any liability; and I think so far as this action is concerned it will be kept in that status; but as to the probability that Congress will be called upon hereafter, he has the assurance of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and he can judge of the probabilities from the general statement I will make.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, if the Senator will excuse me, perhaps I can save him the trouble of making any further speech on that subject. Certainly after what the Senator from Pennsylvania has stated, speaking for these gentlemen and pledging their faith, and that of the citizens of the State of Pennsylvania whom he represents, to the fact that this proviso is a real one and not a device, and that it is intended to express the mutual idea that these gentlemen take this concern upon their own pecuniary responsibility with no expectation or intention of calling upon us, and that we understand it alike on both sides, there is certainly not a word of criticism to be made or fault to be found with the position of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. From all I have seen, I think the gentlemen connected with this international exposition are men of the very highest respectability and are acting in the utmost candor and good faith toward the Government of the United States. That is my belief about it, and they have made very great advances in this enterprise. I will state in a brief word or two their resources at the present time. I understand them to be in detail something like this: The State of Pennsylvania has appropriated $1,000,000. The city of Philadelphia has appropriated half a million. These appropriations are for the specific object of an art building. They are not exactly in harmony with the purposes of the centennial commission, not exactly what it would desire they should be; but as an art building was necessary, although the erection of this building is under the government of the State of Pennsylvania and is only so far subjected to the control of the commission as to be auxiliary, still they estimate its value, and I believe its value to the exposition is perhaps half a million dollars. That, therefore, I put down at $500,000. Then there is a general subscription of $1,574,440 which I estimate at $1,000,000; they estimate it more largely.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why is this material to us after what the Senator from Pennsylvania has said?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Perhaps it may not be material to the Senator from Vermont; but other gentlemen may take a different view of it, and if he will pardon me I will make my statement.

The additional subscription of citizens are put at $150,000; then guaranteed by the citizens of Philadelphia to the general subscription $250,000. Then by an ordinance of the city councils of Philadelphia of April 3, 1874, $1,000,000. The State of New Jersey has voted $100,000, and an additional subscription of $40,000. Here are in all $3,040,000, which I think, so far as we have evidence upon the subject, may be relied upon as a fund contributed toward this enterprise. These are the real resources, what they call and deem actual resources, and which I think rest upon very probable certainties.

Then the prospective revenues are estimated from admissions at $2,500,000. I think that is a little large. From an examination of the receipts of other exhibitions my own judgment is that they will not realize more than $2,000,000 from this source. Then from the sale of the old buildings they estimate $500,000 more, making in all, actual and prospective, $5,540,000. The original estimate of expenditures was between eight and nine millions, but upon a revision of the estimates, made by the centennial commission, they have reduced the expenditures to $6,100,000, which they believe will cover the entire expense.

If I am right in supposing that they have real subscriptions of $3,040,000, you will see that they have provided already, from the State of Pennsylvania and the city of Philadelphia chiefly, for one-half the funds, and prospectively, according to my estimate arising from the receipts for admissions, $2,000,000, and from the sale of buildings, $500,000, to be added to the $3,040,000. Thus it will be seen that, actually and prospectively, these parties, if they keep themselves within their estimates, have provided within less than a million of dollars for the entire expenditures of the whole enterprise. Gentlemen must judge for themselves as to the probability of its being kept within these sums.

I do not know, Mr. President, as the Senator from Vermont suggests, that that is very material in any way except that it does disclose this fact, that these people have not come back to Congress having done nothing. They have done much. In the line of the enterprise indicated by Congress they have gone forward, and they believe that without any aid whatever from Congress they can make it a success if Congress will continue to give it the favor of its countenance and its friendly auspices.

Mr. ALCORN. Mr. President, the purposes and objects of this centennial exposition are of themselves commendable. Being called upon to vote, however, on the bill that is now before the Senate, and not being able to give it my approval in the form in which it stands, I propose briefly to state the reasons.

The bill starts out with a "whereas," and declares that—

> Whereas at various international exhibitions which have been held in foreign countries the United States have been represented in pursuance of invitations given by the governments of those countries and accepted by our Government—

Then comes this—

> That the President be requested to extend, in the name of the United States, a respectful and cordial invitation to the governments of other nations to be represented and take part in the international exposition to be held at Philadelphia, under the auspices of the Government of the United States, in the year 1876: Provided, however, That the United States shall not be liable, directly or indirectly for any expenses attending such exposition, or by reason of the same.

Standing across the ocean and reading an act like this, with a proviso like this, I should take it to be a Yankee trick, that was intended to get me here for the purpose of getting some advantage of me. I might, if I were somewhere else, use language even so strong as a Senator suggests, when he whispers "to pick my pocket." I know very well that no such thing is intended. I know very well the patriotic motive that moves gentlemen to go forward in this measure; but I do protest that the Government of the United States shall not put itself in an attitude before the world of laying itself liable to an imputation like this.

Why, sir, I have heard it said here that there are precedents for almost every character of legislation; but I should like to know whether any antiquarian here can find a precedent for legislation of this description. In the legislation of all the nations of this earth I ask whether there can be found an invitation given under the authority of any sovereign or power and given cordially to the other nations to come to it for the purpose of exhibiting their workmanship, their manufactures, their productive industries, and at the same time to remind them of the fact that they must pay their own expenses, and that if expenses shall be incurred in the exhibition, to remember the fact that the Government inviting them stands not forth to protect them against the extortions that may be practiced upon them?

This exposition will be attended with large expense. I contend that if the Government of the United States intends to invite people from abroad, if the Government of the United States through its President intends to extend an invitation to foreign powers to come here and witness the exhibition, even though it may not intend to pay the expenses, it should not put forth the declaration that it will not at the same time that the invitation is given.

The honorable Senator from Vermont stated the case, and he stated it well when he said that it was like inviting a gentleman to dine with you, and notifying him at the same time that he should dine at his own expense. I repeat, if the Government of the United States intends to invite foreign nations to come here and witness and attend this exhibition, the Government of the United States owes it to itself to be ready to foot the bill necessary to make the exposition such as represents the hospitality, such as represents the character, such as represents the wealth of this great nation. If the occasion is one worthy to be commemorated in this manner, I say it is worthy to be celebrated in the name of the nation in a due and proper form, and let the nation pledge itself, at the same time that the invitation is given, that the guests who shall respond to that invitation will be treated as the guests of the nation, and will receive that care and attention and that comfort which the nation will owe to them. When these people come from abroad in response to the invitation that is extended to them, they come here guests of this nation, they are under the protection of this nation, they are under the care and here by the courtesy of the nation; and it is an insult to them to say that they shall when they come here pay their own expenses, and that the Government of the United States will not, under any circumstances, be bound for one single dime of the expenses that they may incur while they are here.

With this bill standing before the Senate, with this proviso as it is, I for one shall vote against it. The Senator from Pennsylvania states that he accepts the proviso. He accepts it in behalf of the people of the city of Philadelphia and of the State of Pennsylvania. That is well. For myself, representing a separate constituency upon this floor, however tenderly I may regard the feelings of the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania and the people of the city of Philadelphia, I will not commit my constituents to any such invitation as this.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not wish to prolong this discussion, but simply to remove what was not intended as an imputation, but may be considered as such, upon the conduct of some gentlemen heretofore in this case. It was stated that as soon as the act of 1872 was passed they came here asking for an appropriation for expenses. That is a misapprehension. There was a provision in the bill incorporating the centennial board of finance that the Secretary of the Treasury should issue certificates, and there was an item in an appropriation bill intended to cover that; but the centennial board of finance never came here asking anything for themselves.

My colleague has been in consultation with the Senator in charge of this measure, and has seen proper to state that he accepts this proviso disclaiming the liability of the United States for expenses, the same proviso which is in the original bill; and he has gone further and stated that, so far as Philadelphia and Pennsylvania are concerned, he will never come here to ask anything for this measure. He of course states what he feels himself authorized to state. There are many others connected with this exposition, commissioners for all the thirty-seven States, who are in Philadelphia, and who go to Philadelphia, and whose expenses have been borne by the money contributed by Pennsylvania and Philadelphia for carrying on this national and international enterprise; and so far from pledging myself to any particular course of action in the future, I shall hold myself ready to do and vote as I believe right upon any application that may come from any place outside of Pennsylvania upon this question.

The bill, as we now have it, disclaims any liability by reason of this act, as it did by reason of the former act; and it is accepted by my colleague, and I have no doubt in entire good faith, as the original act was accepted; and I trust when this invitation shall be given in pursuance of this act, it is the last time we shall hear of this bill or anything else connected with it in the Senate or anywhere else in Congress. That is my hope.

Mr. HAGER. Mr. President, I have no desire to take any part in the debate, if it may be called such, upon this bill; but I do desire to propose one amendment. I have heretofore voted against any effort that has been made to obtain an appropriation from the Government toward an international centennial exhibition. I would favor an appropriation for a centennial celebration simply as such; but when it is made international, it has lost its character as an American institution in my estimation. When we come together one hundred years after the enunciation of the Declaration of Independence to celebrate so important an event as that centennial, it should be, in my opinion, entirely national; and when we make it international by inviting the crowned heads of Europe or others to join us in that celebration, we depart from what should be the proper purpose of the occasion. It is not an occasion for the parade of royalty. It is not an occasion to contrast republican institutions with the monarchical. It is simply a celebration of the triumph of the American idea of government, which is that republican in form as contradistinguished from the monarchical or the imperial.

For that reason, and that alone, I have heretofore voted against any appropriation for or any apparent recognition on the part of the Government of an international celebration of the Fourth of July. If it had been simply an American institution, as I said before, I would have cheerfully voted for an appropriation, believing that the Government would be empowered to make an appropriation of that kind, in accordance with precedents which had been heretofore well established. If we can make an appropriation for a statue, we can make an appropriation, in my opinion, for the celebration of the Fourth of July on an occasion like this centennial

But I propose to strike out the clause "under the auspices of the Government of the United States." I do not wish it to be regarded as under the auspices of the United States unless it be really under the auspices of the United States. It is a celebration that is to be conducted by the sovereign State of Pennsylvania, as I understand, and not by the United States; and so let it stand as a celebration on the part of the sovereign State of Pennsylvania, with the consent of the Government of the United States, in pursuance of the law that now stands on the statute-book. I have seen some of these expositions, and I am very well satisfied that they are very expensive affairs, and that they are attended with a great deal of trouble. I am fearful that this will be a failure, inasmuch as it is to be international, and is to be a failure for want of funds, so far as I can see. I do not wish to say anything that is calculated to damage the matter.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Allow me to call the Senator's attention to the act of 1871, with a view of seeing whether his proposition is quite in harmony with that act:

Be it enacted, &c., That an exhibition of American and foreign arts, products, and manufactures shall be held, under the auspices of the Government of the United States, in the city of Philadelphia, in the year 1876.

Does the Senator propose to repeal that act?

Mr. HAGER. No, sir. I remember that that is in the law now; but does it not provide for an invitation to be extended to foreign nations?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Not in words.

Mr. HAGER. On the happening of certain contingencies.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Substantially I think it does.

Mr. HAGER. At all events if this clause be in the law as it stands, why repeat it? Why re-enact it? It might be argued that inasmuch as the Government has again passed an act by which it appears that this exposition or exhibition is to be held under the auspices of the Government an appropriation should be made for it in an appropriation bill; and I presume that will be the next step. Somebody, perhaps not the Senators from Pennsylvania after what has been declared here to-day, but some other sympathetic Senator or Member of the House, will propose in some appropriation bill an appropriation to carry out this international exhibition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California to strike out the words "under the auspices of the Government of the United States."

Mr. MORTON. It seems to me to be very plain that the bill now before us is but a re-enactment of what has been made a law before, the necessity for which is given in the explanation made by the Senator from Maine, on account of a circular subsequently addressed by the Secretary of State to foreign nations to which communication had before been made. The proviso is in these words:

That the United States shall not be liable, directly or indirectly, for any expense attending such exposition or by reason of the same.

The seventh section of the act of March 3, 1871, contains this language:

And the United States shall not be liable for any expenses attending such exhibition or by reason of the same.

So far, that is a mere re-enactment of what goes before. This invitation which is to be extended to foreign nations to attend this international exhibition to be held at Philadelphia, under the auspices of the Government of the United States, is a re-enactment almost in terms of a portion of the act of March 3, 1871, which declared "that an exhibition of American and foreign arts, products, and manufactures shall be held under the auspices of the Government of the United States in the city of Philadelphia in the year 1876."

We have heard a great deal of late in regard to good faith and national faith, without very much occasion for it; but the national faith is very fully and very strongly committed to this international exhibition at Philadelphia. In the preamble of the first act, in the preamble of the second act, and almost in every section of both acts this exposition is described as being international in its character. That was the central idea with which the exposition started out, and we cannot now take from it that character without at least being guilty, I think, of a breach of faith toward the people of Pennsylvania and of other States who have subscribed their money, and have already gone to large expense and great trouble upon the strength of what has been done by the Government of the United States.

Mr. HAGER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a minute?

Mr. MORTON. Certainly.

Mr. HAGER. I did not undertake to take any position contrary to what the Senator has stated, but merely to explain my views why I would oppose an appropriation for an exhibition of that character, it being international. I do not dispute that such was the law on the statute-book; but I said that I would not favor an international exhibition, but would a simply national one. I was explaining my own position.

Mr. MORTON. I understood the Senator so to state. So far as the international character of this exhibition is concerned the Government cannot be committed to it any more fully than it is now, except by making an appropriation of money. We agreed in the act of 1871 that it should be under the auspices of the Government of the United States; but that act contained the condition that this act does, that it should be at somebody else's expense. We were willing to lend our name and invite them, but it was not to be at the expense of the Government of the United States. I will not say that this was remarkably liberal and generous in the beginning; but I simply mean to say that the bill now before the Senate does not change in the least the character of this undertaking.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall not deny that the law warrants to some extent the idea which is contended for by the Senator from Indiana. It may be that a proper construction of the language of the act of 1871 perhaps warrants the idea that the Congress at that time contemplated that this proposed celebration should not only be international but also under the auspices of the Government. I am not prepared to say but that the language of the act of 1871 would warrant such a construction; but so far there has been no proceeding under the law of 1871 that commits the Government either to the expenditure of money for the purpose of a celebration or commits it to foreign powers by any invitation to join in any celebration.

The Senator from Indiana insists that the proclamation of the President issued under the authority of that act did commit the Government of the United States to the invitation which he supposes him to have extended in that proclamation to foreign governments to attend and to participate. That is not the view, I think, which is taken of it by the Executive Department of this Government. I have before me the letter of the Secretary of State directed to the diplomatic officers of the United States abroad, in which he says:

I regret to find that misapprehension has arisen in a certain quarter as to the meaning of the proclamation of the President, of the 3d of July last, relative to the centennial exposition, to be held in Philadelphia, in commemoration of the declaration of the independence of the United States. It is therefore deemed necessary to make the following communication for your information and guidance.

And then the Secretary of State makes use of this language:

It will be observed that the President in his proclamation has extended no invitation to foreign powers to participate in the exhibition. He was not authorized so to do; and, while he desires to attract as much attention and interest as possible thereto, he carefully confines himself to "commending" the celebration of the centennial anniversary of American independence, and the exhibition which is to be held in connection therewith, to all nations who may be pleased to take part therein.

I therefore differ with the construction put upon that proclamation by the Senator from Indiana. The executive department of this Government did not understand the proclamation issued by the President as extending any invitation; and when they found that this proclamation had by some of our foreign consular and diplomatic agents been misinterpreted, the Secretary of State immediately issued his circular to correct any such misapprehension on their part; so that, so far as the executive department of the Government is concerned, it is not committed to the measure by extending invitations to any foreign government to be represented at the celebration.

Mr. MORTON. I ask my friend if the whole act of 1871 and the act of 1872 are not essentially in their nature an invitation—the acts of Congress themselves?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The acts of Congress themselves could not be an invitation to foreign powers. Those acts only on their face propose that the President should issue a proclamation and, according to the construction of the Senator from Indiana, extend an invitation; but our statutes are no invitations to foreign powers. If they are, then wherefore the necessity for the present enactment authorizing and requesting the President to extend invitations? None, as I conceive.

So far, therefore, as the proclamation of the President is concerned, and so far as the statutes of this country are concerned in reference to this subject, there has been no invitation extended to foreign powers, and certainly so far as that part of the argument of the Senator from Indiana is concerned it falls to the ground because it is not sustained by the facts in this case.

Then are we committed by the statutes passed in connection with this subject to the expenditure of money? There is an express exclusion of that idea in the statutes themselves, just as there is in this bill. Therefore we are not committed to the expenditure of money to the persons having charge of this matter, nor are we committed by the statutes we have enacted, or by the President's proclamation, or by anything that has been done by the executive department to foreign powers by any invitation extended.

If that is true, we are left to judge of this matter upon its merits without any reference to what has taken place under the act of 1871. And now I come to that point. Shall we by this bill now commit ourselves to foreign governments by directing the President to extend to them an invitation; and will not such an invitation extended under the authority of Congress by the President of the United States commit us not only to foreign governments that the exhibition shall be all that shall comport with the dignity and character of this Government, but will it not impliedly commit us to the expenditure of money to make it so? Most unquestionably both these results will follow. When this bill proposes to direct the President of the United States "to extend in the name of the United States a respectful and cordial invitation to the government of other nations to be represented and take part in the international exposition to be held in Philadelphia," we would by such action fully commit ourselves to every foreign government that that exposition to which they are invited shall not only comport with the true character and dignity of this country, but that it shall be such as to satisfy the just expectations of foreign powers who may choose to be represented. I say the moment we pass such a law, notwithstanding the disclaimer of any intention to make the Government responsible for any expenditure of money, we do stand pledged to foreign powers that the exposition shall be all that would be required to satisfy their just expectations; and that would be true even if the amendment of the Senator from California were adopted and the words were stricken out that it shall be "under the auspices of the General Government." The very fact that the invitation was extended would justify foreign powers in supposing that the Government of the United States intended that the celebration should be such as would be worthy of their visit to this country.

Then is it proper that we should by this legislation, by the passage of this bill, either directly or indirectly commit ourselves to the expenditure of the amount of money that would be necessary to make the exhibition such as it should be if invitations are extended to foreign powers? Now, sir, the Treasury of this country is not overflowing with money. The Treasury of this country is replenished by taxes drawn from the people. There is no surplus there now. In fact there is an apprehended deficit of the revenues of this country. Under these circumstances, with that fact staring us in the face, with the full knowledge that the money which must be appropriated by Congress to make this exposition such as it should be must be drawn from the people by taxation, is it proper and right, is it just to the people themselves, ninety-nine hundredths of whom cannot see this exhibition, is it just to the men who pay the money into the public Treasury which is to defray expense of this exhibition that we sitting here in the Halls of Congress should appropriate the necessary funds to make the exhibition all that it should be? I think not. Even if we had power under the Constitution to appropriate money for such a purpose, I believe that it would be impolitic, unwise, and inexpedient to make such an appropriation.

Sir, in taking this position I have no opposition to that celebration being held in Philadelphia if a celebration must be had. On the contrary, it is the proper point in my judgment to hold such an exhibition if one is to be held under the auspices of the Government of the United States. Personally I would prefer that it should be held there to any other point. If we go into this measure and determine to have under the auspices of the Government of the United States and at the expense of the United States an exposition, I believe that Philadelphia is the proper point where it should be held.

But now have we the authority? Is there any authority in the Constitution of the country to appropriate money for any such purpose? I think not. I have heard the arguments that have been made in this Chamber in reference to the power of Congress to appropriate money for such purposes, and I confess that I have not had any clause of the Constitution which would authorize the appropriation of money for such purposes pointed out. I know it has been claimed by some gentlemen that under the power, as they call it, to provide for the general welfare this money might be appropriated. Without going into what I conceive to be the true meaning of that clause of the Constitution, I may be permitted to say that I think there is a very great misapprehension in reference to what was meant by that clause in the Constitution which authorizes the collection of taxes to pay the debts and to provide for the general welfare and common defense. That clause occurred first in the Articles of Confederation, the eighth article providing—

> All charges of war, and all other expenses that shall be incurred for the common defense or general welfare, and allowed by the United States in Congress assembled, shall be defrayed out of the common Treasury.

The meaning in that connection of the Articles of Confederation was that the moneys paid into the Treasury by the Colonies should be appropriated for the common benefit of all the Colonies, should be paid out of a common fund to be furnished by the people of the different Colonies for the "general welfare" in contradistinction to local objects. That was the true meaning of it in the Articles of Confederation, and it was afterward transferred with the same meaning to the Constitution of the United States; and therefore under that clause, even considering it as a substantive grant of power, giving it the construction and meaning which it had at the time it was incorporated in the Constitution, there is nothing that would warrant the application of money for such purposes. I know that for various objects money has been appropriated by Congress perhaps as wholly indefensible as would be an appropriation to the object under consideration; and so you can find precedents for the appropriation of every dollar now or likely to be soon in the Treasury. In fact you could not keep any money in the Treasury if you took the precedents of appropriations as the rule of action in reference to this and other subjects.

I find no warrant, therefore, in the Constitution, and I disclaim the binding force of the precedents that have been cited for my action in reference to the vote I shall cast on this occasion. I cannot vote for this bill, because by so doing I should feel that I was committing the Government of the United States to the expenditure of money that I believe it has no right to expend in the first place, and second, that it would be unwise and impolitic to expend if we had the power, considering the present condition of the public Treasury and the finances of this country.

I have said, Mr. President, all that I desire to say in connection with this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendment was order to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. SARGENT. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know that I wish to prolong the debate, but it seems to me that the bill in the inconsistent shape in which it is before the Senate deserves more consideration than would be implied by hurrying its passage after an hour or so of debate. As it now is before the Senate, an invitation in the name of the United States is to be extended to all people to be in Philadelphia for some months during the summer of 1876 to attend a celebration there to be held under the auspices of the United States. It is said that with this proviso attached to this legislation that it shall not cost us anything, if this invitation is generally accepted, the Treasury of the United States is safe; and one of the Senators from Pennsylvania goes so far, I understand him, as to pledge himself on the floor of the Senate that there never shall be a call upon the Treasury of the United States to pay for the expense of this exhibition. The senior Senator from Pennsylvania nods his head in sign of assent that that is the pledge.

Mr. CAMERON. I assent to all that I said.

Mr. SARGENT. That certainly is very valuable so far as the opinion of an individual Senator is concerned. His colleague, however, does not have that view, and refuses to be bound by any such understanding; refuses, so far as one of the Senators from Pennsylvania is concerned, to be considered as implying that the United States will not be called upon to pay $3,000,000, according to the bill which I presume I am in order in stating is given in a pamphlet which was laid upon our desks by the board of centennial commissioners, and which pamphlet informs us that this bill is pending in the House of Representatives and calls for a first draught of $3,000,000 upon the Treasury of the United States. So far as the junior Senator from Pennsylvania is concerned he will not commit himself to a course which will preclude him from urging that bill at the next session of Congress or this one, provided he shall have time to do it.

Furthermore, there is no pledge here so far as the centennial commission are concerned, who in this pamphlet insist with a great deal of earnestness that they have been entrapped by our legislation into a position which compels them to father a scheme devised by the Government of the United States and put into their hands to carry out without the necessary funds to discharge the obligation which we have laid upon them. So far as these gentlemen are concerned they retain their old position, the position which they have assumed since the legislation was originally perfected, of being applicants at the door of the Treasury of the United States for millions of money to carry out the purpose of the corporation which they are required by our laws to manage.

Now, Mr. President, I do not think that the promise of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania that he will not urge these schemes amounts to any protection of the Treasury hereafter. In the former debates on this bill it was shown beyond dispute, beyond all cavil, that the expense of an exhibition of this kind must be somewhere near $10,000,000. I contended with a pretty good showing of evidence, from the cost of similar expositions elsewhere, that it would exceed this amount; but it seemed to be pretty generally admitted that $10,000,000 was not an extravagant sum.

It is said that four millions and odd of this amount, or whatever amount may be necessary to carry out this exposition, have been subscribed by the city of Philadelphia and the State of Pennsylvania and citizens thereof, excepting a small amount contributed by citizens of other States. The fact remains, is unchanged, that the contributions of the State of Pennsylvania and the city of Philadelphia are tied up so that they are not liable, as any amount which we may appropriate here, to make good any deficiencies subsequently by realization from the sales of the property. Those facts which were well illustrated in the debate before exist to this present day; they have not been modified in any particular; and we are required now, as it was insisted we would be required before provided this pledge of which I speak is not effective and this proviso is not effective, to put our hands into the Treasury and to pay not only the millions of dollars required at first, but to make up deficiencies arising from the full lack of patronage, and see the property which is put up by the State of Pennsylvania and the city of Philadelphia abstracted from the assets of the concern and remain there as perpetual memorials for the use of those localities. Now, sir, there is an element of unfairness about that. That unfairness still exists. That is not explained; and certainly it ought to be explained before this bill shall become a law.

As I have said, I have no doubt the proposition is made in perfect good faith by the senior Senator from Pennsylvania, so far as he is concerned; that we shall never find him hereafter after this bill passes coming here and insisting on appropriations; that he will not come to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, that he will not come to members in their seats and on the floor of the Senate insisting that one dollar shall be given for this purpose. I believe what he says is in perfect good faith, and I believe also he has sufficient firmness to adhere to that resolution; but when all is done, the other Senator from Pennsylvania will come to us with this appeal, and this centennial board which we have created will come here and say, "After you knew that we could not raise these funds, after you knew that Pennsylvania and Philadelphia had failed, after you knew that the citizens of the other States did not respond with enthusiasm, did not come forward with their treasure to erect these buildings and to put this institution upon a sound footing, after all this failure, you again, at our suggestion, invited all the powers of the earth to come here, you again sanctioned all we had done, in view of the failure up to the moment that you did it; you asked these powers to come here, and it made no difference if one Senator from Pennsylvania said he was tired of asking for appropriations, nevertheless by that act you bound yourselves all the more strongly, and the proviso must be mere waste paper and could amount to nothing because you are brought face to face with the great moral fact that you then required us to proceed although we said your action in not passing this bill would be equivalent to releasing us; you passed the bill, thereby holding us to these duties, and therefore you are under the highest obligations which you cannot avoid to appropriate whatever sum of money is necessary for this purpose."

Mr. President, I do not believe that the failure of this institution up to this time arises from the circumstance which is alleged; that is, that it was under the full tide of success and that the money would have been contributed by the States of the Union to this exhibition if it had not been for the panic. The panic was a mere transient disturbance in our business affairs. It lasted but a month or two, and then passed away. All traces of it have gone. Its effects can scarcely be said to exist now. If its results exist, it is in the wreck here and there, far between, of the private fortune of some individual; but the great monetary power of the nation was untouched; the great resources of the nation were unaffected. There was the same ability two months after the panic that there was two months before on the part of the States of the Union and of the cities of the Union and the wealthy men of the Union to respond to this call. I know that one man, Jay Cooke, had subscribed a few thousand dollars to the centennial fund; but there is scarcely another instance, certainly not another notable instance, of any person who had subscribed to any degree who is in the list of failures. Most of the subscriptions have been in extremely small sums; and there were few persons whose capital was swallowed up by the failure of railroads or by the great commercial convulsion.

Sir, the trouble was that there was not then, that there never has been, that there is not now, an enthusiastic response on the part of the people of the country to this method of celebration. They have never believed in it. There has never been any evidence of it. The only reason why it has any power in the two Houses of Congress, aside from the personal merits of the gentlemen who represent that State and which I do not wish to detract from by anything I may say, is that by the ingenious system which was originally devised to carry out this plan there were men of considerable force of character selected from different States whose interest it was made to urge this thing upon Congress, and to create an appearance of interest coming from those different States for the success of the measure. Consequently, when JOSEPH R. HAWLEY, the president of the commission, a man of a great deal of force of character, a man of adroitness and nimbleness of mind and of energy, is put at the head of this institution, and has the advantage of a seat in the other House, he stands there to urge, and he does urge it day and night with great force; but does he speak for Connecticut therein? Look at your subscriptions from Connecticut and find out if that is so. And so you can go through the whole list. You will find men of strength from my own State, from the State of Nevada, the State of Maine, the State of Louisiana, and all of the States, who were picked out with peculiar felicity by the originators of this scheme, men adapted to the end put into the harness of this concern, and they have insisted over and over again, with all the ability in their power, that Congress should come forward and make this thing a success. Thus it was, not to speak with the slightest disrespect—for I do not mean it at all in any offensive sense—that this body of lobbyists whom we ourselves created, coming from different States, were able to make a fictitious interest or a factitious interest in this institution which was not responded to by the people and which had no root in their affections. If it had, why do not your subscriptions pour in? Why was Philadelphia or Pennsylvania left to realize the original prediction of the Senator from Pennsylvania that Philadelphia and Pennsylvania would pay the whole bill.

No, sir; the failure was not on account of the panic. That was a mere slight transient circumstance. If the panic had not occurred there would have been just the same failure. Business has resumed its ordinary sway; nobody can say that the country is not now prosperous, and prosperous to a high degree; and still there is a failure of response in this particular.

But, sir, there is one reason why I do not think this bill should pass to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate, and that is, that it is an intentional reflection upon the Secretary of State, who I believe in this matter has acted conscientiously and with a desire to observe exactly the obligations which were imposed on him by the laws we have passed. I say it is an intentional disrespect to him, because in the leading paper of Philadelphia, the North American and Gazette, within two or three days past, I read a leading article on this subject, wherein they spoke of the necessity of rebuking the Secretary of State for the action he has taken in this matter. I am not prepared to rebuke the Secretary of State for any action he has taken in this matter, and I do not think the Senate will admit that he deserves such a rebuke. There is no question whatever but that he obeyed the law which required that this exhibition should be commended to the powers of the earth. He used the very language which was used in the law of Congress. It was commended by the President of the United States under the seal of the Secretary of State. Some of the American ministers and consuls abroad misunderstood the spirit of that proclamation, which was guarded, as the language of Congress was guarded, and necessarily guarded, because this was not a Government institution, but simply an institution under a corporation created by the Government, wherein the responsibility for any expenditure or any control was expressly disclaimed by the Government. I say that his proclamation exactly followed the limitations of the law of Congress, and so far and up to that point there could be no criticism of his act. But when some of the least experienced of these ministers and consuls supposed that on account of that commendation of this exhibition they were made missionaries to preach a new crusade in all parts of the world, to stir up an expectation which could not be realized and which was not contemplated by the spirit of the legislation of Congress on this matter, the Secretary of State addressed them a letter which I hold in my hand, wherein he called attention to the fact that the President of the United States commended this exhibition, but that it was not an invitation in the name of and at the expense of the Government of the United States for these persons to come here and attend it. Let us see how his letter reads. This letter itself was not intended to be handed to foreign powers; it was simply an admonition to our own agents abroad, which he had a perfect right to send. He says:

> It is presumed that you will not have failed to observe the guarded language of the President's proclamation, and the difference between it and that which would be used in extending an invitation to other powers.

The guarded language of the President's proclamation was the guarded language of the statute. Were we to legislate that this exhibition should be commended to other powers and our ministers or consuls abroad act ministerially, that it should not merely be a commendation of it but that it should be a warm and cordial invitation to come and come at our expense? Was there no distinction? Was there no force in the distinction which Congress itself drew? He says:

> You should be aware, also, that the exhibition is under the control of a commission created into a corporate body—> and that it is not national in the sense of being governmental, or under governmental control.

Was it not under the control of a commission? Was it not created into a corporate body?

Is there any Senator here who can deny that? Is it under Government control? If it is, then why call upon the citizens of Philadelphia or Pennsylvania to contribute one dollar for it? Do we ask them to sustain our courts? Do we ask them to sustain our missions abroad, or to pay the expenses of running the national Capitol or Congress? Those are Government institutions, and we make appropriations from the Treasury for them, and they are under Government control; but this exhibition was put under the control of a corporation, and put there at the request of the people of Pennsylvania and Philadelphia, shaped to suit themselves; and when some of us had misgivings as to whether the tendency of it was not to involve the Treasury and to imply Government control, they readily assented to the insertion of language which sheared it of any such presumption. Therefore the Secretary of State was right in his position on this matter so far as I have read. He continues:

> With the exception that Congress created the commission into a body corporate, and that the delegates or commissioners (who are named by the governors of the several States and Territories) are commissioned by the President, and that Congress authorized the proclamation made by the President, and sympathizes with the sentiment of the people in a general but deep interest in the success of the exhibition, the national Government has no connection with the commission; it has no control over it, and is in no way whatever responsible either for its management or its results.

The tone of this is kindly. It recites every fact which makes in favor of the exhibition, while it asserts the fact that the Government is in no wise responsible either for its management or its results. Will any one say we are responsible for its management or its results? If we are, then we should appropriate all the money for it; we should take it into our own hands instead of giving it to a corporation which has no soul, which is irresponsible necessarily, which does not amount to the aggregate responsibility of its members, but is a species of artificial entity which you can hold to no responsibility. If the Government is responsible for its management, it ought to manage it. If it is responsible for its results, then the legislation of Congress should expressly so declare; whereas it negatives that idea in every point. If it is responsible for its results, it is responsible for every dollar of deficiency which may be created by it; and in the case of the Vienna exposition, where everything was cheaper, and where there was an enormous mass, hundreds of millions of people to draw by their attendance money into its treasury, there was a deficiency of fifteen million florins. If we are responsible for this exhibition and its results, then one of those results may be an enormous deficiency, and that would be a deficit from the Treasury of the United States.

He says further:

It is important that you should correctly appreciate this fact, for, while the President feels a deep and sincere interest in the success of the exhibition, and Congress has given to it the sanction of its approval of its object and design, neither the President or Congress has authorized any invitation on behalf of the Government to be given to foreign powers, nor assumed any responsibility of the management or control of the exhibition.

That is the literal, frozen truth. In the theory of this bill the exact opposite is asserted, that this exhibition is to be under the control of the United States, for that is what "auspices" means here. If it is asserted that we are responsible for the results, including any deficiencies which may arise, then, sir, any pledge given that hereafter no money will be asked from the Treasury will be as idle and vain as those which have gone before, notwithstanding we endeavor to put them in a statute, in the solemn form of a statutory contract which would protect the Treasury of the United States.

Now, sir, I am not prepared for one to censure the Secretary of States, even at the request of the leading newspaper of Philadelphia, for having issued that state paper. It was a document drawn out from the Secretary of State by the necessities of the case, by the fact that these persons were assuming to go far beyond the authority given by Congress and the instructions given to them by the State Department. The publication of this document was drawn out by Mr. HAWLEY, the president of the commission, in a letter to the Secretary of State asking to know what construction he had put upon the proclamation of the President. Therefore, if any scandal arises from its publication, it goes right back at once to the centennial board which called it out. But there can be no scandal in doing right; there can be none in a correct interpretation of the laws of Congress; there can be no impropriety in an executive officer living squarely and exactly up to the spirit of the legislation of Congress and excluding an idea the prevalence of which would deplete the Treasury of the United States of untold millions.

Mr. President, the bill in its present form certainly is illogical. If that which has gone before has not been, this now assumes the form of a monstrosity. It is a mermaid, a woman to the waist and a fish below. It is a most cordial invitation extended to foreign powers, "Come and be our guests; come and dine at our table; come at our expense;" and then it says to them, "You must pay your own expenses, and we will set no table for you; we will not entertain you." It seems to me that it would be a stultification on the part of the Senate to pass this bill in the shape in which it now stands. I do not desire to urge anew all the many and powerful arguments which were urged against it on this floor before by the then Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Sumner;] I do not wish to repeat the arguments that I advanced at that time, or those of the able Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. STEVENSON;] but I know at that time they convinced the Senate of the United States. Since that time this bill has got into such an illogical shape that it looks like stultification on the part of Congress to enact it. In any event it ought not to be passed if it reverses what we have done before, if it reverses the action of the Secretary of State on this matter, so well considered, and following so closely the spirit of our statutes. It ought not to be passed extending an invitation with one hand and showing a clenched fist with the other.

Mr. TIPTON. I only desire to say, Mr. President, that the novelty of this bill strikes me very forcibly; and as I have in common with all western men who have not grown up under the shadow of Yale and Harvard a short way of arriving at conclusions, one of nature's indications, you must permit me to give to the Senate the view I have of the question. It is this: My son desires to give a large and splendid entertainment. He comes to me and asks me if I will advance the means or a large part of the means to aid him in his undertaking. I tell him no; that I cannot and will not. He then goes forward alone and determines to make the entertainment a success on his own part. I allow him to do so; and then he comes to me and asks me if I will please be so kind as to assume the responsibility of sending out the cards of invitation. I tell him that is rather a delicate matter for me; I have washed my hands of the whole affair in refusing to furnish any means to help him carry it on, and I therefore must be excused from sending out the invitations to the entertainment. I could not do that under those circumstances. I think I cannot do it under these.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will recollect that a resolution was passed yesterday providing that the Senate would attand a funeral at four o'clock to-day in the House of Representatives.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Yes, sir; and for that reason I make this motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The usual course has been for the Senate to go in a body, without adjournment, to the House; and after the funeral to return here and then adjourn. That has been the invariable practice. Does the Senator insist on his motion?

Mr. WADLEIGH. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. COOPER. On this question I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. BROWNLOW.]

Mr. ALCORN. I wish to state that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] and myself are paired. If he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. PRATT. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. MITCHELL.] Were he here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 25, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Boutwell, Buckingham, Cameron, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Kelly, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Patterson, Ramsey, Robertson, Scott, Spencer, Washburn, and Windom—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Boreman, Carpenter, Chandler, Edmunds, Fenton, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sherman, Tipton, Wadleigh, and Wright—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Bogy, Brownlow, Clayton, Cooper, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Howe, Johnston, Jones, Lewis, Mitchell, Morton, Oglesby, Pease, Pratt, Ransom, Schurz, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, and West—31.

So the bill was passed.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. CONKLING. I now move to proceed to the consideration of the larger bill, a bill to consolidate the statutes of the United States, reported yesterday from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves to take up the bill (H. R. No. 1215) to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, A. D. 1873.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senate will remember that an invitation has been accepted to attend in the House of Representatives a funeral which occurs at four o'clock. Of course therefore no considerable progress can be made with this bill now. I shall, however, accomplish a very important object if I can obtain, as I now ask, unanimous consent to dispense with the reading in extenso of the bill; and before the Chair asks for consent, I wish to suggest to one or two Senators who were not here yesterday that the proportions of the bill, which will now be seen in the hands of the Secretary, are such that to read it would occupy many days, and of course it would not be listened to. Therefore I hope that no Senator will object to waiving the reading of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think this matter had better go over until the morning. I do not expect to ask that the bill be read. I think myself that would be useless; but I think we ought to reserve the right to have any portion read that Senators may desire, as a matter of right. All I wish to hear read is the last chapter or two which relate to repeals.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I ask that by unanimous consent the reading of the bill be waived, except so far as the reading of specific parts of it may be called for by Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the reading of this bill may be dispensed with except as particular parts may be called for in the consideration of the bill before the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so understood.

Mr. CONKLING. Now to leave this bill the unfinished business, although I beg to say to Senators it will take but a very short time to-morrow and therefore it will not impede as I think seriously anything behind it, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will remind the Senator that the usual course on such an occasion has been not to adjourn, but for the Senate as a Senate to attend the funeral and then return to the Chamber and adjourn.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I make the motion in that form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate now proceed to the House of Representatives to attend the funeral.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have not been notified that they are ready to receive us.

Mr. CONKLING. We have accepted the invitation to be there at four o'clock.

FUNERAL OF HON. DAVID B. MELLISH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pursuant to the resolution adopted yesterday, the hour of four having arrived, the Senate will now proceed to the House of Representatives.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral ceremonies of Hon. DAVID B. MELLISH, late a member of that body from the State of New York.

When the services in the House of Representatives were concluded, the Senate having returned to its Chamber,

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 26, 1874.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

ASSIGNMENT OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to make an amendment to the Journal. The order assigning a day to the Committee on Military Affairs was, upon my motion, accepted by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, made to except reports from the Committee on Appropriations. It is not so entered upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman must refer to the order made in regard to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. GARFIELD. Perhaps I make that mistake. I thought the same exception had been made in regard to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has a distinct recollection of the fact. The exception made was in the case of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The Journal of yesterday was then approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. POLAND. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called, the House will resume the consideration of the bill in relation to the Sanborn contracts, on which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope we will be allowed to finish the consideration of the amendments to the legislative appropriation bill, that it may go to a committee of conference.

Mr. FOSTER. We cannot do that.

Mr. BECK. I yield to my colleague [Mr. DURHAM] to make a report.

MIDDLE DISTRICT OF ALABAMA.

Mr. DURHAM, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, presented a report in writing as to the middle district of Alabama; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted to the same committee, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

CONTINGENT FUND IN THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. DURHAM also, by unanimous consent, on behalf of a majority of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, presented a report as to the expenditures of the contingent fund in said Department; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted to the same committee, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

DEPREDATIONS ON TEXAS FRONTIER.

Mr. HANCOCK, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to this House the report for the year 1873 of the commissioners appointed to inquire into depredations committed by Mexicans or Indians on the frontier of the State of Texas.

PURCHASE OF A BUILDING IN WASHINGTON.

On motion of Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3345) to provide for the purchase of a building adjacent to the Army Medical Museum, in the city of Washington, for scientific purposes; and the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 732) supplementary to the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company and to aid in the construction of that road," and for other purposes; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. No. 2453) to amend an act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the laws relating to pensions," approved March 3, 1873, with an amendment, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1013) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The message further communicated to the House the following resolutions of the Senate on the announcement of the death of Hon. DAVID B. MELLISH, late a member of the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That the Senate has received with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. DAVID B. MELLISH, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of New York; and that it will attend the funeral ceremony in the Hall of the House of Representatives to-morrow at four o'clock.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect for the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

COLLECTION OF MONEY DUE THE UNITED STATES.

The House then resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3256) to repeal so much of the act approved May 8, 1872, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1873, and for other purposes," as provides for the employment of persons to assist the proper officers of the Government in discovering and collecting money withheld, and for other purposes.

[Mr. BECK addressed the House. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. FOSTER. I ask the previous question on the bill, and I desire to have it seconded and the main question ordered, and then to have the bill go over until to-morrow.

Mr. DAWES. Will the bill go over?

The SPEAKER. It can do so.

Mr. DAWES. But will it unless by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It will not except by unanimous consent.

Mr. DAWES. Then I would like to have it understood that if the main question is ordered the bill shall go over until to-morrow.

Mr. POLAND. I object, because I desire to have a vote on the bill now.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I give notice that I shall call the previous question to-morrow.

Mr. POLAND. I supposed debate was exhausted; if the bill is to be further debated, I withdraw my objection.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, with the understanding that the bill should go over until to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to call up the legislative, &c., appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House, the Committee on Ways and Means are entitled to the floor for the remainder of to-day.

BUSINESS OF THE COMMITTEE ON PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. PACKARD. I ask unanimous consent of the House that there may be an evening session on Tuesday next for reports from the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not think we ought to do that in the present state of public business; but I will not object.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. That, I suppose, would not obviate any points of order on any bill that might be reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont reserves all points of order, which the gentleman from Indiana will observe will send everything to the Committee of the Whole that contains an appropriation, either directly or indirectly.

Mr. PACKARD. I expected that.

No objection was made to the request of Mr. PACKARD.

IMPROVEMENT OF MOUTH OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. HURLBUT. I desire to have a day assigned by the House when the Committee on Railways and Canals can report back the bill in relation to the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River, and I ask that the first vacant day may be assigned for that purpose, which is Wednesday of next week, the 3d of June, to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. DAWES. Except business from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HURLBUT. I cannot make that exception.

Mr. DAWES. Then I object.

SHIPPING COMMISSIONERS ACT.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 3160) in reference to the operations of the shipping commissioners act, approved June 7, 1872, with the amendment of the Senate thereto, be taken up and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SHELDON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is a matter which ought to be settled, and the Chair will state precisely the attitude of business.

Mr. SHELDON. I withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. ARCHER. The bill is not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider?

Mr. COX. No, sir.

No further objection being made, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and, with the amendment of the Senate, referred to the Committee on Commerce, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HURLBUT. I now renew the request that Wednesday of next week be assigned for the consideration of the bill reported by the Committee on Railways and Canals in regard to the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River.

Mr. DAWES. I would not object to that request but the Committee on Ways and Means will lose a large part of this afternoon which was assigned to us.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would like the Chair to state the order of public business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to do so for the benefit of members, so that they may act intelligently in assigning time for the consideration of bills, because the House may not wish to get into confusion. To-day belongs to the Committee on Ways and Means. To-morrow, at the expiration of one hour after the reading of the Journal, belongs to the Committee on the Judiciary, but the bill in relation to the Sanborn contracts goes over and of course will take what would otherwise be the morning hour of to-morrow. On Thursday the Committee on Military Affairs have the right to report on the reduction of the Army. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] has already before the House the bill in relation to courts in Utah, which will come up immediately after the Sanborn contracts matter is disposed of. On Friday private bills will be in order. On Saturday, the Chair presumes, there will be no session, that being Decoration Day. Monday will be for suspensions of the rules. Tuesday has been assigned to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the Chair does not see when within that time it will be possible for the gentleman from Tennessee to report the currency bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. The House has assigned every day until Tuesday without leaving a moment for the appropriation bills to be got forward with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee is anxious to report the currency bill. The Chair does not see how he can have an opportunity of doing so this week, unless other business shall be postponed. The House can postpone the Utah bill and place the currency bill ahead of it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I must object then to assigning any more special orders.

Mr. McCRARY. I would inquire of the Chair whether the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi River was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals is not a privileged motion?

The SPEAKER. It is; it is a privileged motion under the rules, and all these assignments which the Chair has spoken of were made by suspensions of the rules.

Mr. McCRARY. I desire to remind the Chair that that subject was made the special order for the 21st of April. It came up on that day, and on my suggestion was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, with the understanding that it should not lose any of its rights, but that it should come back with the same status it then had, and I believe it is the first special order.

The SPEAKER. But the trouble is that all the assignments the Chair has been enumerating have been made under a suspension of the rules, among them the rule under which the bill of the gentleman had precedence.

Mr. McCRARY. So the order making that bill the special order on the 21st of April was under a suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. But that was waived because it was not reached, and a recommittal (with a motion to reconsider entered) accepted in its stead. The bill will undoubtedly be reached, but not this week while these special orders are pending.

Mr. McCRARY. I think the suggestion of my colleague on the committee [Mr. HURLBUT] a very good one, to fix the bill for a day certain, after these orders have been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. That is the proposition which the Chair submitted to the House, and it was objected to by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] who has charge of the banking and currency bill.

Mr. POLAND. I call for the regular order.

Mr. DAWES. I will yield to my colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. KELLEY] for a matter which he thinks will give rise to no debate.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. KELLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report a bill to authorize the importation of certain animals for the Zoological Society of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, free of duty.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which objections will be in order to its present consideration.

The bill provides that all animals, birds, and reptiles which shall be imported by the Zoological Society of Philadelphia in good faith for exhibition, and not for sale, at their garden in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, shall be admitted without the payment of duty or of customs fees or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; and that in case any animal, bird, or reptile imported under the provisions of this act shall within three years from the date of its importation be sold it shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed upon such object under the revenue laws in force at the date of the importation; and in case any animal, bird, or reptile imported under the provisions of this act shall be sold within the said period without payment of duty as required by law, all the penalties prescribed by the revenue laws shall be applied and enforced against such article and against the said Zoological Society of Philadelphia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] asks unanimous consent that the bill just read be considered at this time.

Mr. FIELD. I object.

Mr. KELLEY. I think the gentleman will withdraw his objection when I tell him that these objects are imported at great cost for public exhibition by this society.

Mr. FIELD. Let it pay the duty, then.

Mr. KELLEY. For gratuitous exhibition.

Mr. FIELD. Fine horses and cows.

Mr. KELLEY. No, sir.

Mr. FIELD. The bill says "all animals."

Mr. KELLEY. Horses and cows are not likely to be imported and maintained by the Zoological Society for the purpose of illustrating science.

Mr. FIELD. I will not object if the gentleman will amend the bill so as to except horses and cows.

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman will show that horses and cows are likely to be imported to be exhibited by a public zoological society I will accept his amendment.

Mr. COX. And also give the same privilege to the New York Hippodrome to import animals for public exhibition.

Mr. KELLEY. I will agree to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. FIELD,] and add "mules."

Mr. FIELD. I object to the consideration of this bill now.

Mr. KELLEY. I will withdraw the bill, and it will appear with an amendment.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 249) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to give to George A. Armes, late captain Tenth United States Cavalry, an honorable discharge, to date the 7th day of June, 1870;

An act (S. No. 477) granting a pension to Jemima Maxwell;

An act (S. No. 540) granting a pension to Fanny Newcomb, mother of Irenus Newcomb, late of Company H, Sixth Regiment Vermont Volunteers;

An act (S. No. 568) granting a pension to Hugh P. Lytle, late a private in Company H, Thirty-second Regiment Ohio Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 2181) granting a pension to Jennet H. Nisbet;

An act (H. R. No. 2202) for the relief of William B. Thomas, late collector of customs at the port of Philadelphia; and

An act (H. R. No. 2738) for the relief of the Foundry Methodist Episcopal church, of Washington City.

TARIFF AND INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the rules be suspended, and the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole upon the bill (H. R. No. 3491) to amend existing customs and internal revenue laws, and for other purposes, and pending that motion I move that all general debate on the bill shall be limited to thirty minutes.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to; and the motion to go into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. TYNER in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. No. 3491) to amend existing customs and internal revenue laws, and for other purposes. By order of the House all general debate on the bill is limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent that the first formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. FIELD. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill; before concluding,

Mr. DAWES said: I ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FIELD] to be kind enough to save us time by withdrawing his objection to dispensing with the formal reading of the bill.

Mr. FIELD. It is an important bill, and I think it should be read.

Mr. DAWES. It will be read again by sections for amendment.

Mr. FIELD. If it had been brought in a week ago, as it ought to have been, I would not object.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill; before concluding,

Mr. SPEER said: I renew the request that this formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. FIELD. I insist upon my objection; I want to hear the bill read.

The reading was again resumed; but before being concluded,

Mr. FIELD said: I withdraw my objection to dispensing with the further reading of this bill at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is entitled to the floor for general debate on this bill, which by order of the House is limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly to be obliged to call the attention of an impatient House to a consideration of the revenues of the country. This question of our revenues and the duty of the House of Representatives in connection therewith have not passed without the notice of the Ways and Means. They have not failed to hear the criticisms of members of the House upon their apparent indifference to the condition of the Treasury. They have borne with such patience as they were able to command the unkind remarks of gentlemen of the House to the effect that they had not the courage to bring in a tax bill. For many months past they have spent most of the time that they could command in determining as well as they could what it was their duty to do in reference to the revenues of the country, whether it would be wise for them to ask Congress to increase internal taxes and customs duties, or whether it would be best for the Government to take the revenues and expenditures as they are, and endeavor to get along during the year as best it may. The committee have heard many parties concerned in large business interests, always affected by the tariff and by internal-revenue taxation. The leading manufacturing interests of the country have been represented before the committee and have been heard patiently and thoroughly. The committee have also heard, on the other hand, the officers of the Treasury Department, who are anxious, as we had occasion heretofore to say to the House, that increased taxation should be the policy of Congress. After weighing as well as we might all the arguments for a change in the tariff, we have come to the conclusion that it is not wise at this time to introduce any material change; and if it were practicable, the Committee on Ways and Means, instead of calling the attention of the House to any measure of this nature, even the small one now before the Committee of the Whole, would have asked the House earlier in the session to indicate in some more formal way what was expressed in a resolution adopted in the early part of the session—its intention to avoid additional taxation altogether.

The currency of the country has been in a most uncertain state. All branches of business—commercial, manufacturing, and others, uncertain as well with reference to what we might do as what was possible to be done in regard to the currency of the country—have been hesitating, diffident, distrustful, and unwilling to embark in the industries and enterprises of the coming year, thus affecting very much the general prosperity of the country. A general revision of the tariff and internal duties at this time would, in the opinion of the committee, have added to this distrust and uncertainty and this disturbance of values in the present and in the future to such an extent that the committee felt it incumbent upon them to find some way to avoid any addition, by legislation from that committee, to the sources of disquietude and uncertainty already prevalent throughout the country.

On the other hand, the committee were of opinion that the deficit in the Treasury was largely due to temporary and accidental causes, not to any general and permanent lack of taxation to meet the current expenses of the country. They have observed since the first effects of the panic began to pass away a general and constant increase in the revenues of the country—a nearer approach every day to making the current receipts meet the current expenses. They have felt also the benefit of an earnest, efficient, and successful effort upon the part of the Committee on Appropriations and the executive department of the Government to cut down current expenditures to the lowest possible mark. The result has been that although when we came together in December there was a deficit in the Treasury of $11,000,000, that deficit has been steadily growing less and less, until at the end of last month—as I had occasion to state to the House not long ago—this deficit was within about $2,000,000 of being entirely wiped out. I believe I am authorized to state that at the close of this month it will be more than extinguished; so that the current receipts will not only equal the current expenditures but will a little more than do so. At the end of next month, or at the end of the fiscal year, there will be some considerable accumulation toward the sinking fund; not enough, I am aware, to meet the solemn pledge of the Government to put into the sinking fund $29,000,000 annually, but much more than any of us could reasonably have expected or hoped at the beginning of this session. So that if we keep down our expenditures to the lowest figure till the end of the session, and avoid any unnecessary or extraordinary appropriations, we shall, without resorting to any increase of taxation, have done something considerable toward meeting the pledge of the Government in reference to the sinking fund.

Under these circumstances, the Committee on Ways and Means come before the House to-day with much more cheerful heart than at the beginning of this session they had supposed they would be able to do. They are able to state to the House that without any increase of taxation, if my friend from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, shall hold the House in rein to the conclusion of the session as well as he has done up to the present time, and if the receipts of the Government shall go on increasing in the manner they have done, the Treasury will be able at the end of this fiscal year to apply five, six, or seven million dollars of the current receipts of the Government to the sinking fund. For this reason the committee were disposed to come before the House and state that they would at this session propose no alteration whatever in the tariff or internal-revenue laws; and the bill which we have reported and ask to have considered to-day makes no material change in either of those subjects of legislation. It changes ad valorem to specific duties in a few instances; it provides in a few other instances against evasions of the law; in one or two cases it puts upon the free-list articles which were not there before; and it imposes a slight duty upon some articles which have been on the free-list. But altogether the aggregate effect with reference to the receipts of the Government is as near nothing as well could be. The measure, therefore, disturbs values in this country as little as it is possible to do. It does not hold out to any importer any facilities for making money from changes in the duties, or to any manufacturer the promise of a material increase in his profits by excluding from competition with him the foreign article. The object of the bill, so far as the tariff is concerned, is to remedy defects, not to add to the duties now imposed or materially to reduce them. As the separate items come up I will explain to any gentleman who may desire it each one of those items.

Mr. TREMAIN. Is the general effect of the measure an increase or a decrease of the revenues?

Mr. DAWES. As I have said, the effect in that respect is about as near nothing as it can be; in other words, there will be about as much increase on certain articles as there will be decrease upon others. In making the changes from ad valorem to specific duties it has been the purpose of the committee to arrive at as near an equivalent as possible; of course an absolute equivalent in all cases is an impossibility. And where they have changed an ad valorem to a specific duty it has not been their intention to let this specific duty fall below the ad valorem duty. When it has been necessary to make any difference it has been a slight increase.

Mr. MAYNARD. Does not the bill in the first section still keep up ad valorem duties on silk in its various forms?

Mr. DAWES. There is a provision here in reference to silk which will put money into the Treasury.

Mr. MAYNARD. I wish to ask the gentleman whether this section increases or diminishes the tariff upon silk?

Mr. DAWES. This first section of the bill which refers to silk will stop a leak and that is all. By construction of the revenue laws within the last year or so there has escaped from the Treasury of the United States about a million and a half of dollars. This puts a stop to any such construction in reference to silk ribbons and other kinds of silk. The bill puts a stop to that leak. It repeats the phraseology of the old law. When the section comes up for amendment, however, I will tell the gentleman what the operative words are, and I know he agrees with me entirely in the object for which the section is designed.

Mr. MAYNARD. That is precisely what I wish to know, whether this would keep up the construction we have heretofore had in reference to these silks.

Mr. DAWES. If my friend will turn to the latter part of the section he will find these words:

> On all goods, wares, and merchandise not otherwise herein provided for, made of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value, irrespective of the classification thereof for duty by or under previous laws, or of their commercial designation, 60 per cent. ad valorem.

"Irrespective of the classification thereof for duty by or under previous laws, or of their commercial designation," are the operative words.

Mr. MAYNARD. The proviso refers to the proportion of the adulteration.

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir; it provides that this act shall not apply to goods, wares, or merchandise which have, as a component material thereof, 25 per cent. or over in value of wool or worsted.

This section does precisely what the gentleman labored with me to have done during the last Congress. What he failed to do then is as we believe accomplished in this section.

Mr. MAYNARD. Is it convenient to the gentleman to turn to that portion of the bill relative to internal revenue?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly. I was going to say in reference to the internal revenue the committee have made no change affecting the tax at all except in one instance, and that is to allow the man who raises tobacco to sell on his own premises an amount not exceeding $100 worth, a provision which I think will not be objected to by my friend from Tennessee.

Mr. MAYNARD. On page 14, section 19, there is a provision that every person, firm, association, corporation, State bank, or State banking association, and also every national-banking association, shall pay a certain tax. Our national-bank associations are also known as associations, and may not this be construed to refer to them?

Mr. DAWES. It is not intended to include them, and when we come to that I will leave it to the gentleman to suggest the proper phraseology.

Mr. HEREFORD. I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question in reference to section 24, that from and after the passage of this act any farmer or planter may sell at the place of production tobacco of his own growth and raising at retail directly to consumers to an amount not exceeding $100 annually. This provides that he may sell at the place of production. Will this accomplish the object which so many of us desire? I have no doubt this section has been drawn to carry out that object. I introduced a bill myself on this very subject. I fear the construction which will be placed on this section will be that the farmer who raises $100 worth of tobacco must sell it on his farm, and it will not allow him to take it to the school-master or the country store to sell it for the necessaries of life.

Mr. DAWES. Wait until we get to that section of the bill. I now yield for ten minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to take more than ten minutes. This bill of itself ought not to involve a large debate. It should be amended. I am not now certain that it may be amended except in regard to the articles specified in the bill itself. Therefore I confine my remarks in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and to the multifarious character of this bill.

The gentleman says this bill so far as it brings anything in the Treasury really amounts to nothing as to revenue, in the aggregate, substantially nothing. I am sorry to hear that confession made by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means—Ways and Means, whose business it is to raise "means" and contrive "ways."

Mr. DAWES. That is the most gratifying feature of the whole bill to me.

Mr. COX. It should be gratifying to the gentleman not to raise taxes; but I look on the tariff in a somewhat different light from that of the gentleman. Many of these taxes in the shape of customs duties are actually prohibitory; many of them are so high as to be pro tanto prohibitory; many do not pay the cost of collection; many contribute to smuggling and fraud. And so we come back to the proposition which I sent to his committee at the beginning of the session, that if we would put money into the Treasury to pay our deficiencies and save us from bankruptcy, we might well reduce the tariff and thus enhance the revenue. That has been demonstrated in England, and could be demonstrated by the Committee on Ways and Means if they gave it a proper and patient examination.

This bill, sir, amounts really to nothing as to revenue and otherwise. What substantial relief does it give to the country? When our industries are dead or at least paralyzed; when our shipping is almost gone; when English ship-owners take what is equivalent to $75,000,000 out of our pockets every year for foreign transportation; when our laborers cry aloud in the streets; when our farmers are complaining in regard to the small prices for their products and the high prices for their transportation, it is, sir, at this time of continued panic and disaster that we patiently listen to the statement to the House through its organ that their legislation really amounts to nothing, nothing, nothing!

Sir, this committee should have given in this long session abundant care and unremitting attention to the reduction of the tariff. If they would relieve the people, and at the same time add to the revenues, why do they produce such an abortive measure?

I have discussed this matter here ever since 1857; I have debated it again and again; not always fruitlessly. I have seen some reforms made and some progress in public opinion. I have never yet been discouraged as to the ultimate verdict of an intelligent Congress, properly elected, on this and other revenue questions. I can see that even New England is approaching free trade. Her interests are drawing her into the domain of honest economy. If we cannot altogether sail into a star, we can sail by it. The great principle of a revenue tariff, or in other words, of free trade; of removing the slave shackles from trade and commerce, to use what might be less objectionable language—this principle is progressing in New England and in the West.

Years ago, in 1864, when a member of Congress from the West, I urged—

> That the West could take care of itself. It is rich by nature in its resources; and if the people of Pennsylvania cannot live by working their forges with their own natural resources, and if the people of New England cannot live by working their spindles, with their natural ingenuity, without the aid of other classes of industry and the bounty of the Government, let them move to the West, and there the God of nature will protect them in the cultivation of the soil, if they have the industry to work and the frugality to save.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. Whose speech has the gentleman read from?

Mr. COX. The speech of a member from Ohio in 1864.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. What was his name?

Mr. COX. It would be personal to mention it just now, and the gentleman will excuse me.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. He is not a member of the House now, is he?

Mr. COX. Not as a member from Ohio.

At that time I laid before the House certain carefully framed general propositions, and which I maintain now as I did then were in the interest of agriculture and commerce. I will say here to gentlemen on the other side that these propositions will enter into every canvass this fall. You cannot escape them; nor will Congress escape them. I remember the repeal of the corn laws in England, in 1846, and remember that for thirty years one man—Mr. Villiers—came forward in Parliament at every session and brought in the same old motion for the repeal of the corn laws amid derisive cheers; until at last the flood came, and with it Cobden, and Bright, and Ebenezer Elliot, and statesmen like Sir Robert Peel, swept by its vehemence, came forward and destroyed the obsolete ideas of the monopolists and gave England a "cheap loaf" under free trade! In the light of such an example it will not do to be discouraged. Let us keep on fighting for the liberalities of commerce and exchange. Time and science work with us. We have between our States a perpetual emphasis to these doctrines in their cordial and prosperous intercommerce.

But, sir, let me come to the propositions referred to, which I shall perhaps take the liberty of illustrating when it comes to the five-minute debate on amendments.

The elements of cost upon merchandise imported from foreign countries into the United States are: First, the first cost abroad; second, difference of exchange; third, duty; fourth, freight, insurance, and other charges of importation; and fifth, the importer's profits on all the preceding items, which we reckon at 10 per cent.

At this point of cost the imported article comes in competition with the corresponding article of the home manufacturer in the American market. And the aggregate of the items above mentioned constitutes the protection or bounty which the tariff system gives to the manufacturer. The consumers of the domestic article, of course, pay this bounty to the manufacturer. This is now reduced to an axiom in political economy. It is as clear as the proposition that the object of a tariff for protection is to increase the price of the article. If this were not the case, who would care for protective bounties? Not the manufacturer, certainly. If not he, who then?

I might show you what particular sections of the country are benefited by this particular mode of making or rather as in this bill of not making revenue. But one thing is sure, that on some articles, as steel, for instance, New England itself is moving, as it is moved sometimes in a pinch with respect to coal. I might refer you, too, to the matter of hardware, which is not touched by this bill, but should have been reduced for the purchasers. Let me give to some of these gentlemen who have to go West to meet their constituents this fall the effects of the present tariff on hardware articles.

Take padlocks for instance, the duty on which is 45 per cent., less 10 per cent. This is for the protection of three makers only who have combined. Handsaws; the duty is over 50 per cent., principally for the benefit of one maker in this country. Knives and forks, 35 per cent., less 10 per cent., for the benefit of a compact of makers not to sell under prices. Cotton-hoes, 45 per cent., less 10 per cent., a combination of the principal makers. Curry-combs, 35 per cent., less 10 per cent., two makers in combination. Tea-trays, 40 per cent., less 10 per cent., two makers in combination. Powder-flasks, 40 per cent., close monopoly. Iron squares, 50 per cent.; two Vermont makers have the sole control. Pocket-knives, 50 per cent., less 10 per cent.; the makers have been in combination but were broken by the panic. Screws, over 50 per cent. We all know about that matter. It is no new theme of discussion here. The American Company sell in Canada at a less price than in the United States, and have had a very profitable business for the three companies in the monopoly. Sledge-hammers and vises, about 35 per cent.; but two makers of any importance in the country. Files, over 50 per cent.; two or three makers of importance. All of these and various other articles manufactured of iron have been diverted from paying income to the Government. My correspondent informs me that a reduction of 25 per cent. duty would double the receipts of revenue from this branch alone. I might call attention to other articles.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX. I want just two minutes more to call the attention of members of the House to one part of this bill relating to the internal revenue.

This bill proposes not simply to put an extra tariff on hops, I suppose striking at the German constituency; not merely putting a tax on vermicelli and macaroni, for the protection of one or two little factories in this country which make a very bad article; it not only proposes to tax various articles, and raise some revenue thereby, which perhaps are equalized or nullified by what is put on the free list; not only that, but in the fourteenth and sixteenth sections of the bill, the committee go to work to establish a sort of a code, as if we were a little municipality here, taxing the wholesale and retail dealers of spirituous and malt liquors, and actually forfeiting all the premises of parties who may distill or be connected by proximity of premises with distilleries. I do not know in whose interest that is, perhaps in the interest of the crusaders. But certain it is that kind of tax will not be acceptable to the German part of our population.

Mr. DAWES. I am sorry my friend does not know more about beer than he seems to know.

Mr. KELLOGG. Cannot the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] yield to me for one moment?

Mr. DAWES. I do not see how I can.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then I will take it some other time.

Mr. DAWES. That is right. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] will accept a suggestion, I would suggest to him to turn to the internal-revenue law as it exists and read it, and he will see that this bill which he complains of is greatly to the relief of his German constituents.

Mr. COX. Why not relieve them altogether?

Mr. DAWES. One objection to relieving them altogether is the necessity of having some revenue; that is one objection.

Mr. COX. I could undertake if I had time to debate it to point out where you might raise the tax.

Mr. DAWES. My friend wants absolute free trade at one end and absolute freedom from internal tax at the other, and then he would pay the current expenses of the general Government by drafts on the Treasury.

Mr. COX. No, sir; I have told the gentleman again and again how it could be done. I have voted to put the tax on tea and coffee, and you dare not do that, because it is a pure revenue tax. That has been attested and demonstrated. When the tariff was removed from them it did not lessen the cost of tea and coffee to the consumer. Why? Because the producers abroad raised on us. By such a tax you might put $20,000,000 into the Treasury.

Mr. DAWES. I voted with the gentleman on that.

Mr. COX. Then why reproach me, as if I had no plan to help the revenue, in the place of your bounties to the favored?

Mr. DAWES. I do not reproach the gentleman. It is one of the few things I am glad to commend him for.

The CHAIRMAN. All general debate by order of the House is closed upon this bill. The Clerk will read it by paragraphs and sections for amendment.

The Clerk read the first section, as follows:

That from and after the date of the passage of this act, in lieu of the duties heretofore imposed on the importation of the goods, wares, and merchandise hereinafter specified, the following rates of duties shall be exacted, namely: On spun silk, for filling, in skeins or cops, 35 per cent. ad valorem; on silk in the gum, not more advanced than singles, tram, and thrown or organzine, 35 per cent. ad valorem; on floss silks, 35 per cent. ad valorem; on sewing silks, in the gum or purified, 40 per cent. ad valorem; on lastings, mohair cloth, silk, twist, or other manufactures of cloth, woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, or form, or cut in such manner, as to be fit for buttons exclusively, 10 per cent. ad valorm; on all goods, wares, and merchandise not otherwise herein provided for, made of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value, irrespective of the classification thereof for duty by or under previous laws or of their commercial designation, 60 per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That this act shall not apply to goods, wares, or merchandise which have, as a component material thereof, 25 per cent. or over in value of wool or worsted.

Mr. KILLINGER. I move to amend this section, by adding the following:

And provided further, That the second section of the act entitled "An act to reduce the duties on imports and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1872, shall be, and is hereby, repealed; it being the intent of this act to restore the duties upon the goods, wares, and merchandise mentioned in said section which were by law levied, collected, and paid prior to the passage of the act of which said section is a part.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to my friend to withhold his amendment until we get to the end of the tariff portion of this bill.

Mr. KILLINGER. I consulted with the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] as to that matter a few moments ago, and he said that it would come in at the end of this section.

Mr. DAWES. I know that; but upon reflection I think it would come in better at the other place.

Mr. KILLINGER. Then I will withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The section is still open to amendment.

TEN PER CENT. REDUCTION OF DUTIES.

Mr. KILLINGER subsequently asked and obtained leave to have printed the following remarks:

The second section of the tariff act of June 6, 1872, provides that from and after August 1, 1872, but 90 per cent. of the then existing duties upon the articles there enumerated shall be collected. This reduction of 10 per cent. affected cotton goods, wools and the manufacture thereof, iron and steel and the manufactures thereof, paper with certain exceptions, rubber and straw goods, glass, leather, and several other articles of domestic industry.

Under the operation of this reduction the Treasury of the United States has lost in revenue probably $12,000,000. It has in no way benefited the consumer, for no reduction in price has been effected thereby. Applying mostly to staple articles, which are largely imported and which enter into competition with home products, it has imposed heavy burdens upon our own people, while it has relieved the foreign manufacturer and discriminated in his favor very considerably.

One would suppose that Congress would not hesitate, with these facts pressing themselves upon our attention, to repeal this unjust and ill-advised piece of legislation. In the early part of the present session I introduced a bill to effect the repeal, which was committed to the Committee on Ways and Means. Strange to say, that committee has not acted on the bill so referred to it; at least no report of any action thereon has been submitted to the House. I have seen it stated in the newspapers that the committee had disposed of the proposition negatively, only two of the members present having voted for it. If this statement be correct, then, Mr. Chairman, have the friends of American industry been betrayed in the house of their supposed friends. In instituting that committee we had reason to believe that you, sir, intended to recognize the policy and necessity of legislating on the side of home industry. Your instincts we know to be right, and we regret that your Committee on Ways and Means has by its action, or rather want of action, jeopardized a great principle, and failed to respond favorably to this demand of the laboring and manufacturing people of the country.

I remember very well the circumstances under which the reduction was made. We were on the eve of the presidential election, and it was supposed to be necessary to conciliate a faction then known as revenue reformers. The election of General Grant on a basis of protection not only extinguished that faction, but demonstrated how utterly mistaken was the theory upon which our republican friends then acted.

And now the altered circumstances of the country appeal to us to undo the great wrong then inflicted upon our people. The repeal is now a revenue measure, and demanded by the wants of the national Treasury. In the ill-advised veto of the President he recommends the increase of our revenues, which I suppose means the imposition of taxes upon the people. If he means to restore the burdens which Congress has from time to time taken off, he will fail to be supported in his recommendation by Congress or the people. In lieu thereof I point this House to the source of revenue indicated in my proposition to repeal the 10 per cent. reduction.

This Government cannot afford to encourage foreign manufactures at the expense of home interests in the present financial crisis. Thousands of workingmen are out of employ and business of every kind is dull. Confidence is wanting and trade is stagnant. The President's veto has still further depressed our great industries, and brought discouragement to our people. Both increased demands for our manufactures and the pacification of labor were expected to follow the adoption of a judicious policy of expansion of the currency. The importing interests, especially the American agents of foreign manufacturers, uniformly approve the present condition of things, seeing in it the prospect of increased business for them. The greater the stagnation of domestic manufactures the better will be their chance for controlling our markets.

I have faith enough in the wisdom of General Grant and the American Congress to believe that some measure of financial legislation may yet receive their united approval which will tend to revive the drooping enterprise of the country. But no financial measure that may be adopted will secure this result, unless accompanied by such legislation as will fortify our home industries in the great struggle for the mastery with foreign manufactures. And the republican party, that has met and mastered so many great questions in the past, must array itself on the side of American labor; or Ichabod will be written on its walls, and its glory will have departed forever.

Mr. KELLOGG. I would inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts what is the change in the duty on silks and silk goods which will be produced by this section?

Mr. DAWES. There is no change at all in the duty on any article of silk. The change is in the construction given at the Treasury Department as to what constitutes silk goods, so that silk goods are allowed to come in under another name.

Mr. BURCHARD. I move to amend the proviso of this section by striking out "25" and inserting "10;" so that it will read:

That this act shall not apply to goods, wares, or merchandise which have as a component material thereof 10 per cent. or over in value of wool or worsted.

The amendment that is proposed by this bill to the present law would raise the duty on three classes of silk goods. One is silk buttons that now come in upon a duty of 50 per cent. ad valorem; Another class, silk ribbons, which I presume the special object of this section is to reach. The third class is silk goods made of silk mixed with India rubber and of silk mixed with wool or worsted. If this section was confined to silk ribbons, and proposed to obviate what are called the frauds or evasions of the present law, I should have no objection to it; but it affects importations of goods composed of silk mixed with other articles to the value of about $10,000,000, increasing the duty from 50 to 60 per cent. ad valorem. The Commissioner of Customs, when before the Committee on Ways and Means, told us that this increase would actually reduce the revenue. His opinion was that 50 or 55 per cent. duty would bring in as much or more revenue than 60 per cent. The duty on silk-covered buttons has heretofore been 50 per cent. and by this bill is enhanced to 60 per cent. The amount of duties received on silk buttons was $129,000; on India-rubber goods, $121,000; on mixed goods, $3,643,657. The increase of duty applies to $10,000,000 worth of silk-mixed goods. I do not think we ought to increase the present duty upon these goods.

It may be said that silks are a luxury. The truth is that silk goods and ribbons are more or less worn by the poorest girl in the land. Will Congress say that they ought not to do so; that the wives and daughters, your laborers and your factory operatives, that sewing-girls and even house servants in the country ought not to adorn themselves or trim their bonnets with silk ribbons? Must the price of the cheaper silk-mixed goods they wear be increased for the benefit of silk manufacturers? The protection is now adequate and ample. The raw silk that comes in free of duty is worth between five and six dollars a pound; that is, admitted free. Silk goods having 50 per cent. protection on the manufactured product have on the labor from 150 to 200 per cent. protection. That is enormous. The amount of manufacture is increased from a capital of $3,000,000 not many years ago to $25,000,000. It seems to me that protection is adequate and even excessive as the law stands.

Now to come down to this particular provision and amendment, namely, to strike out "25" and insert "10" where I have indicated, and explain its intended effects. In case the value of the wool, worsted, cotton, flax, or other material in silk-mixed goods is 10 per cent. of the value of the article, such mixed material must compose more than half the weight and bulk of the fabric. This will secure the avowed object in proposing the modification of the silk tariff. It will prevent goods being brought in as silk-mixed goods made almost wholly of silk or having a single thread run along on the selvage of some other material. In fact we might reduce to 5 per cent. and still accomplish this object.

It seems to me that the duty on all silk-mixed goods, amounting to six or seven million dollars in value, ought not to be increased from 50 to 60 per cent. ad valorem for the purpose of avoiding this evasion of the law. I have offered this amendment in good faith for that purpose. I shall offer another amendment also in the same connection, to extend to other material the proviso which excludes mixtures from the 60 per cent. duty having 25 per cent. value of wool or worsted.

Mr. DAWES. The whole matter was considered by the committee. This was put in after full examiation and upon full information from the Treasury Department. The object was to prevent importers getting through goods which were substantially silk, because there were a few threads of cotton in them, like the statement I have before me. They were allowed to come in at a lower rate of duties because there was a cotton thread along the edge of the goods. And right by the side of it, I have the advertisement of the article after it had got through, in these words:

The following line of colored edge-ribbons are fresh goods, warranted all silk.

These goods after they get through the custom-house were "warranted all silk." This pamphlet which I hold in my hand is full of such advertisements by silk houses of ribbons precisely like this that came through at the reduced rate after the Treasury Department had decided that they were not all silk, having a thread of some other material running through them.

Now, we propose to provide that this reduced duty shall not apply unless the article contains a quarter in value of some other material. My friend from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] wants to provide that if the article contains 10 per cent. of some other material it shall come in at the reduced rate. He might just as well strike out the whole provision. The view of the committee was that when the article contains 25 per cent. in value of a cheaper material, it of course cannot pass in the market as all silk; it will take its place in the market for what it is worth. But if it contains only 10 per cent. in value of inferior material it may still be sold in the market as all silk, and the consumer will pay for it as such although the Government does not receive duty upon it as such. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will not the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois be to produce frauds not only on the Treasury, but upon the people who use the gooods?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir; that is just what I was saying. Goods containing 10 per cent. of an inferior article will be brought so near the line as to tempt the importer to cheat the people who purchase them.

Mr. BURCHARD. I move a further amendment, to insert in the same line before "wool or worsted" the words "cotton, flax;" so as to read "cotton, flax, wool, or worsted."

Now, in regard to the frauds of which the chairman of the committee [Mr. DAWES] speaks, there is no possibility of defrauding the revenue in this case. No one will claim that it is a fraud to import goods made of silk mixed with other material. If the mixture of other material were so slight as to be merely an evasion, it would not amount to 1 per cent. of the value, and the article would have to pay, with the amendment I propose, the same duty as if manufactured entirely of silk. But it is sufficient to require that 10 per cent. of the value of the mixture should be other material, and to charge 60 per cent. duty upon silk-mixed goods having less than 10 per cent. of other material. It is proposed to increase the duty upon all silk-mixed goods 10 per cent., that is one-fifth. At present goods of which silk is the component material of chief value but mixed with worsted, wool, or other material, are imported at 50 per cent.; and during the last three years—not to go further back—several million dollars' worth of these goods have been annually imported. Now it is proposed to require that 25 per cent. in value of these mixed goods shall be wool or worsted, excluding entirely mixed goods of cotton or flax. What will be the effect? In the case of wool at, say, 50 cents a pound and silk at $5.50 a pound, goods composed of an equal mixture in weight of silk and wool would have eleven-twelfths of their value silk and one-twelfth wool. In other words, with wool and silk at the relative prices I have given, the wool is 8⅓ per cent. of the value and one-half of the material in weight. There could be no fraud or evasion in admitting silk goods containing a mixture of 10 per cent. in value of other material at the present duty of 50 per cent. ad valorem, since over half the mixture must then be other material.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. The language of the law on this subject at present is:

On all dress and piece silks, ribbons, and silk velvets or velvets of which silk is the component material of chief value, 60 per cent. ad valorem.

Now, sir, the section under consideration in this bill is an attempt to correct what I cannot help regarding as a fraudulent interpretation of the law by the Treasury Department. I intend no charge against the Secretary of the Treasury. That Department has become so large that no man can comprehend all the details of its management; but I do say that the subordinate to whom the question was referred has perpetrated a fraud both on the people who use the goods and upon the revenue. For six years there have been attempts to secure the passage of a law allowing a refund of duty on certain silk goods because a thread of cotton or other substance ran along the edge to give a raising to that edge. Turned out of the committee of three Congresses, the proposition was at last introduced upon this floor and was scouted from the House as a fraud involving a million dollars, when suddenly it was discovered that a subordinate in the Treasury Department had prepared a letter putting his initials on it, and the Secretary of the Treasury according to the mode of administering the business of that Department had signed it, and more than a million dollars was flowing from the Treasury. One of the parties who received a refund of duties under this action testified before the committee that he and his firm were called upon by a firm of lawyers and requested to enter an appeal and protest on all importations of silk ribbons with raised edges; and on an agreement to give that firm of lawyers one-half of what might be obtained, the lawyers taking the risk, these importers did protest and appeal. They waited six or eight years with no returns; but when that subordinate of the Treasury had written his letter and put his initials on it, and when the Secretary had signed it, that importing house recovered $25,000, the lawyers getting also $25,000, although the firm had only obtained a part of its reclamation. That fraudulent letter of that subordinate of the Treasury Department, thus signed by the Secretary of the Treasury, took nearly $2,000,000 from the Treasury, one half of it going to lawyers whom a suspicious man might believe to have been in conspiracy with that subordinate who writes the letter which the Secretary has to sign.

Under the tariffs of 1828 and 1832 like questions were raised, and the Secretary of the Treasury then ruled that such palpable attempts at a fraudulent evasion of the law were not to be encouraged, but reprehended. And so have our Secretaries done until it became the usage of the Secretary of the Treasury to act as mere registering clerk for his subordinates, when one of them found opportunity to transfer to a conspiring firm of lawyers nearly a million of dollars, and to cheat not only the Treasury but the consumers of silk goods.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLOGG. If the gentleman will withdraw the amendment I will renew it.

Mr. BURCHARD. I withdraw the amendment as to the 25 per cent., but will allow the gentleman to renew my amendment in reference to the insertion of the words "cotton, flax," before the word "wool."

Mr. KELLOGG. I renew that amendment, for I care not if that is adopted. Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not wish to delay the committee in regard to this matter. I think the provision as reported from the committee is well drawn to prevent fraud being practiced by the importers of these goods upon the Treasury Department. If the amendment reducing the 25 per cent. to 10 should prevail, however, and you reduce to 10 per cent. the amount of wool or worsted fabric, you will then, in my judgment, put it in the power of these importers to produce even more flagrant frauds than they have done. And it is not only a fraud upon the Treasury Department which will be carried out if the amendment of my friend from Illinois as originally offered by him shall prevail, but it will be a fraud upon his dear friends and upon my dear friends, the ladies of our families, and upon all the ladies in the land who buy the kind of goods he talks about. In reference to these silk ribbons and other silk goods, if you reduce the amount of mixture to 10 per cent. of worsted or other cheaper material and agree to let them come in at a lower rate of duty, my friend from Illinois must see, and the House must see, that we will get the amount of mixture down so small that no person can tell, unless skilled in such articles, whether they are pure silk or articles made up of a mixture of silk and other materials. I say there should be a sufficient amount of mixture of other material to make it apparent, and I think the committee have well fixed it at 25 per cent. in order to bring it in at a lower rate of duty, both to prevent frauds upon the Treasury Department and frauds upon the consumers all over the country who buy this class of goods. I hope the provision, therefore, will stand as reported by the committee.

Mr. BURCHARD. I will withdraw my first amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have renewed the latter part of the gentleman's amendment, to which I have no objection.

Mr. BURCHARD. My amendment is to insert before the word "wool" the words "cotton, flax."

Mr. DAWES. I hope we will keep it as near as we can to what the committee reported it.

Mr. BURCHARD. The act of 1862, so far as it relates to silk-mixed goods and all mixed goods of which silk is the component material of chief value, provides for 50 per cent. ad valorem. That is a broad provision, applying to all mixed goods. This section as it stands with the amendment I offer would leave it without any limitation, without any allowance for mixture. My proposition would leave the law as it stands, with a limitation to 25 per cent.

Mr. DAWES. I understand the gentleman's amendment is to insert the words "cotton, flax," and I hope that amendment will be adopted, and let us go on.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FIELD. I move to strike out the proviso altogether. It seems to me this provision will make confusion among our officers who have to collect the revenue. In my judgment it is wholly unnecessary. I believe when goods come in as silk goods they should bear this duty, but if we admit this proviso and it becomes a law, it will be impossible for our officers to collect the revenues as they ought to be collected. Who can determine as to the mixture of worsted or cotton in these goods? If they are silk goods, they should bear 60 per cent. ad valorem. I therefore think the proviso should be stricken out. By striking it out we can save a large amount of revenue.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to oppose the amendment. Let us have a vote.

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise pro forma to oppose the amendment. I do not think the trouble will be with those who have the duties to collect, but it will practice fraud in this way: Our wives and daughters, who will imagine they have silk dresses and silk ribbons at the expense of their husbands and fathers, will in fact be wearing goods only 75 per cent. of which will be silk. In other words, we shall have large quantities of silk goods put on the community, so sold, so represented, so bought and paid for, when in the point of fact we will have a deteriorated article of diminished value and diminished worth as will be disclosed in the wearing of them. In other words, it will provide for bringing into the country an inferior class of silk goods, which we purchase and pay for when we desire to make valuable presents to members of our families. I think that will be the practical effect of this proviso.

The amendment of Mr. FIELD was disagreed to.

The Clerk read the second section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the duties now imposed by law on the merchandise hereinafter enumerated imported from foreign countries, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following duties; that is to say:

On all still wines imported in casks, 40 cents per gallon.

On all still wines imported in bottles, $1.50 per case of one dozen bottles, containing each not more than one quart and more than one pint, or twenty-four bottles, containing each not more than one pint; and any excess beyond those quantities found in such bottles shall be subject to a duty of 5 cents per pint or fractional part thereof; but no separate or additional duty shall be collected on the bottles: Provided, That any wines imported containing more than 22 per cent. of alcohol shall be forfeited to the United States: Provided also, That there shall be an allowance of 2 per cent. for leakage on the quantity which shall appear by the gauge to be contained in any cask of wines, and 5 per cent. on all wines, liquors, cordials, and distilled spirits in bottles, to be deducted from the invoice quantity, in lieu of breakage.

Mr. COX. I move to insert between lines 5 and 6 of that section, after the words "that is to say," the following:

On steel in ingots, bars, coils, sheets, and steel wire of all sizes, 2 cents per pound.

In 1872 there were imported into this country for consumption 50,000,000 pounds of this kind of steel. The proposed duty of 2 cents a pound would add to the revenue $1,000,000 from that source. If the Committee on Ways and Means wanted revenue, here was a chance to reduce the tariff and get it. Besides, it would have afforded relief to the general interests of the country. Let it be remembered that mechanical tools and agricultural implements have all more or less of steel in them. I have received letters, and I have no doubt that the Committee on Ways and Means have had authoritative statements from men in the business of manufacturing saws, knives and forks, axes, and what not, made of steel. They show that we could export their hardware and implements if we gave them a fair chance to buy steel abroad. I do not know what the Committee on Ways and Means have done on this subject. I know what they ought to have done, since they pretend so much. If they had given a fair hearing and made a careful examination, they must have come to the conclusion that by some remedial measure they would have added $1,000,000 to the revenue; given an impulse to manufacture, trade, and exports; and benefited the people North, East, South, and West by cheaper and better articles. The steel men whose petition I have before me call attention to the vast importance of the export trade in articles purely American in manufacture, but into which foreign steel enters as the chief component part. They refer to the manner in which the present tax bears so heavily upon them; how it favors the foreign makers of such goods to our disadvantage. They also ask certain specific relief, so that their business may be uninjured by frauds. Was their prayer heard? Where is the clause in this bill?

What response is made to their appeal? This committee propose no relief whatever. This bill, upon the confession of the gentleman from Massachusetts, amounts to nothing so far as revenue is concerned; and yet how he boasted of his courage to come in here and tax! Why does he in this bill impose these fresh and added taxes? Not to get revenue. No? If we are to pay taxes, the money derived from them should go into the Treasury. I do not disfavor the free list which the gentleman's bill proposes to enlarge. Indeed, I would enlarge it so as to approximate that of England, which has only thirteen articles for customs duties. We would thus reduce the cost of their collection, avert fraud, and so energize our prostrate industries as to make the taxing power potential for revenue without destroying and bankrupting business interests.

But, sir, this matter of steel is worthy of the consideration of this House, and unless we are utterly indifferent to the interests of our constituents we should vote in favor of this amendment.

Mr. DAWES. Nothing would gratify the Committee on Ways and Means more than to have the aid of the gentleman from New York, but he sees only one side, and does not see all of that side. He has stated to the House that we got $50,000,000 of revenue from this source alone.

Mr. COX. No, sir; I said that fifty million pounds of these articles were consumed in 1872.

Mr. DAWES. Fifty millions were consumed in 1872?

Mr. COX. Of steel in ingots, bars, sheets, &c., fifty million pounds were imported for consumption in 1872, and on those articles I propose a duty of 2 cents a pound, which would yield a revenue of $1,000,000.

Mr. DAWES. Will my friend tell me how much he will get of revenue from a duty of 2 cents per pound? He is anxious to have something go into the Treasury. He has reminded me six times since this debate commenced that this bill does not bring anything new into the Treasury. Will he tell me how his proposition will affect the Treasury? I would like his aid in supplying the Treasury; will he tell me how his amendment would affect the Treasury—either put money into it or take it out?

Mr. COX. It would put money into the Treasury by way of revenue in the increased importation, because there would be a greater use of steel of this character.

Mr. DAWES. What would be the effect on the revenue?

Mr. COX. I give the gentleman only the results obtained from men engaged in this business. I do not speak as an expert in steel manufactures, but I got the best intelligence I could obtain and the gentleman must have had that intelligence also.

Mr. DAWES. My friend of course means to get right, but it is not exactly safe to depend on little scraps from newspapers. The Committee on Ways and Means had a long hearing, a week or ten days, and heard all the importers of steel and all the manufacturers of steel, and they found it a very difficult question to settle. They were in a good deal of doubt as to what was the best measure to recommend to the House. They did not find themselves able to jump at a right conclusion upon a little slip of newspaper about as long as a small piece of poetry. About seven-eighths of all the steel used in the United States is made here to begin with, and the foreign steel costs just about one-fourth more than the American steel, so that every pound of foreign steel that goes into the manufacture of axes, plows, hoes, harrows, mowing-machines, and sickles adds a quarter to the price to the dear farmers and grangers. That is one thing to be looked to.

Another thing to be looked to is this: that American steel is not quite as good as foreign steel, and that it is a necessity to use foreign steel for some articles and pay this extra price for it. In the manufacture of some articles they must use foreign steel. In a great majority of articles the low grade of American steel is just as good as the low grade of foreign steel, and it is still cheaper, so that it will not do to have it all of one kind or all of the other kind.

If my friend from New York could have had the benefit of listening to all these men, as the Committee on Ways and Means did, he would have seen that there is more difficulty than he supposes in getting at this matter exactly. I will tell the gentleman what was the conclusion of the Committee on Ways and Means about this matter.

Mr. COX. I have heard that the committee voted for my proposition. I suppose the gentleman cannot tell what occurred in the committee?

Mr. DAWES. I will tell the gentleman what was the conclusion of the committee.

Mr. COX. I am assured that they did actually vote for my proposition. They are entitled to more credit for wisdom than I gave them.

Mr. DAWES. If my friend from New York is not willing I should tell him the conclusion of the committee, I will tell it to the rest of the House. The committee found the question so difficult and complicated, entering so largely into the industries of the country, that they would not jump to the conclusion of the gentleman from New York, putting all these articles at 2 cents a pound, thereby reducing the revenue somewhat, or else increasing to a corresponding extent the foreign importation and disturbing the whole American manufacture. They concluded therefore that they would not report a proposition on that subject in this bill, but would mature some plan for a future session of Congress. This was the best they could do after hearing for a week or ten days various parties interested. We did not have the benefit of a consultation with the gentleman from New York, or perhaps we should have been able to arrive at the result which he has reached. I hope the House will not, upon the brief consideration which the gentleman from New York has been able to give to the subject in a five-minute speech, introduce this revolution in the whole steel trade and manufacture of the United States.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. COX, there were—ayes 29, noes 81; no quorum voting.

Mr. COX. As I have failed to get the aid I expected from gentlemen on the other side in this matter vital to farmers and mechanics, I do not insist on a further count.

The amendment of Mr. COX was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the duties now imposed by law on the merchandise hereinafter enumerated, imported from foreign countries, there shall be levied, collected, and paid the following duties; that is to say:

On all still wines imported in casks, 40 cents per gallon.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend by striking out "40" in the clause just read and inserting "50," so as to make the duty on all still wines imported in casks 50 cents per gallon. The present duties on still wines are 25 cents a gallon for wines worth 40 cents a gallon and less; on wines worth more than 40 cents a gallon and less than $1 a gallon, the duty is 60 cents per gallon; on wines worth $1 per gallon or more, $1 per gallon, to which is added 25 per cent. ad valorem. The proposition of the Committee on Ways and Means is that instead of the present duty, which is somewhat on the ad valorem principle, we shall substitute a specific rate to which I believe the committee unanimously assent. The committee at first agreed to report and did report to the House a bill fixing the rate at 50 cents per gallon. Subsequently, and before the bill upon which we are now acting was reported, the rate was changed by the committee to 40 cents.

I hold in my hand the statistics of the importations of still wines into this country for the last five years; I will only stop now to say that the average cost of those wines during that time has been 33.05 cents per gallon. The importations for the last year were 8,210,000 gallons, at a valuation of less than 40 cents, and 920,000 gallons at a valuation of over 40 cents; thereby showing that eight-ninths of the wines imported last year were of a valuation under 40 cents, and thus paid the lowest rate of duty.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the grape crop in Europe has been short for the last two years, and the value of wines has largely increased, while at the same time the importation has largely decreased. For the month of January of this year the importation was 320,000 gallons, as against 580,000 gallons last year, a reduction of 40 per cent.; and the average value of the wines imported during that month was over 40 cents a gallon. A like result is shown by the statistics of February and March. In each case the importations have largely decreased, while the price has largely increased. So that instead of wines being now imported into the country at 25 cents a gallon, the importers are actually paying 60 cents a gallon. In this situation they come to us and ask for a specific rate. We can understand the reason for this request; it is to get a less rate of duty. I advocate this amendment as a revenue measure, and I suppose every member on the floor who supports it will do so for the same reason—as a revenue measure. I undertake to say that every gallon of wine that would be imported at 40 cents per gallon will be imported at 50. I therefore favor 50 cents a gallon as the rate to be fixed.

Mr. KASSON. I regret, sir, that my colleague on the committee [Mr. FOSTER] has felt obliged to dissent from the conclusions of the majority of the committee on this subject. The facts bearing on this question are, I think, perhaps as conclusive as they could be on any subject in its nature disputable. We have had for the last year an importation of more than 8,000,000 gallons of cheap wines paying 25 cents per gallon. Of still wines paying a larger rate—60 cents per gallon and 25 per cent. ad valorem—there have been less than 1,000,000 gallons imported. The receipts on both classes of wines were, in round numbers, $2,840,000. Upon the basis of a like importation of the same grades of wines, at the same cost, the revenue at 40 cents would be $3,711,000. Consequently in the same importation there would be under the proposition of the committee an increase of the revenue to the extent of more than $800,000. The question then as one of revenue simply is, how far is it safe for us to go in levying a duty upon a cheap article of wine without at the same time diminishing the importation?

My answer to that is this: We believe we have gone to the extreme limit which will not result in a diminution of revenue to the Treasury of the United States. And for this reason: when you put the duty upon a cheap wine consumed by the laboring classes, largely consumed by the German, French, and foreign residents of our cities from New Orleans to Boston, you certainly can come to a point where they will cease to buy for their current consumption these genuine wines. One of two results will follow: either they will change entirely their beverage, abandon wines entirely, or else they will import what is known as heavy-bodied wines and then dilute them one-half as they do in such cases in order to give an adulterated article for consumption which can and will be beyond a certain amount.

Now, in answer to the question just put to me, I will say there has been such an opportunity of fraud as in all cases of ad valorem duties and the committee have diligently sought in every case possible to substitute specific for ad valorem duties. For example, a wine which ranges above 40 cents a gallon is apt, when there is a difference of 35 per cent. in duty, to be fraudulently invoiced at 39 cents when in point of fact it costs 41 cents. We have reason to believe that temptation, as in all other cases, is found in regard to wines. Our fixing it at these figures is based upon the best evidence we can get as to the consumption. If the consumption will bear no more than 40 cents a gallon duty the conclusion is clear that the raising of that valuation, that rate of duty, to 50 cents, in addition to fluctuation and enhanced value here mentioned, will result in stopping its consumption to a great extent. As a question of revenue, the committee have come to the conclusion, which appears in their report, that it is not safe to go at this time above 40 cents duty without loss to the revenue.

I believe I have spoken in reference to what is necessary, except a single point, and that is the rate of duty ad valorem comes much higher as proposed by the bill upon low grades of wine than upon the higher grades.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BECK. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$1.50" and inserting "$2;" so as to make it read 50 cents a gallon in casks and $2 in bottles.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word in support of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER,] for his amendment and mine mean the same thing. If you make the tariff 50 cents a gallon when imported in casks, it ought to be $2 or $2.10 when imported in bottles.

I do not know that it is fair to tell what oscillations and disagreements we had in committee on this question. I may be allowed to say that we have had more trouble over this than anything else, when it is considered that we all desired the same end. The importations for last year as shown by the book furnished by the Bureau of Statistics, which I have in my hand, were as follows: 8,323,273 gallons, valued at not over 40 cents, paying a duty of 25 cents per gallon; its value was $2,673,195, which paid a duty of $2,080,818. Of wine valued over 40 cents and not over $1 per gallon, duty at 60 cents per gallon, there were 737,458 gallons, valued at $509,739, which paid a duty of $442,775. Of wine valued at over $1 per gallon, which paid $1 and 25 per cent. added, there were 197,132 gallons, valued at $397,790, which paid a duty of $296,579. The total importation of still wines for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, was $9,257,863, on which there was collected a duty of $2,820,172. If the duty is fixed at 50 per cent. and the quantity should remain the same we imported last year, the duty would amount to $4,628,936, or an increase of revenue of $1,808,764. If it is placed at 40 cents as now proposed, it will be a loss of $925,791, or nearly $1,000,000, from what 50 cents would produce.

The only question is, would as much be imported at 50 cents as was imported heretofore, or as much as will be imported at 40 cents? If we put it at 50 cents per gallon in casks and $2 a dozen in bottles it will produce an increase in the revenue of nearly $1,000,000 a year. The simple question is, would the imports fall off? I think they would not; the facts all go to show they would not. The wine brought in now at 25 cents a gallon has been of a sort (as a class) that almost equaled that which paid 60 cents a gallon duty. Several gentlemen engaged in this business, who came before us, told us the change in the value of gold in France had almost ruined them, and that they had so much to pay for the low-priced wines that it brought the duty up to 60 cents; in other words, they said that wine formerly imported at 25 cents a gallon now had to pay 60 cents a gallon, because of the change in the value of money, which proved how close to the line they ran. Of course the consumers were charged as much for it as if it had paid 60 cents. No man could tell the difference between wine worth 39 cents abroad and wine worth 41 cents; it sells at retail here at the same price, the duty saved going into the pocket of the importer.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 510) donating condemned cannon and cannon-balls to the posts of the Grand Army of the Republic of Philadelphia, and other associations, for monumental purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. No. 2999) for the relief of Henry A. Webster, N. B. McCollum, and A. Colby, of Washington Territory, pre-emptors on the Makah Indian reservation; and the bill (H. R. No. 1590) to provide for the better protection of the frontier settlements of Texas against Indian and Mexican depredations.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the House of the following titles, with amendments in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

The bill (H. R. No. 2538) to legalize and establish a ponton railway-bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien; and

The bill (H. R. No. 3166) to correct the date of commissions of certain officers of the Army.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 141) for the relief of certain contractors for the construction of vessels of war and steam machinery; and

A bill (S. No. 654) to extend the time for the completion of the railroad from Saint Croix River or Lake, between townships 25 and 31, to the west end of Lake Superior, and to Bayfield, in the State of Wisconsin.

TARIFF AND INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. WOOD. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] to the bill as reported by the committee in this regard will not be adopted. This question is a very simple one, and easily comprehended, I think, by the committee, and in my judgment can admit of no doubt. It is simply a question of revenue, neither more nor less. It is to adjust the duty on still wines to that limitation which would produce the most money to the Treasury, and that is all there is of it.

When this subject came before the Committee on Ways and Means it was placed in my charge, and for the purpose of obtaining information from that Department of the Government best informed upon all questions of revenue from import duties I addressed the Secretary, and have received two replies, which I ask the Clerk to read in the order of their dates.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 24, 1874.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, in which you state that a delegation of wine importers of the city of New York have lately had a hearing before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, in which they requested "a change of the now existing rates of ad valorem duties on still wines into a specific one of 40 cents per gallon."

In reply to your inquiry how far the above proposition meets with my views relative to the revenue and the convenience of the importing trade, I have to say that the imposition of simple specific duties is desirable in all cases where it can properly be done, and it seems to me that this is a case where the convenience of the trade and that of the customs officers would be promoted by the change proposed, and would avoid complications which now arise in regard to the value.

I have therefore to recommend such a change in the law as will fix one specific duty upon all still wines.

As to the rate of duty per gallon which should be fixed in place of that now established, I have to say that in the memorial of the points made before your committee by these parties it is stated that the average amount of duties per gallon collected for five years, between 1868 and 1872, ranged from 35.33 cents in 1868 to 30.89 cents in 1872. Upon the basis of this statement it seems to me that the rate of 40 cents per gallon would be a proper one, and would yield an increase of revenue over that now collected under the rates established by law.

I am, very respectfully,

WM. A. RICHARDSON,
Secretary.

Hon. FERNANDO WOOD,
House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 5, 1874.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 4th instant relative to the proposed change in the present mixed duties on still wines.

You state that by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means you have reported a bill to the House fixing the duties at 50 cents per gallon in casks and $2 per dozen in cases, but that the wine and spirit traders' society have protested against these rates as almost prohibitory, and insist upon the duty being fixed at 40 cents per gallon and $1.50 per case, or that the present law shall remain unaltered. You ask my opinion as to whether the revenue of the country would be increased by the duties they propose, and what would be the effect if the duties were fixed at the higher rates stated in the bill reported by you.

From the report of the Bureau of Statistics it appears that the total quantity of still wines imported during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1873, was 9,257,863 gallons, which paid duty as follows: 8,323,273 gallons at 25 cents, 737,458 at 60 cents, and 197,132 gallons at $1 and 25 per cent. ad valorem. It will thus be seen that the revenue derived from the importation of wine paying 25 cents duty was $2,080,818, about five-sevenths of the total revenue from that source. The rate of 40 cents per gallon would, upon the same quantity, yield an addition to the revenue of $1,248,491.15, from which deduct the reduction of duty of 20 cents per gallon on the second grade and 60 cents per gallon and 25 per cent. ad valorem on the higher grades, would still give a net gain of $883,172.79.

The gain would, however, be somewhat more than this, as under the present law still wines in bottles are not subject to ad valorem duty. These figures would also be further varied by the fact that the above calculation is based entirely on 40 cents per gallon, which is not the exact equivalent of $1.50 per case. I do not apprehend, so far as I am now able to judge, that the rate of 40 cents would check importations of the lower grades of wines to any considerable extent, while it would undoubtedly stimulate the importation of the better grades of wine. The imposition of 50 cents per gallon and $2 per case would not lessen the importation of the better grades; but I fear that it would curtail the shipments of the lower grades to a great extent, and so much so that the rate of 40 cents would be more advantageous as a matter of revenue than that of 50 cents.

I am, very respectfully,

W. A. RICHARDSON,
Secretary.

Hon. FERNANDO WOOD,
House of Representatives.

Mr. WOOD. That is the best argument I could address to the committee in behalf of letting the bill stand as it was reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I renew the amendment. Let us understand, Mr. Chairman, precisely what we are asked to do. According to the importations for January, February, and March, the value of wine which will be reached by the section which we are considering would be above 40 cents; would be for January; a little rising 40 cents; for February, a little rising 41 cents; for March, a little rising 42 cents; so that under the exising law the duty is 60 cents a gallon. We are asked by the section as it stands in the bill to make the duty 40 cents; but the Committee on Ways and Means, by a bill reported to this House on the 4th of March, recommended that the duty should be 50 cents on all still wines imported in cask, and on all still wines in bottles $2 per case of one dozen bottles, so that the Committee on Ways and Means has given its indorsement to the amendment which I renew quite as much as it has to the proposition in the bill.

We all agree that there should be a specific duty, as is recommended by the officers of the Treasury. We ask that it shall be put at such a figure as will produce the most revenue. The British tariff is not regarded as a protective tariff, yet the tariff put a few years ago on red and white wines in Great Britain was $1.32 in gold per gallon, or 5*s.* 6*d.* English. The present British tariff on wines is from 1*s.* to 2*s.* 11*d.*, the average being 2*s.* 6*d.*, which is 60 cents a gallon in gold. We are asked here to reduce the duty on wines—because this proposition is for a reduction—below the figures of the British revenue tariff.

These gentlemen tell us that this will reduce the consumption. What is the difference between the figures of the gentleman on the other side and our figures? It is 2 cents a bottle on wine. Are the consumers of wine to be prevented from drinking their wine by a difference of duty of 2 cents a bottle? It is absurd.

Mr. KASSON. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that we first had 15 cents; and on his theory we could add 2 cents at a time until we got it up to $10.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. On the contrary, I call attention to the fact that the British duty now is 60 cents a gallon. This proposition for a specific duty comes from the gentlemen who also ask for its reduction. We grant them the specific duty. I do not propose to make it less than the British free-trade tariff.

Mr. KASSON. Which is 24 cents a gallon.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Which on wine exceeding 15 per cent. and not exceeding 24 per cent. of alcohol is 2*s.* 6*d.* per gallon, or 60 cents. Now, there is another point. It was found in the experience of England that when the duty on wine was reduced from $1.32 to 60 cents a gallon wine came in direct competition with the beers of the country. I desire to call the attention of those gentlemen who want to favor our German friends, that this proposition is one directly in antagonism with the manufacturers of beer, an article which is manufactured from the grain of the West.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SHELDON. I do not by any means charge the gentleman from New York [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS] with misrepresenting the true position of things; but his remarks are calculated to mislead, and undoubtedly will mislead. It may happen that by reason of a short crop, or some other exceptional cause, the price of wine which paid a duty of 35 cents per gallon heretofore now goes beyond its former price; it so happens at this moment.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. It has not been so until the last three months.

Mr. SHELDON. Suppose that it happens this year. I say this is unfair, because in the contemplation of the statute it is assumed that there is a class of wine that will at all times be below 40 cents a gallon in price. Now, let me ask the gentleman this question? He has given us the price of wine for the three months preceding the 1st of April. What was the importation of the lower grades of wine? It fell off. That is the history the world over.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] has the figures.

Mr. SHELDON. I cannot be interrupted now. That is the fact; the importers complain that they cannot import the lower grades of wine at the duty which the law fixed at the present prices of wine. This is the exact condition of things. For five years, beginning in 1868 and ending in 1872, the average duty upon all grades of still wines was 33.05 cents per gallon. This bill is an actual increase of that duty of about 7 cents. For the year 1872 the average rate of duty was 30.89 cents per gallon. This bill, therefore, proposes an increase of duty of over 9 cents per gallon.

Now, it was not the intention of the Committee on Ways and Means, as announced by the chairman, [Mr. DAWES,] to increase any of the duties imposed by our laws. They fix this at 40 cents per gallon, because they thought it perhaps a better figure than any other. But there is something besides revenue to be considered in this matter. The duty of 50 cents per gallon will practically deny the use of cheap wines to the poor people of this country, and it will let in only valuable wines in greater abundance for the rich people and at a cheaper rate. The result will be that those people who desire some stimulant in the shape of wine will be driven to drinking Bourbon whisky or the higher-priced wines produced in Ohio or somewhere else.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend so as to make the rate 55 cents per gallon. I am impelled to take the floor simply to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the fact that there can be no reliance whatever placed upon the returns of values of wines by the importers. It is probably as well known a fact as any fact in existence that the people of this nation drink more high-priced wines in proportion to their number, and perhaps without that qualification, than any other nation in the world. Yet, if you look at the statistics, it will be found that we import more low-priced wines in the same proportion than any other nation in the world. Why is that? It is because we are almost the only nation that has an ad valorem tariff on wine. If that was the case with wine alone one might look to other causes for this difference.

But there is another fact: that the people of this nation wear more high-priced silks, satins, velvets, flannels, linens, cambrics, calicoes, laces, embroideries, than any other nation in the world. And yet the average price of these articles that we import is only 50 per cent. of what is imported into other countries. Why is this? Because again we are the only nation that has an ad valorem tariff on those goods, importing them at a certain duty if they cost so much, and at a certain higher rate of duty if they cost so much more. Therefore the rule is precisely that an ad valorem duty brings undervaluation. Yet there are figures to-day in the Treasury Department, which can be obtained by the Committee on Ways and Means if they will call for them, showing the difference between these rates of valuation on the same articles in this country and in Europe, figures obtained by a gentleman who was sent over there. And it would appear that we do not collect upon the same goods under an ad valorem tariff more than 50 per cent. of what we ought to collect. Therefore I say that this mode of valuing wines as a basis for our tariff is entirely illusory. Let us fix a specific rate of duty. The difficulty with the present mode of levying duty on these articles is that it makes the cheaper class too dear, while it allows the more expensive class to come in at too low a rate. I think that with a duty of 50 cents a gallon, three-fourths of a million dollars, or one million dollars, or possibly one million and a half of dollars more can be collected on these wines than with a duty of 40 cents. The moment you make it immaterial to the importer what the price of the wine is, you will find the valuation of the wines coming to this country will be increased at least 25 per cent., and I think 50 per cent. I desire to collect this million or more of dollars upon wine, which is a luxury, not a necessary; and I wish to hear no more of a tax of a million dollars on friction matches. There will be no difficulty in collecting this amount from wines the moment there is no opportunity to have any wrong done in the valuation.

A single word more——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] gives his own opinion that there will be just as much wine consumed under a duty of 50 cents per gallon as under a duty of 40 cents. Every gentleman on this floor has of course the right to his own opinion; and no one will undertake to interfere with that right; but, as against the individual opinion of any gentleman, I submit to the House the fact that the entire trading interest in this article, while demanding a duty of thirty to thirty-five cents per gallon, has assented to a duty of 40 cents as the highest which will enable the dealers to continue in the trade. These gentlemen who import to sell again have simply one interest; that is to sell as much as possible. A difference of two or three cents one way or the other is nothing to them, provided it does not affect the amount sold. In the second place, not only is this the opinion of persons in the trade, but the opinion of the Treasury Department, which is supposed to represent the interest of the United States, gives 40 cents as the maximum; and the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means have agreed upon that rate. I give these facts in order that gentlemen who have not entire confidence in their indiviual opinions may have something upon which to base their conclusions.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Who of all the people of the United States appeared before the gentleman's committee asking a higher rate of duty; and who appeared asking a lower rate? Who has been considered as representing the opposite side to that of the importers and others interested in the business?

Mr. KASSON. I do not know, except so far as the interest of the United States has been represented by its proper officers.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Who are they?

Mr. KASSON. The officers of the Treasury Department. The other interest that has asked an adjustment of specific instead of ad valorem duties is the interest of the trade as represented by men from New York, from New Orleans, and from all the cities in the country.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move to amend so as to make the duty 60 cents per gallon. I do not propose to detain the committee more than two or three minutes. I am by principle a free-trader; but so long as we have a tariff, I believe in protecting equally every interest of our country. I do not believe it right to protect the iron interests of Pennsylvania or the manufacturing interests of New England, unless we also protect the agricultural and vinicultural interests of the great West. So long as we have a tariff I believe in protecting all interests alike. I am satisfied that by fixing this duty on wines at 60 cents we shall increase the revenues of the Government at least a million or a million and a half of dollars, while at the same time it will aid the wine producers of our country in producing a pure and unadulterated article of cheap wine. Gentlemen tell us that we ought to import wines. Why, sir, what kind of an article do we receive from abroad? It is next to impossible to buy a drop of pure imported port wine in the market; almost every drop is adulterated, as you will find if you take your chemists and examine it. We can produce in the United States all the wine that we desire. Is it not, then, better to produce them at home than to import them? I contend that it is. We in California can produce all the wines needed for the consumption of this country. We have fourteen million acres of land well adapted to the growing of grapes. We can produce upon those lands six hundred gallons to the acre, and we do produce in that proportion; while in Europe they produce only one hundred and sixty to two hundred gallons per acre; and this is their production in only one crop out of three, while our crop never fails. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask him to read a letter on this subject which I have received from an importing house in New York City. This letter speaks the sentiments of the wine-growers of California.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, March 5, 1874.

HONORED SIR: We have noticed in the public prints that Mr. WOOD, of New York, has introduced a bill (No. 2113) to regulate duties on imported wines, the object of which is to change the present duties of specific and ad valorem tax to a strict specific duty of 40 cents per gallon on all still wines. You are, we suppose, perfectly acquainted with the present rates, but we will, however, recapitulate them. Wines costing less than 40 cents per gallon are liable to 25 cents duty; wines costing less than 60 cents per gallon are liable to 60 cents duty; wines costing less than $1 per gallon or more, $1 duty and ad valorem. The bill of Mr. WOOD is offered by the importers of this country from the fact that no good, sound wines can be purchased under 40 cents now, and may not be for some years to come, on account of the short crops in Europe. They, of course, will be vastly benefited by introducing all wines at the rates which Mr. WOOD's bill proposes. Against this we have naught to complain, but would only call your attention to the extreme low duty that they wish placed on higher grades of wine.

You are, we suppose, well aware that the California vintners have been for the past few years endeavoring to raise a superior quality of wine, and have eventually succeeded in doing so. They now compete successfully with the low grades of imported wines, and are fast reaching that point where they can compete with these wines that are at present imported under the 60-cent clause, but if Mr. WOOD's bill passes in its present shape they will be driven out of the market entirely. If the law is changed at all, and we see no reason why a specific duty should not be agreed upon, it should be at a higher rate than the one proposed; 50 or 55 cents should be the very lowest figure of duty on all wines. We will give you an example: California Riesling can now be sold in New York at $1.05 to $1.12½, currency, per gallon; a like quality of Rhine wine is sold for similar price. Make the duty 40 cents, and the importers can sell at 85 and 90 cents, for which our California cannot be produced. Another: We sell now a pure-juice port at $1.20, currency. Imported ports (not pure juice) are selling at 90 and 95 cents, gold; the duty proposed will allow them to be sold at a slight advance on those prices, but will prevent our pure port coming into the market, while adulterated European wines will continue to hold sway.

We have not had the time to consult our vintner friends in California or we should be able to present for your consideration a petition as long nearly in inches as our great State has miles. We trust you will endeavor to protect the interests of the vintners of our State, as you have already endeavored to do, in lowering the tax on brandies, and see that the duties (if changed) will not be under 50 or 55 cents per gallon.

You will, we trust, pardon us with taking up so much of your valuable time.

With the highest consideration, we are, yours, truly,

B. DREYFUS & CO.

J. K. LUTTRELL, Esq., Washington, D. C.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Mr. Chairman, the vinicultnrists of the Pacific coast demand protection. Adopt the amendment; fix the duty on still wines at 50 cents per gallon, and in less than ten years we will export millions of gallons of cheap wines. I am a free-trader, but so long as we have a tariff, so long as the duty on iron is kept up to protect the iron interests of Pennsylvania, or to protect the manufacturing interests of the country, or the hemp producers of Kentucky and Iowa, I will demand protection for the wine producers of California. I demand for the farmers and wine-growers of the Pacific States the same equal privileges and protection that are enjoyed by any other industrial interests of our great Commonwealth.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BECK. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from California, [Mr. LUTTRELL.] When last upon the floor I was going on to show that the average rate of 40 cents per gallon, while of course it will produce an increase of revenue over what we are now receiving from this source, will yield a million dollars less than we would receive at 50 cents a gallon. It is a well-settled fact, as shown before the committee, that almost all the lower grades of wine are put so close to 40 cents a gallon that the recent change in the currency in France and Germany has thrown them into the higher grades, paying a duty of 60 cents, so that these men are now begging to be relieved from the duty which they are thus compelled to pay. There is no man who can tell the difference between a wine costing 39½ cents a gallon which comes in at a duty of 25 cents, and wine costing 41 cents a gallon which pays a duty of 60 cents.

The amount of increase from 40 to 50 is $1,000,000. Why should not wine bear that much? Whisky is paying a duty of 70 cents a gallon, when the corn of Illinois and Iowa can be sold for 30 cents a bushel. They are required to make three and a half gallons of whisky or alcohol out of a bushel of corn. Government gets a duty of $2.45 from the whisky or alcohol manufactured from a bushel of corn, which bushel of corn only pays to the farmer 30 cents. If the Government charges $2.45 on the product of that bushel of corn, why should not 50 cents be put on wine coming from foreign countries, and especially when you allow madeiras and sherries and all such fine wines to come in at that rate?

As to letters written by the Secretary, the committee know and the House knows they are the mere opinions of some clerk in the Bureau of Statistics, signed as a matter of routine by the Secretary. The value of that opinion is worth no more than the value of any opinion obtained from this book. We know there will not be a gallon of wine which would be imported at 40 cents that will not come in at 50 cents.

Importers are clamoring, as it appears, for 40 cents. If they get it at 40 cents they will still charge as high a price as if they paid 50 cents. The consumer will never know anything of the 10 cents difference in the tax. He will never know whether they paid 40 or 50 cents for it. The revenue, however, will know to the extent of $1,000,000. If we make it 50 cents we will get that much more money, which is more than we get from coal and salt both put together.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I renew it. Whereas it has been agreed that we shall have a specific instead of an ad valorem duty, the strong argument of my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] in support of specific against ad valorem duty need not be considered. It is an able argument. It was that which led the committee to its conclusion. The debate here is whether it should be 40 or 50 cents. If you have a specific duty it results in the nature of things in letting a higher grade in at a lower rate and the lower grade is put up to a higher rate. Everything that costs less than 40 cents under the present law pays 25 cents duty. Therefore there will be 15 cents added to the duty on all cheap wines by the proposition of the committee. It is proposed by the amendment to make it 25 cents instead of 15 cents; that is, to add 25 cents to every gallon of cheap wine. My colleague says it will add a million and a half to the revenue and the gentleman from Kentucky says that it will add a million dollars. The revenue all told on still wines was less than three millions, and the statisticians of the Treasury and of the custom-houses, those who furnish these statistics which guide us in the speculations upon which we run riot, say it you put it at 50 cents you will decrease the revenue. That is their opinion. I know it is not worth much. The gentleman from Kentucky says it is not worth anything. My colleague says it is not worth much. I do not know that it is. I do not know mine is worth much. Nevertheless, sir, we have been going for the last four or five years to these sources of information.

I got a little help from my friend from New York, who wants it at 50 cents, for he says since the wines from some circumstance have gone beyond 40 cents to the other line and took a higher rate and become subject to the higher duty, the aggregate duties have fallen off. So I expected they would. So I reasoned it. So they will fall off if you raise from 40 to 50 cents just in the same way.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS rose.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. He wants to tell you the reason.

Mr. DAWES. He told me that a great many times. I do not see it after all. If the moment they get up above 40 cents and pay increased duty they have fallen off, so they will now. I may be mistaken.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAWES. O, no; the trouble is that my friend puts hard questions. What I have stated is a stubborn fact. If you add 15 or 25 cents to the value of the cheap wine you cannot bring it in and sell it in competition with California cheap wines, or the wines of the district of my kind friend here from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER.] The whole effect of it will be to exclude cheap wines from consumption in this country. But our object should be to put it at some intermediate point, and that intermediate point you cannot cipher out in arithmetic; you have to estimate it from the best data you have, and those who know most about the business will give us the best data; those engaged in the business, if they are honest, will give us the best data. Now, they say if you put it at 25 cents you diminish the revenue, and that if you put it at 40 cents, that is, 15 cents additional protection to the Ohio wines and the California wines, it will hold the revenue just about where it is now. This may not be good for anything. The gentleman from New York does not think it is worth a copper, nor does the gentleman from Ohio. But that is what those who are in the business of collecting our duties tell us, and it seems to me that it is in the nature of the case true. Why, there are cheap wines all over Europe, so cheap that if you did not put this duty on them they would come in here and be used at our tables as a common drink, just as water is now used.

Mr. FOSTER. Not in Ohio.

Mr. DAWES. No, but in other places.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Perhaps in Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. It would take the place of water on our tables. Why is it not used here now? Because you put 40 cents duty on it. If you put such a duty on it as to preclude its importation and make it too expensive, what will take its place? Why, a poor kind of another article, which would be fatal to this argument if I should name it.

Mr. POTTER. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, which I understand was only offered pro forma. The gentleman from Massachusetts was quite right in saying that everybody who has spoken in respect of this question is in favor of a specific duty on wines. I quite agree that if it is ever desirable to have a specific duty at all it is so in the tariff on wines, and I am glad that so far the Committee on Ways and Means have made progress in the right direction.

On the question whether this duty should be forty or fifty cents a gallon, it seems to me that the authorities cited to the House are all one way; and that is that the duty should be 40 cents a gallon. The only argument advanced for the higher duty is that if we advance the duty the same amount of wine will be consumed, and thus give a larger amount of revenue than can be had under the 40 cents duty. But that is not the opinion of experts in the trade, who ought to know most about it, and it is not the opinion of the Treasury officers nor of the Committee on Ways and Means, and for once, at any rate I think, that the Treasury officers and the committee are right.

Besides, the House should bear in mind that if we put the duty at only 40 cents, we shall then be increasing the existing duty 60 per cent. on seven-eighths of the wine imported. The great bulk of the still wines come in now at 25 cents a gallon. I believe I am entirely right in saying that out of the still wines which came in under the existing tariff seven-eighths came in at 25 cents a gallon.

Mr. FOSTER. They did last year, but they do not now.

Mr. DAWES. They have risen above that lately.

Mr. POTTER. Yes, and the importation has fallen off lately correspondingly. Now why was the duty on wines recommended by the committee to be so greatly increased as from 25 to 40 cents a gallon? Because a large portion of the low-priced wines brought in under this duty of 25 cents a gallon have been manufactured wines, not genuine wines; and genuine wines could not be furnished while the duty was but 25 cents on cheap wines to compete with the manufactured wines; but it is believed that a uniform duty of 40 cents a gallon will have the effect of inducing only sound and genuine wines to come in, and yet keep the price within reach of that portion of our people by whom the cheap wines are consumed, that is those of small means who habitually consume wine, and who are chiefly persons of foreign birth. This is not a class of our people who would consume whisky under any circumstances; so that the gentlemen from the distilling districts need not fear the competition of those foreign wines, but the bill proposed is in the interest of that class of citizens who consume wine every day and will injure nobody else.

Now to raise the duty on wines to 50 cents per gallon will be to make the duty on low-priced wines double what it now is. That is to double the duty on seven-eighths of all the still wine imported. That, it seems to me, would be an extraordinary measure of protection. As it is, the committee's bill increases the duty nearly 60 per cent., and I am satisfied that this is as much increase in the tariff as should now be made on this article, and that the Committee on Ways and Means are entirely right when they say that the duty ought not to be more than 40 cents, and that if we put it at 50 cents we should lose, instead of gain revenue by it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WOOD. I move to amend the amendment, so as to make the tax 25 cents a gallon.

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is in order.

The question was taken on Mr. LUTTRELL'S amendment to the amendment to strike out "40" and insert "60," and it was not agreed to.

Mr. NIBLACK. I move to amend the amendment so as to make the sum 45 cents. I have been charged by my colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] with being on both sides of this question, and to some extent, sir, that is true. When it was first proposed to change the duty on still wines from an ad valorem rate to a specific duty of 40 cents a gallon, it struck me unfavorably in some respects.

In the first place, I have for some years entertained the theory that ad valorem duties were on the whole the fairest way of imposing tariff taxes. But further investigation has convinced me that for a large class of articles specific duties are the best and fairest taxes, and furnish the only practicable way of honestly collecting money of our tariff taxes which we are compelled to impose for the purpose of raising revenue. So I have yielded my objection to imposing specific duties.

But I still dislike the idea of placing the higher classes of wines, such as sherry and Madeira, on the same level with other wines. At one time I was disposed to favor a duty of 50 cents per gallon as perhaps the fairest compromise between the two extremes. But upon looking further into the matter I ascertained that only a small portion of the revenues at present derived from the duties on wines is derived from the higher grades, and having given this subject a great deal of consideration I have come to the conclusion that perhaps the fairest experiment—for it is only an experiment—will be a duty of 40 cents a gallon. That is the rate recommended by the Treasury Department; that is the rate recommended also by some of those connected with the trade, who are evidently gentlemen of intelligence, and whose statements to the committee appeared to be very fair and reasonable.

If I was absolutely certain or even reasonably sure that we would import the same amount of wine with a duty of 50 cents per gallon and would get a million dollars more of revenue, the temptation to me would be very great to try the experiment of fixing the duty at 50 cents per gallon. But our experience in cases of this sort has demonstrated to us the fact that as a rule an increase of the rates of duty on any article does to some extent at least tend to diminish the amount of the article imported, and therefore I am not satisfied that the proposed increase of duty to 50 cents per gallon would not have the effect of decreasing the amount of wine imported and at the same time afford an unnecessary protection to the wine producers of this country. I am willing to afford some protection to that interest, but not to interfere in any degree with the revenue to be collected.

Although, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has said, I may have been upon both sides of this question, I am now settled down upon 40 cents per gallon and disposed to adhere to that rate for the present.

Mr. WOOD. I rise to oppose the amendment. I call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the fact that this proposed duty of 40 cents per gallon would make these wines pay a higher ad valorem duty than any other article imported into the United States. There are now imported on an average 9,000,000 gallons of wine yearly, of which 8,000,000 gallons are wines of the lower grades. Therefore, when we fix a specific instead of an ad valorem duty, it is necessary that we should impose one duty upon all wines irrespective of quality. These lower grades of wine cost at the place of exportation not over 20 cents per gallon. Under existing law we impose a duty of 25 cents per gallon, or over 100 per cent. ad valorem. By this bill it is proposed to increase the duty to 40 cents per gallon, or 200 per cent. upon the value of the article at the place of exportation. I repeat, that throughout the whole tariff there is not a single other article that pays so heavy a duty in proportion to its actual value as this article will pay, should this proposition of the Committee on Ways and Means be adopted.

The arguments of gentlemen here show how groundless is the foundation upon which the opposition to this proposition stands. One asks us why should whisky be taxed so much and wine only so much. Whatever such arguments may be worth I leave the House to determine. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] tells us that wine is a luxury. Sir, this wine is not a luxury. It embraces the common Rhine wine consumed by Germans in this country, the poorer classes, who in their own country have been in the habit of consuming it as a common beverage like water. So with the common red wine used by the poorer classes of French and German immigrants. These wines go upon no rich man's table whatever; he has a higher grade of wine, which may properly be considered a luxury, and he can justly be made to pay for it. I deny, however, that this class of wines is a luxury, or that it comes in competition with whisky. I hope the report of the Committee on Ways and Means will stand.

Mr. NIBLACK. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to amend the amendment so as to make the rate of duty 55 cents per gallon. The idea that wine paying a duty of 40 cents per gallon will be one of the luxuries even of poor people, is an idea that I venture to say was never promulgated anywhere except in this House to-day. If anybody will cipher upon the question a little he will see the force of that idea at once.

I have come to the conclusion that as a matter of fact wine as a beverage is beneficial to the general morals of the community; in other words, that people who drink had better drink wine than what is know as "strong drinks," distilled spirits. Therefore I think it is well to encourage the production of wines in our own country. We know already that its production is a very considerable branch of industry in the States along the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, as well as on the Pacific coast. A specific duty of 50 or 55 cents per gallon, as the case may be, tends to exclude from importation the cheap, low-priced, inferior wines, while those that will be introduced into this country will be the better class and more valuable wines. In other words fixing a specific duty of 50 or 55 cents per gallon will give us an importation of good wines for those who can afford to drink them and can afford to pay the tax into the Treasury of the United States, and the inferior wines—the cheap wines of our German friends, who seem to have so many advocates upon this floor to-day—must be produced from our own vineyards that are generally cultivated by our German friends and others who come from the wine-producing districts of the Old World, and who have attempted and to some extent have succeeded in producing wines in this country.

Now, sir, I would give every encouragement to that class of industry; I would stimulate those men to crown our hills with vines and produce native wines which they can have in their gardens and in their houses. Let the wines that may be imported from abroad go to the tables of the wealthy and to the saloons of fashion. Let those whose purses are well-filled use these expensive drinks and pay a corresponding tax. I am glad to see that the bill has taken this direction; but I think that it would have been better if the duty, instead of being fixed at 40 cents had been 55 at least, if not 60 cents. But as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] proposes in his amendment to make the duty 50 cents, I withdraw my amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. FOSTER, it was agreed to, there being—ayes 107, noes 48.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask that "8" be inserted instead of "5" in line 12, and that the other changes necessary to correspond with the amendment just adopted be made.

Mr. KASSON and others objected.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I do not press the proposition.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That all imported wines of the character provided for in the preceding section which may remain in public store or bonded warehouse on the day this act shall take effect shall be subject to no other duty upon the withdrawal thereof for consumption than if the same were imported after that day: Provided, That any such wines remaining on shipboard within the limits of any port of entry in the United States on the day aforesaid, duties unpaid, shall, for the purposes of this section, be considered as constructively in public store or bonded warehouse.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by striking out in the second line of the section just read the words "may remain" and inserting "were;" also by striking out in the third and fourth lines the words "day this act shall take effect," and inserting "25th day of May, 1874;" so that the section will read:

That all imported wines of the character provided for in the preceding section which were in public store or bonded warehouse on the 25th day of May, 1874, shall be subject &c.

I will state my reason for offering this amendment. This bill was reported to this House on yesterday, the 25th of May. While it is going through the House and the Senate there will be a great accumulation of wines in warehouses and on shipboard with a view to the taking effect of this new duty. There will be every endeavor to get in wines from various parts of America contiguous to us, if not from Europe. Hence I think it proper that the act should take effect from the day the bill was reported. This provision would be fair to everybody, and would enable no one to make any special profit out of the change in the tariff.

Mr. BURCHARD. I will suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts this will apply to that wine the duty on which is higher. It would actually allow them to take wine out of bond at the reduced rate.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, sir.

Mr. KASSON. The amendment is incomplete to accomplish the object the gentleman has in view.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I would like to be instructed on that matter.

Mr. BURCHARD. It now reads "shall be subject to no other duty upon the withdrawal thereof for consumption than if the same were imported after that day." After that day the duty is to be increased.

Mr. DAWES. They should pay the duty prescribed by law up to that time.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I should not have drawn that provision as it is. I can draw the amendment in the proper phraseology in a moment. My object is to provide that wines which are in store shall pay the increased duty.

Mr. DAWES. That is right.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suggest in order to perfect the amendment the gentleman strike out "no other" and insert "same," and also strike out in line 5 the word "than" and insert "as;" so it will read:

Shall be subject to the same duty upon the withdrawal thereof for consumption as if the same were imported after that day.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I think I have it—that it shall be subject to the duty herein provided.

Mr. KASSON. No, sir; that will not answer.

Mr. DAWES. That reduces all the higher grades.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. There will not be so many there, then.

Mr. KASSON. Let the gentleman move his amendment substantially as the gentleman from Tennessee suggests, so that we may preserve the duty.

Mr. CONGER. Will it be proper to pass this over until gentlemen get the proper amendment?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I move to pass this over for the present.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read the fourth section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 4. That on and after the date of the passage of this act, in lieu of the duties imposed by law on the articles in this section enumerated, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the goods, wares, and merchandise in this section enumerated and provided for, imported from foreign countries, the following duties and rates of duties; that is to say:

On alizarine, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

On hops, 10 cents per pound.

On macaroni and vermicelli, 3 cents per pound. On preparations similar thereto, 5 cents per pound.

On nitro-benzole, 10 cents per pound.

On tin in plates or sheets and on terne and taggers' tin, 1½ cents per pound.

On anchovies and sardines, packed in oil or otherwise, in tin boxes; 15 cents per whole box, measuring not more than five inches long, four inches wide, and three and one-half inches deep; 7½ cents for each half-box, measuring not more than five inches long, four inches wide, and one and one-half inches deep; and 4 cents for each quarter-box, measuring not more than four inches and three-quarters long, three and one-half inches wide, and one and one-eighth inches deep; when imported in any other form, 60 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. DAWES. I move to strike out "on alizarine, 10 per cent. ad valorem," and I do it for the purpose of putting it on the free list.

Mr. FIELD. I object to striking that out.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COX. I move to strike out "on hops, 10 cents per pound."

Mr. Chairman, there is little importation of hops except in a time of dearth in this country. I do not think we should put any special obstruction on their importation. We all know the object of hops. We all know why they should not be taxed. I move to strike it out.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from New York, and I do so in the interest alike of the producer and the consumer of this article. I have not time in five minutes to go into any extended argument on this question. The members of the Committee on Ways and Means know very well that a large number of petitions have been sent from different States to Congress during the present session asking the duty on hops might be increased from 5 to 10 cents per pound. These petitions have been prompted, I have no doubt, by the fact that the importation of hops has increased from 1870 to the present year very largely.

I hold in my hand some statistics on this subject which I will trouble the committee to listen to:

Statement of imports and exports of hops during the fiscal years ending June 30, from 1869 to 1873, inclusive.

According to the census returns the quantity of hops produced in the United States in the year 1849 was 3,497,029 pounds. In 1859 the amount was 10,991,996 pounds, and in 1869 the amount was 25,456,669 pounds, of which amount New York produced in 1869 17,558,681 pounds, and Wisconsin produced 4,630,155 pounds. These facts have awakened a degree of anxiety on the subject of this important industry not hitherto experienced, and force upon us the query whether our own producers are really to be compelled to abandon this product.

It is well known that the hop crop loses its value if not used within the year following its production. The new crop drives the old one from the market. Hence it is a matter of necessity that each crop shall be disposed of before another is ready. It is all-important, therefore, to the large class of persons engaged in raising this crop, that they shall know and understand with some accuracy what the demand will be each year; that is to say, the aggregate demand, in order that the supply may be gauged and determined. This is impossible if the market may at any time be flooded with the foreign product. It becomes an element of uncertainty, upsetting all calculations as to the quantity which may safely be raised by our own producers.

If the rate of importations continues to increase as it has been doing, it will not be long before hop-raising within our borders will be unknown, or nearly so, and the purchaser rendered dependent on the foreign producer. Then prices will advance beyond precedent, and our people will be the sufferers. There is no help for it.

Hence the real question is not between the producer and consumer, but between the home producer and the foreign producer. Just as soon as it ceases to be profitable to cultivate this crop in this country the market will be commanded by the foreign producer, and in that event the price of the product will be increased rather than diminished, and unfortunately the increase will inure, as I have said, to the advantage of the foreign producer instead of aiding any class or industry at home.

Now, it is very well known that there are those on this floor, and the gentleman from New York among them, who claim that under any system of protection that has been yet devised the great producing class in this country reap no benefit whatever; that they are excluded from the advantages of any tariff adjustment which has ever been made. Now, here we have a proposition to benefit the producing classes in this country. It is right in the line of protection to them, and this without injury to any other class, and yet it does not satisfy the gentleman. I trust the committee will see the importance of defeating the motion of the gentleman and adopting the bill as it stands.

Mr. CONGER. I move, pro forma, to amend by striking out the last word. All the members of the House in whose districts hops have been produced to any great extent will remember that some two years ago, after this product had been introduced, and the raising of hops had been commenced all over the Northwestern States, there was an importation of hops from foreign countries so great as to reduce the price of hops to 4 and 5 cents a pound. The great hop-fields, containing thousands of acres in some counties in the West, were torn up next year, because it was an unremunerative crop. Many members will recollect that just after the raising of this product was destroyed by the introduction of hops into this country at a ruinous price to the importers, except that they had an ulterior object, the price went up to 25, 40, 50, and even as high as 75 cents a pound. I do not know but that it reaches somewhere in that neighborhood now. But all who are familiar with the subject know that the introduction of hops at an unusually low price broke up the production in this country for a year or two, and immediately thereafter the price of hops went up to an unreasonable height. Why? Because the demand continued as of old, and production had entirely ceased on account of the unusual importation and the consequent reduction of price in this country. Since that time the production has gradually extended all over the States which have a temperate climate. But the same cause may at any time lead to the importation of the article, which, as has been stated, is only valuable in the year during which it is grown, and it is worthless after the year in which it is grown. The same reasons may again lead to the introduction of the article into the country at a low price and break up the entire production of those who have commenced the production again, and will again raise the price of the article. I hope, therefore, that the duty as fixed in this bill may be allowed to remain for the benefit of the producers.

Mr. COX. I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. After the gentleman has opposed the amendment I will withdraw it.

Mr. COX. All right. I want to vote on my motion to strike out the whole of this clause. The gentlemen who indicate this peculiar legislation do it on the old ground of protection, and protection in the interest of a class of men who have received very little from the Government—a small portion of the farmers of a part of this country who are in the hop business. But I would say to him, and I think I can speak in behalf of the farmers whose confidence I have never yet forfeited, that they as a class never ask for protection.

Mr. WILBER. Then why have so many petitions been sent to Congress asking for it on this very subject?

Mr. COX. On a principle of this kind: that whereas on various articles which they use and consume you have ground them down by high protective duties to benefit a few favored classes and sections, and finding that they cannot get even with you on account of your iron leagues with such classes and sections, then they come and pray: "Since you will steal from us, we want to make it up by a little pillage on others."

Mr. WILBER. The petitions I refer to were from farmers asking an increase of this duty from 5 to 10 cents.

Mr. COX. The farmers in some few localities may ask it on the principle I have mentioned; but the great bulk of the farmers do not want to be placed in the predicament in which such abject craving would place them. They are not paupers, to be cringing around committees and about this House to be relieved of the troubles you have made for them by adding other burdens of the same nature.

Mr. MERRIAM. Does the gentleman speak for the farmers of the city of New York?

Mr. COX. I speak for all the farmers and for all the grangers on this subject. They have passed resolutions in regard to it. Their meaning is perfectly clear. I was familiar with the farmers of the West years and years before you were heard of, and I know exactly what they want. I have represented them before, as I now represent them, on this subject. They do not want their mouths closed by a poor-man's plaster; for that is what this is. You make a tariff which gives a pretentious and frivolous protection to their wheat! It is a contemptible tub thrown to the whale. What do they care about your protective duties against foreign wheat? You give protection on potatoes—so much a bushel! Now you could increase it on hops and other small produce to tickle the farmers. Then you may with impunity play the vampire, and draw the blood from the great interests of this country. Thus you would by breaking the principle and inaugurate the reign of selfishness and greed.

Such are your tariffs! The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] shakes his head. Ah! he has heard that figure perhaps in the House before. He will hear it again until he brings in some other kind of bill than this.

This is such a beautiful bill! My friend sneered at me a while ago, because I was not before the Committee on Ways and Means to instruct them. He wondered if they would not have done better if they had heard the information which I have imparted. It is my privilege as a member from New York City, where 67 per cent. of all the customs dues are collected, to speak freely both for importers and sellers and consumers. It will not do, after the gentleman says his bill produces no revenue, to sneer or satirize my small information. What does his bill amount to? What good does it do? It tinkers, tinkers, tinkers with your tariff, and thus unsettles your industries. Does it make steady anything? The way to legislate on such a subject is to revise the whole tariff system, and cut down with a great swath all through your useless tariffs, where you can lop off the expensive and useless items of taxation. You should make a new tariff, and one for revenue only, even if you have to put a tax on tea and coffee again, which is a purely revenue tax and not for protection. You should furthermore enforce honestly the execution of the law in some other mode than that which has fixed everlasting shame on our whole revenue system.

Sir, I think the next Congress will be composed of men who may have a Committee on Ways and Means who will take this matter up and resettle it for the interest of the great body of the mechanics and farmers of the country, and not so as to gratify the agriculturist in one part of the country and another interest in another part, on the baseless and base plea "that as you have stolen from me I will steal from you."

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I renew it. There are some considerations which I desire to present to the members of this committee. It is not because I do not believe the farmers who raise hops want no protection, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] states; nor is it because I especially antagonize the principle of protection; nor is it because I am a free trader. But it is because I desire to have some system of fairness in the levying of taxes and the raising of revenue.

I know that there is a portion of the Northwest where hops are raised. But there is a vastly greater portion of the Northwest that does not raise hops but consumes them. The present tariff duty on hops is 5 cents per pound, and under that tariff the hop interest has grown and extended, as has been stated by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. HAZELTON,] and I believe it will continue to flourish as long as it is profitable. This additional tax upon hops will impose another burden in addition to those already sustained by the Northwest, and will force us to pay still more money into the Treasury.

Now to show the inequality of the tendency of legislation here in reference to the Northwest, whenever an additional tax is needed to supply a deficiency in the revenues, it is somehow laid upon some of our productions, while the productions of other portions of the country are allowed to escape. I have compiled some statistics from this remarkable book on the subject of taxes. I find that eight or nine of the States in the Northwest pay, upon fermented liquors alone into the manufacture of which these hops enter, the enormous tax of over $3,000,000, almost as much but not quite as all the taxes paid by all the New England States.

Mr. KELLOGG. Do you drink it all out there, or do we help you drink it?

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. We drink our share of it, and pay our share of taxes. We make our whisky and send it to you. We prefer to drink beer, which we know to be an element and agent of temperance, more so than whisky which you New England men mix with your rum or something else and get tight on. We drink beer and do not get tight.

I believe that the present duty on hops is sufficient to properly guard and protect the country against the condition of things to which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has called attention. I remember the circumstance to which he refers, and do not wish to see it recur. But I also remember that since then the hop-producing interest has revived, and it is now going on promisingly. It may be the purpose of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. HAZELTON] to take care of the interest of the farmers in the Northwest, in the district he represents, but I do not believe that is the intention of the Committee on Ways and Means. The object of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] and others here is to raise taxes from the people of the Northwest in order that the purse-proud constituents they represent may escape.

Now I desire to call attention to this subject and the condition of things as I understand it. It is proposed to increase the duty on the article of hops, which enters as an element in a product consumed largely in the Northwest, that pays more tax upon fermented liquors alone in a year than all the taxes paid by New England. Of course the increased taxation will come from Ohio and other States that consume this product.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. Now let us have a vote.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I withdraw my amendment.

The question was upon the motion of Mr. COX to strike out the clause relating to the duty on hops; and being taken by a viva voce vote, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. COX. I must call for a division on this question.

Mr. FIELD. I desire to move to amend this clause by striking out "10" and inserting "15," so as to make the duty 15 cents per pound.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is now dividing on the motion to strike out, and no amendment is in order.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 111.

So the motion to strike out was not agreed to.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I do not know whether anybody else was misled. Perhaps I was a little excited, and nobody else was. I move to amend the paragraph in relation to the duty on hops by reducing it from 10 to 5 cents per pound.

Mr. DAWES. That is the existing law.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I know that; but if the amendment is in order I move it

Mr. CONGER. Is it in order to strike out a portion of a clause which the committee has just refused to strike out?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order.

Mr. TREMAIN, (at twenty minutes before four o'clock.) I desire to call the attention of gentlemen to the necessity of the committee rising soon, on account of the funeral services to take place this afternoon.

Mr. DAWES. Let us dispose of the amendments to the pending clause.

The amendment of Mr. WARD, of Illinois, was not agreed to; upon a division—ayes 45, noes 105.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TYNER reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 3491) to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent that there may be ordered a session for to-morrow evening to continue the consideration of the tariff and internal-revenue bill.

Mr. FIELD. I object.

The SPEAKER. That matter will be in the control of the majority of the House to-morrow. The House can take a recess instead of adjourning at the close of the session to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. FIELD subsequently withdrew his objection.

Mr. O'BRIEN renewed it.

Mr. DAWES. Unless we have an evening session to-morrow for the disposition of our business, there will probably be no day when we can bring it before the House.

Mr. O'BRIEN. My reason for objecting, was that I preferred some other evening should be fixed. But I withdraw my objection.

There being no further objection, the order proposed by Mr. DAWES was accordingly made.

JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS IN UTAH.

Mr. POLAND. I ask unanimous consent that some amendments proposed to be reported by the Committee on the Judiciary to the bill (H. R. No. 3097) in relation to courts and judicial officers in the Territory of Utah may be ordered to be printed.

There being no objection, the order was accordingly made.

GIRLS' REFORM SCHOOL IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds a bill (H. R. No. 3498) providing for the construction of a building for the use of the Girls' Reform School in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

COMPENSATION OF REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on the Judiciary a joint resolution (H. R. No. 104) relative to the compensation of Representatives in Congress; which was read a first and second time, and recommitted.

GEOLOGICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL SURVEY.

Mr. TOWNSEND, by unanimous consent, submitted a report from the Committee on the Public Lands on the message of the President of the United States concerning the geological and geographical survey west of the Mississippi; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed; and the Committee on the Public Lands was discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was presented by Mr. BABCOCK, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 2100) for the relief of Martin Hoff, Casper Doerr, and George Gebhart, citizens of Saint Louis, Missouri;

An act (H. R. No. 2205) for the relief of P. Hornbrook;

An act (H. R. No. 3139) for the relief of the owners of the steam ferry-boat A. Burton.

The message also announced that bills of the following titles, having been received by the President on the 13th instant and not having been returned by him within ten days to the House in which they originated, had in pursuance of the Constitution become laws without his approval:

An act (H. R. No. 345) to relieve certain persons therein named, late members of Company K, Fifty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, from the charge of mutiny;

An act (H. R. No. 1776) for the relief of George Yount; and

An act (H. R. No. 2094) for the relief of William A. Snodgrass, late lieutenant Company H, Thirty-ninth Regiment Ohio Veteran Volunteer Infantry.

EXAMINATION AT WEST POINT.

The SPEAKER. It is the duty of the Speaker annually to name three members of the House to attend the examination of cadets at the United States Military Academy at West Point. In pursuance of this obligation, the Chair names for that duty the gentleman from New York, Mr. HALE, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. G. F. HOAR, and the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. YOUNG.

DEPARTMENT OF MANUFACTURE AND MINING.

Mr. BIERY. On behalf of the Committee on Manufactures, I ask unanimous consent to report back a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 1246) to establish at the seat of Government a Department of Manufacture and Mining, and for other purposes; and also ask consent that the bill be considered by the House, as in Committee of the Whole, on Wednesday evening of next week, the session to be occupied in debate only and the previous question to be considered as operating the following morning, when the vote shall be taken without further debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. I object.

Mr. BIERY. Then I modify the motion and ask for a session for debate only on the evening named.

Mr. GARFIELD. I must object, because we do not know but that on the evening named a session for business may be necessary.

JURORS IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. POTTER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3499) in relation to the qualification of jurors in the courts of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ANIMALS FOR PHILADELPHIA ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Ways and Means a bill (H. R. No. 3500) to authorize the importation of animals for the Zoological Society of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, free of duty; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. DARRALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 87) to facilitate the execution of and to protect certain public works of improvement at the mouth of the Mississippi River; and

An act (S. No. 510) donating condemned cannon and cannon-balls to the posts of the Grand Army of the Republic of Philadelphia and other associations for monumental purposes.

LIGHT-SHIPS AND LIGHT-HOUSES.

Mr. HOOPER. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back the following bills with a favorable recommendation, and to move that they be referred for suitable appropriations to the Committee on Appropriations, together with the accompanying recommendations of the Light-House Board: A bill (H. R. No. 874) to establish a light-ship at Winterquarter Shoals off the Accomack coast, Virginia; a bill (H. R. There being no objection, the motion of Mr. HOOPER was agreed to.

DEPREDATIONS ON TEXAS FRONTIER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of State and a copy of the accompanying report of the commissioners to inquire into depredations on the frontiers of Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and, with the accompanying documents, ordered to be printed.

RECESS.

Mr. TREMAIN. In order that there may be proper opportunity to prepare the Hall for the funeral services of my deceased colleague, Mr. MELLISH, I move that the House now take a recess until four o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly took a recess.

FUNERAL SERVICES OF MR. MELLISH.

At four o'clock the House assembled.

At five minutes past four the members of the Senate, preceded by the Sergeant-at-Arms and headed by the President pro tempore and Secretary, entered the Hall and were conducted to the seats assigned them.

At four and a half o'clock, the casket containing the remains of the deceased Representative was brought into the Hall, preceded by the Chaplains of the two Houses and the Committee of Arrangements, and accompanied by the widow, children, and immediate relatives of the deceased.

Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate, offered the following prayer:

O Lord God Almighty, Father of our spirits and former of our bodies, we Thy creatures, Thy children, are assembled here now in the presence of the solemn dispensation of Thy providence to pay the last duties we can ever pay to one of our fellow-men now departed from this scene of life.

We are silent before the word of Thy providence. We come to bow ourselves in Thy presence and to invoke Thy blessing upon us in these solemn services.

Remember, O Lord, all these Thy servants, the Presiding Officers and members of the Senate and House of Representatives here convened; and do Thou grant that in this solemn pause of the daily business transacted in these Halls, we may listen to the voice of that Divine wisdom which speaks to us in these dealings of God with the men who are in the high places of the nation, and so, Lord, wilt Thou apply our hearts to the wisdom of that lesson which Thou dost here teach to all of us, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

Rev. Dr. RANKIN, of the First Congregational Church, read appropriate selections from the Bible.

Rev. J. G. BUTLER, Chaplain of the House of Representatives, then said:

Our sympathies gather around these bereaved ones to-day. God speaks to us as man cannot speak. We turn our ear and incline our heart to Heaven's voice as we are reminded of our own mortality. The excitement of this Hall is hushed to-day as we gather with sorrowing hearts around this casket. In the light of this Word we learn our immortality.

The Master says, "not dead, but sleepeth." We commit dust to dust, ashes to ashes, earth to earth—the remains of a true, faithful, noble man. God in His providence makes us to pause and consider amid our pressing duties, and as we lay the tribute of our affection upon the coffin and the grave, as we cherish the memory of the worth of the departed one, we form new resolves to be faithful to conscience, faithful to duty, faithful to God, so that when the end comes death may be to us only a sleep. "Not dead, but sleepeth," says the Master.

The Lord comfort those who are bereft. The Lord teach us so to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom. The Lord so fill us with His spirit that occupying these high places we may prove ourselves true, pure, faithful, noble, Christ-like men, so that at the end it may be said of us, "He hath done what he could."

Let us pray.

O Thou who livest and was dead, and art alive forevermore—our compassionate Saviour, who art touched with the feeling of our infirmities, who dost ever weep with those who weep—we commend to Thee these whose hearts are full of sadness to-day. Thou knowest, O Lord, their need, and we rejoice that Thou dost enter into our trial. Thou, the great burden-bearer, hast borne our griefs and carried our sorrows, and in this time of sorrow we come to roll another burden upon Thee. O, give comfort and peace. Grant the consoling and healing influence of Thy truth and of Thy spirit in this hour of darkness.

And we entreat Thee, O God, teach us the lessons of wisdom which this providence is designed to impress. Help us every day to walk humbly and obediently, looking up to Thee for wisdom and guidance and strength and grace. Help us to understand the truth; make us valiant for the truth; diligent in duty; patient in suffering, and seeking above all the approbation of God and peace in our own consciences.

We entreat Thee, our Father, make the providence which is so painful a blessing to every one of us. Remember in mercy these Thy servants, the daily companions of the departed one. As we move among the open graves, may we live as mortal men, yet knowing that Thou art the resurrection and the life. We pray that we may be brought into subjection to Thy divine and righteous will; that every power of body, mind, and soul may be in accord with the interests of truth and righteousness.

Lord, help us to live so that we may impress lessons of truth and wisdom, of patriotism and piety upon those who shall survive us. Remember us in all our interests and in all the relations of life. Animate those who enact and execute our laws with Thy Spirit that God's blessing may abide upon this great nation, and that we among the nations of the earth may be a pattern of all that is true and just and right. Have in Thy holy care and keeping those who go with these remains to their last resting-place. And finally may we be gathered to the enjoyment of Thy blessed rest. We ask it in the name of Christ, our Saviour; who has taught us to pray: Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name; Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven; give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us; and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever.

May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ abide upon us and all who love God henceforth and forever. Amen.

The SPEAKER. The remains of our late associate and friend are left in charge of the committee of the House of Representatives, who will attend them to their last resting-place.

After the body had been removed from the Hall, the Senate retired in the order in which it entered.

Mr. TREMAIN. I move the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House (at five o'clock p. m.) adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 27, 1874.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. L. H. ANGIER, D. D., of Boston, Massachusetts.

On motion of Mr. MORTON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

CENTRAL BRANCH UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. WRIGHT. In accordance with the notice given on Monday morning I ask leave to call up, subject to the morning business, the bill (S. No. 587) declaring the true intent and meaning of the Union Pacific Railroad acts approved July 1, 1862, July 2, 1864, and July 3, 1866, and for other purposes, for present consideration. I make the motion because I understand the Senator from Kansas desires to address the Senate on the subject.

Mr. INGALLS. This subject is one of very great importance, involving a large amount of money and the consideration of abstruse legal questions; and I desire to make an appeal to the Senator from Iowa to allow the matter to be postponed until it can be considered on some occasion when there will be longer time to devote to it than can be given in the morning hour. I desire that the matter may be postponed for a few days and receive that discussion which I think the importance of the case merits.

Mr. WRIGHT. If my friend from Kansas is not prepared to proceed at present with the discussion of the question, I shall not insist on the motion, but I should like to have an understanding now that at all events I may be allowed to call it up on Monday morning, and that he will not ask for its further postponement.

Mr. INGALLS. I should prefer to have it called up after the morning hour. I do not think the matter can be disposed of within the morning hour.

Mr. WRIGHT. At all events, to accommodate the Senator from Kansas, I shall insist on Monday next upon taking up this bill.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CARPENTER presented the petition of Mary L. Moore, widow of Robert Moore, late of Company C, Fifteenth Michigan Volunteers, praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of Margaret S. Hastings, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have received and been requested to present a memorial very numerously signed by shipmasters of Maine and Massachusetts, in which they respectfully and earnestly petition, first, that the appointments of shipping commissioners may be made by the Secretary of the Treasury under what is known as the shipping act; second, that the offices of the shipping commissioners shall be located at the custom-houses to the end that the clearing of vessels and ratifying the engagements of the crew may be accomplished at the same time. I move the reference of this memorial to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TIPTON presented the petition of Marcus Walker, praying compensation for ninety-nine bales of cotton taken possession of by the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented a petition of citizens of Nebraska engaged in the transportation of swine by railroad, praying the passage of a law exempting swine from being unloaded while in transitu; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SPRAGUE presented a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, communicating an estimate of appropriations for additional clerical force to enable him to answer the resolution of the Senate of March 30, 1874, calling for a report concerning school lands inuring to the State of Missouri under the act of May 20, 1826; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported a bill (S. No. 861) to establish a commission to regulate steam-railway tracks and horse railways in the city of Washington; which was read and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1706) to authorize the opening of Wight street through the grounds of the United States marine hospital, at Detroit, Michigan, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BOGY, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 714) to authorize the Attorney-General of the United States to inquire into the condition and title to the lands of the ex-mission of San Buenaventura, in the State of California, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. OGLESBY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 680) for the relief of certain persons of African descent resident in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations on the 28th day of April, 1866, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 811) for the relief of Jesse S. Fort, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. ROBERTSON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted a report to accompany the bill (S. No. 304) relative to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPRAGUE, from the Committeee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2019) to forfeit certain public lands granted to the Stockton and Copperopolis Railroad, in the State of California, reported it without amendment.

CHANGE OF A BANK'S NAME AND LOCATION.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3267) changing the name and location of Irasburgh National Bank of Orleans, county of Orleans, State of Vermont, to report it back without amendment. As it is merely a change of location of a national bank from one town to another on a railroad, and is unanimously reported by the Committee on Finance after its passage by the House, I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill by which the Irasburgh National Bank of Orleans, now located in the town of Irasburgh, county of Orleans, Vermont, is authorized to change its location to the town of Barton, in that county and State.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HAZING AT NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. SARGENT. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 849) to prevent hazing at the Naval Academy, have instructed me to report it back without amendment, and to ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that in all cases when it shall come to the knowledge of the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, at Annapolis, that any cadet midshipman or cadet engineer has been guilty of the offense commonly known as hazing, it shall be the duty of the Superintendent to order a court-martial, composed of not less than three commissioned officers, who shall minutely examine into all the facts and circumstances of the case and make a finding thereon; and any cadet midshipman or cadet engineer found guilty of the offense shall, upon recommendation of the court, be dismissed; and such finding, when approved by the Superintendent, shall be final; and the cadet so dismissed from the Naval Academy shall be forever ineligible to reappointment to the academy.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DUTIES UNDER ACT OF JUNE 6, 1872.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1560) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to reduce duties on imports and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes,'" approved March 3, 1873, to report the same back without amendment. This is a House bill similar to a bill sent by the Senate to the House some time ago and laid on the table in the House by reason of some question as to whether it was not a revenue bill. As it has therefore really been already passed by both Houses, I ask the Senate to take up this House bill and pass it at once.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which proposes to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to reduce duties on imports and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes,'" approved March 3, 1873, so as to read as follows:

SEC. 3. That foreign merchandise which arrived at a port of the United States on or before the 31st day of July, 1872, and upon which duties were not paid prior to August 1, 1872, though the same were not entered or transferred to a public store or bonded warehouse, shall be entitled to the benefits provided for in the eighth section of the act entitled "An act to reduce duties on imports and to reduced internal taxes, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1872, the same as such merchandise would have been entitled to had it actually been in public store or bonded warehouse on or prior to the 31st day of July, 1872: Provided, That the owner of such merchandise shall, within thirty days from the passage of this act, make application therefor in writing to the collector of the port at which such merchandise arrived.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps it is due to the Senate that I should say that the only change in the existing law made is that this bill allows the cargoes of certain vessels that arrived in the port of San Francisco, on the 31st of July, 1872, the day before the tariff act took effect, to be entered subject to the duties fixed by the law. There were two or three vessels in the port that could not in the ordinary course of business be formally entered before the 1st of August, so as to entitle themselves to the benefit of the reduction of duties made by the act referred to. It only affects two or three cargoes in San Francisco, I think.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I wish to say that as I understand it this is a concession to the owners of certain vessels that happened to arrive the day before the law took effect, giving them the benefit of the statute.

Mr. SHERMAN. They arrived, but could not make the formal entry so as to entitle themselves to the benefit of the law.

Mr. BOUTWELL, I think it will turn out that a great many merchants paid their duties under precisely the same circumstances.

Mr. SARGENT. This was recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury when the Senator from Massachusetts was Secretary of the Treasury, and his letter is on file with the papers.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Then I suppose I gave some good reason for it, and I should like to know what it is.

Mr. SARGENT. The amount involved is about $4,000. I will state further that exactly a similar bill was passed when the tariff act before this went into effect, in order to relieve vessels then which were in harbor and anxious to enter their cargoes but were not able to do so on account of the crowd of business at the custom-house. Exactly this precedent was set, as I can show.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury be read.

Mr. SCOTT. The bill itself is to correct an error in a law which we passed at the last session and that only. I believe it is right; but there is a point of right between the two Houses in regard to this bill against which I desire to enter my protest before this bill passes. A bill in terms and I believe in words identical with this was introduced in the Senate and passed. It went to the House of Representatives where they refused to consider it upon the ground that we had not the right to originate a bill here, even correcting a reference to a section in a revenue act, and therefore they passed this bill in the House as a House bill, and sent it over here. I refused in committee to permit this bill to be reported because I wish to maintain the rights of the Senate and not to yield upon that point. The bill itself is right, and I make no objection to it, but I do not wish it to pass without my protest on that subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Committee on Finance were at first disposed to make a point with the House upon what we consider a technical and unfounded objection to our right to originate a bill like this, which is not a revenue bill, or a bill raising revenue; but on the appeal made by the Senator from California that this bill affects his constituents and involves but a small amount, and as the bill is perfectly right, we concluded to report it. There is no reason in the world why a vessel that happened to arrive on the day before this law took effect and had not opportunity to make a formal entry so as to comply with the law should not have the benefit of the reduced rates of duty. We thought on the whole we had better waive the point of privilege and not raise a question with the House on so small a matter as this.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose by stress of weather the vessel was kept off the entrance of the harbor twenty-four hours by a mere accident, the act of God keeping it from getting in when under ordinary circumstances it could have done so; why not provide for that case?

Mr. SHERMAN. There might be many cases of hardship; but we have heretofore allowed all vessels actually in a port of entry to avail themselves of the reduced duties. It is pretty hard, the Senator can see, to refuse to allow a vessel actually in port, but which on account of the customs of the custom-house could not be formally entered on the day of her arrival to have the benefit of a law which takes effect on the next day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not any more hard than it is if you have the law in the first place that any vessel in port should have the benefit of the law to take effect the next day and declared that any vessel that had not entered the port should not, and then you found that a vessel was in quarantine, if you please, or just outside the port, or standing off in a gale that suddenly came up. It would be very hard to say to that vessel, "You must pay the increased duties." In fact it is hard to pay duties at all; but you must lay down a line somewhere which must be absolutely inexorable, and, if you move it off one degree, you must make it inexorable there.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is only a question whether it is not fairer to allow a vessel that is actually in port to have the benefit of the reduction, and to take the actual entry in the port rather than the formal entry at the custom-house as the test. There must be an arbitrary line drawn somewhere, and we thought it better, as a similar remedy had been granted in former cases, to allow the vessels that were actually in the port, although they had not made the formal entry, the benefit of the act. I am quite sure the Treasury Department recommended the bill, but I think the Senator from California is mistaken about its having been done when the Senator from Massachusetts was Secretary.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I suggest that the bill be allowed to lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no objection to its going over until to-morrow, and I will get the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury and the precedent on the statute-book of a law in hæc verba like this.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no objection to its going over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg the Senator from California not to understand that I am opposing the bill in any way; but certain considerations occurred to me that I suggested to the chairman.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. SARGENT subsequently said: The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] having examined the bill which was reported from the Committee on Finance this morning informs me, and I have no doubt will inform the Senate, that he withdraws his objection to it. As the bill is on its third reading and will take but a moment, I ask that it be passed. The only occasion for the bill, as the Senator from Massachusetts now understands, and so does the Senator from Vermont, is that in passing a bill last year "section 2" was inserted instead of "section 8;" and this simply corrects a mistake in the legislation of last year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all right, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is again before the Senate.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONKLING (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 862) granting a pension to Margaret S. Hastings; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KELLY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 863) granting a pension to William J. Mayfield; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOWE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 864) to aid the improvement of the Wisconsin and Fox Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 865) to create the Bozman land district, in the Territory of Montana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PRATT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 866) granting a pension to Margaret E. Alexander; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

CANNON FOR A MONUMENT.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 860) granting one condemned cannon to Prescott Post No. 1, Grand Army of the Republic, for the erection of a monument at Providence, Rhode Island.

Mr. ANTHONY. This bill is in the same words as a bill passed providing for a number of such cases yesterday. I was not provided with the data to offer this bill at that time. It gives for monumental purposes a single cannon. I hope it may be put on its passage.

By unanimous consent, the bill was read three times, and passed.

Mr. ANTHONY afteward said: The Senate were kind enough to pass a bill by unanimous consent giving a condemned cannon to a post in Providence, but upon consulting with my friend the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs I am informed that it is not for the public interest to designate the caliber of the gun, as is done in this bill. I therefore ask that by unanimous consent the bill may be amended by striking out "the said cannon to be of the class known as 42-pounders."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this amendment of the bill? The Chair hears none, and it will be so amended.

PRINTING OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. KELLY, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. No. 832) providing for the adjudication and issue of patents in mission land cases in the State of Oregon and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, and Montana be printed.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, it was Ordered, That during the residue of the present session the Committee on the Judiciary have leave to sit during the sittings of the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I ask that the same order be made for the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for the next two or three days.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

EDMUND RANDOLPH.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now move to take up the bill (S. No. 447) to provide for the payment of legal services rendered by Edmund Randolph to the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The Committee on the Judiciary propose to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That there shall be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $12,000 to the legal representatives of the late Edmund Randolph, of California, in full satisfaction and discharge of balance of professional services rendered by him in the cases of the United States vs. John Parrott and others, and Andres Castillero vs. the United States: Provided, That on receipt of said sum the said legal representatives shall execute a full discharge of all claims in favor of the estate of said Randolph against the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. SARGENT. I submit the following amendment to the rules, to be referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the first rule of the Senate be amended so that it shall read as follows:

1. The Presiding Officer having taken the chair, the Journal of the preceding day shall be read, to the end that any mistake may be corrected that shall be made in the entries. No business except reading the Journal shall be transacted unless a quorum shall be present.

A quorum shall consist of a majority of the Senators duly chosen and sworn.

I should like to say that the object is to proceed with the reading of the Journal in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How can we correct it if we do not hear it? If the Senators are not here to hear it how can it be corrected?

Mr. SARGENT. If any question arises as to the correction of the Journal, it must be reserved until a quorum is present, and then, a quorum being present, the whole matter may be explained.

The resolution was referred to the Select Committee on the Revision of the Rules.

JAMES L. DAY.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I move to take up Senate bill No. 277, a very short bill, which will occupy but a moment.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 277) making an appropriation for the payment of $792.46 due the late James L. Day, of Connecticut, for transporting the mails over post-route numbered 8151.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where was that post-route?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. The report is very short and it may be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HAMLIN on the 15th instant:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 277) for the relief of Mrs. Nancy Day, submit the following report:

It appears from the evidence submitted in this case that James L. Day contracted with the Postmaster-General to carry the mail in the State of Louisiana, on route 8151, from New Orleans to Mobile, by steamboat. Said contract term was from 1858 to 1862. The service thereon was discontinued by an order of the Postmaster-General dated May 20, 1861. At the time when the service was so discontinued there was due said Day the sum of $792.46, with which sum he now stands credited at the Post-Office Department, and which sum the Postmaster-General would pay, if he had the funds for so doing.

Said Day was loyal to the Government, and suffered largely in pecuniary matters in consequence of his loyalty; his steamboats were seized and taken from him by the confederate government. He left Louisiana and went to Connecticut, where he resided during the war, and supported the Government until the time of his decease. The said Day being now deceased, the committee report back the bill for the relief of Mrs. Nancy Day, widow of said James L. Day, deceased, without amendment, and recommend its passage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a good case.

Mr. SCOTT. From what committee does that come?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to make an inquiry, as I did not hear the whole of the report. A number of cases have been presented, some of them to the Committee on Claims, in which the claimants, where the contract had been abrogated by the Postmaster-General under the terms of the law, have claimed an additional month's pay for the abrogation of the contract, although the contracts were to be executed in the then rebellious States. I wish to know whether this bill contains any appropriation which would cover that principle, because it is one which has been giving us some trouble in the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HAMLIN. It does not.

Mr. EDWARDS. The report states that this is for service actually performed.

Mr. SCOTT. Then I have no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRE-EMPTORS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move to take up for consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2782) in relation to pre-emptors on public lands in the State of Minnesota.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 2782) to extend the time to pre-emptors on the public lands in the State of Minnesota to make final payment was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It extends for two years the time at which pre-emptors on the public lands in the State of Minnesota, including the lands within Fort Ridgely and Sioux Indian reservations, are now required to make final proof and payment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to inquire of the honorable Senator from Minnesota whether that includes all pre-emptors in that State?

Mr. RAMSEY. It does; but there are not a great many reached by this after all, as lands are largely taken up under the homestead cases. I hope the Senator will not interrupt the bill. It has passed the House.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to inquire whether this privilege has not been heretofore granted, at least on one occasion?

Mr. RAMSEY. I am not aware that it has to these particular people. I hope the Senator will allow this bill to pass.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator allow me to propose——

Mr. RAMSEY. The Senator knows the condition of western settlers well enough to be aware of the great hardships which they encounter, and the necessity for their relief occasionally.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Allow me to add the State of Nebraska as an amendment.

Mr. RAMSEY. I hope not upon this bill. At any other time I shall be very glad to help the Senator; but I trust he will not obstruct this bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to add the State of Nebraska.

Mr. RAMSEY. I want to appeal to the Senator. I prefer that he should let this bill pass without amendment. To me it is a matter of some little importance. To-day is the twenty-fifth anniversary of my landing on the soil of Minnesota, and I desire this day to do something for my constituents who have done so much for me.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have no objection to allowing the Senator to do this little act for his State, but I should like to be allowed to do a little act for my own State.

Mr. RAMSEY. Why should the Senator interrupt the bill and send it back to the House?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the bill is read the third time, I wish to be heard. I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota, although this is a great anniversary, how many times Congress has already put off this period of payment for these precise settlers?

Mr. RAMSEY. I am not aware that Congress has ever done so for these precise settlers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does not the Senator remember that we passed an act like this for the pre-emptors on these lands?

Mr. RAMSEY. The Senator knows very well that this is only an indulgence as to the time of payment. It does not relieve the settlers from payment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not the question. What I wish to know from the committee who reported this bill—perhaps the Senator from Minnesota nearest me [Mr. WINDOM] can answer—is whether we have not extended the time for payment for the lands embraced in this bill once already before?

Mr. WINDOM. We have extended the time for certain settlers; and I think that act embraces a portion, if not all of those contained in this bill; but notwithstanding that fact, I think it a very meritorious case. The bill can do nobody any harm; it is only an extension of time to the settlers for the payment of their lands; and I think in favor of settlers, situated as these are, especially on the anniversary of my colleague's landing on that soil, the Senate should pass the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If you extend it forever they need never pay. But I assume that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. RAMSEY] merely wants to pass this bill as a memento of his entrance into that happy land, and that hereafter his constituents will pay when the time comes around.

Mr. RAMSEY. We can compromise on that ground.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. TIPTON. I desire to say a word in favor of this bill. When I consider the inhospitable character of the country to which my friend emigrated twenty-five years ago and the almost utter impossibility of the settlers being able there to make a living at all, I would be willing to give their lands and not require anything from them. [Laughter.] Consequently I shall be in favor of the extension.

The bill was passed.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 571) to authorize the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to construct a branch, and to change the location of its road within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the bill was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I was bound by agreement to assist the friends of this road to take up this bill, but I shall also feel bound to resist its passage at the present time. The road now comes into the city on the northeast by two branches, and cuts across six or eight streets on the northeasternmost branch until it reaches Delaware avenue. The other branch of the road, coming in upon the Tiber Creek I think, cuts through an equal number of streets until it reaches Delaware avenue, and then goes down to the present depot. My own impression is that we ought not to grant any further privileges either to steam railways or horse railways in this city until we have adopted some system by which they shall be regulated. If Senators would take the pains to see how the horse railroads and steam railroads come into this city, they would infer that a crazy man had adopted the system by which they were established. We have the whole city tangled up with these roads, and yet large portions of it are left without any reasonable and proper accommodations.

Mr. President, it has been supposed heretofore that we might have some system by which there should be a common railroad depot to accommodate all the steam railways coming into the city. That has not yet been possible. But it is evident that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad depot ought to be placed further back from its present position. The company do propose to go back one square further, and yet they propose to go across Massachusetts avenue at the point where Delaware avenue crosses it, and where four or five other streets cross, and it will have the effect to clog and barricade that large avenue and all those streets for all coming time if they are allowed to do so. Under these circumstances I think there ought to be some legislation by which this company should be compelled to build its depot north of Massachusetts avenue, unquestionably the finest avenue in this city, and which will be, perhaps, when finished, the finest avenue in any city of the world.

I have seen the vice-president of the railroad company, and I supposed that if he insisted upon still coming in upon any portion of Delaware avenue, we had reached an agreement. I had suggested to him that I thought there would be no objection on the part of Congress, or of the Senate at least, if he would provide that both of these branches should connect outside of the city and come in together on Delaware avenue. This bill does not provide for that. It provides that they may have a union on the outside of the city, but still there will be a branch that comes through here and crosses ever so many streets until it gets to Delaware avenue.

Mr. DAVIS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator addresses himself to the question of the location of this road inside of the city. Now I understand that in the talk that the vice-president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company had with the Senator from Vermont he agreed to abandon for the present anything within the city limits and asked only in this bill to connect the two roads, the one leading to Baltimore, and the one leading to the Ohio River west, at a point outside of the city limits; that inside the city, for the present, until some definite plan can be devised by a commission or otherwise, he asks no legislation whatever. Now I ask the Senator, as the morning hour has nearly expired, if he will not consent to take a vote on that part of the bill, and leave that portion which refers to the city for some future bill or commission?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. No, sir: for the reason that they propose to have a connection on the outside of the city, so that it will still leave the company at liberty to cross all of these streets before the road reaches Delaware avenue; and for another reason——

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the Senator whether that is not the case now, and if he can prevent it in any way? If you defeat this bill, it will only prevent the railroads from connecting outside the city, and prevent such trains as may come from the West going South or come from the South going West coming into the city; whereas if there was a connection outside of the city, there would be no such necessity of bringing cars into the city.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I was disposed to yield the question so far as any action of the Senate on the depot question at the present time was concerned. But it will cost the company several hundred thousand dollars—$250,000 I think—to make this connection. If they make it so as still to compel them to go across the several streets which I have mentioned, it will be a difficult matter and rather onerous on the company for Congress next year to impose the burden upon them of building a new track. Therefore I insist that if they are to come in here, and we are to give them the use of these avenues without cost for the line of travel, we should compel them to go where it will impose the least inconvenience upon the city; we should compel them to put all their tracks upon one avenue, and not scatter and branch out all over the city. It will cost them no more to come in altogether on Delaware avenue than it would to make the connection and come in as they now do.

Under these circumstances, and in view of the fact that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have proposed that there shall be a commission appointed consisting of the Chief Engineer of the Army, the officer in charge of the public buildings and grounds, and three other competent and impartial persons, to say where these roads shall come in and what streets they shall occupy and what public grounds they shall not cross or interfere with, I think it would be wiser for the Senate to postpone any action on these railroad bills of any character whatever. We have at least four projects more for street railways, every one of them, as will be evident from the tracks they propose to occupy, designed merely to promote the private interests of some man who owns a large tract of property in one section or another of the city. I do not desire to cripple or to diminish the accommodations of the city; I desire that the people here shall have full and complete accommodations of railways, whether steam or horse railways; but I do insist, now that the city has been at such a vast expense in improving the streets, that they shall not be torn up again until there is some safe and proper system adopted by which these roads are to be located and regulated hereafter. Under these circumstances I hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to postpone the consideration of any of these railway bills until the next session of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will avail myself of the moment of time left of the morning hour to say to the Senator from Vermont that in my judgment he ought to be prepared to offer some amendment to this bill that will carry out his views. I think it is very unjust to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and the public generally to leave the present condition of affairs remain as it is. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company propose to expend a large sum of money and to make very important improvements in this city. Their agent spoke to me on the subject, and stated to me the general purpose and plan they had in view. They are now awaiting the action of Congress. It is therefore no more than right that whatever action is taken by Congress should be taken immediately. I think myself, with the Senator from Vermont, that a designated place ought to be pointed out where this company should be required to erect its buildings, and that should be convenient to them and convenient to the public; but it seems to me it ought not to be delayed until the next session of Congress. They ought to have the power to make the necessary arrangements at once, to enable them to locate a proper depot at a proper place in this city and to carry on their improvements, because they are now laboring under very great disadvantages, caused by the action of the Government and also caused by the action of the city authorities. It is to be remembered also that the Government have given to another railroad, and I voted for that proposition, the right to build a depot very convenient to Pennsylvania avenue, and it is but right to give to these competing railroads equal facilities and equal advantages. I hope, therefore, that if this bill is to be postponed, as I suppose it will be by the expiration of the morning hour, the Senator from Vermont will put his idea on the subject in definite form and let us vote upon it when the bill shall again be taken up.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I could not do it this morning; but I would be able to do it perhaps by the day after to-morrow.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think myself this question ought to be settled at this session of Congress.

Mr. LEWIS. I did not hear the last remark of the Senator from Vermont. I ask him when he will be ready to present the amendment that he suggests?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I understand that some agreement was made between the vice-president of this railroad company and the governor of the District that the road might go through Delaware avenue, provided it was parked, watchmen placed at the crossings of streets, and the cars not go beyond a certain rate of speed, and that they should have all their tracks upon that avenue. I think I could perhaps be able to obtain the requisite data on which to propose an amendment by the day after to-morrow.

Mr. LEWIS. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company do not propose now to touch the matter of coming within the city. This bill is entirely outside of anything the Senator from Vermont has alluded to.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to another thing. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have arrogated to themselves all the duties of the Committee on the District of Columbia. Only yesterday morning a bill was referred there, while I was temporarily absent from the Chamber, which should have gone to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and so it has been on several occasions; but I shall speak on this probably to-morrow morning or at some other time.

This bill as it is to be amended does not propose anything as to the road coming within the city limits at all. I hope that the Senate will act upon it this morning, and give this railroad company privileges which have been granted to others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business, which is the bill to revise the statutes.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope we shall be allowed a few moments now to finish this bill. I think it will take but a very brief time. I will make a motion to that effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia moves to postpone all prior orders, and proceed with the bill which was under consideration at the close of the morning hour.

Mr. CONKLING. There are two or three objections to that, and some of them apply to the pending bill and some of them do not. Some time ago the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] gave notice, which notice was more recently repeated by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. HAMILTON,] that this day a question of high privilege, being a contest about the seat of the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. SPENCER,] would be called up. It ought to be taken up, and it ought to be disposed of; and if the unfinished business were likely to consume much time, I should be bound to yield in some form in order that that contested-election case might proceed and be settled. Now if the Senator from West Virginia induces us to take up this railroad bill and it is to lead to further debate, as I apprehend it is, then we are so much the more embarrassed with the business of the day.

As I am on my feet, I wish to say to the Senator from West Virginia who is interested in the railroad bill that, whether there be anything on that point in this bill or not, if it tends to allow the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to establish a depot this side of Massachusetts avenue, I want to be heard upon it myself, and I want to say anything that I can say and do anything that I can do to prevent it.

In the same connection, I venture to make another remark. A bill did once pass the Senate, as the Senator reminds us, in behalf of another company enabling them to fix a depot at a place very convenient to Pennsylvania avenue. I wish to say now that when I get the opportunity, unless that railroad company will sink its tracks and hide from the public eye the inconveniences and the unsightly effects of their proceedings, I will vote to rescind and cut up the authority granted to them. I believe in giving conveniences to railroad companies to come into the city; but I do not believe in having the town gridironed with tracks right on the top of the ground across which engines are to run; nor do I believe in having depots so put that an avenue like Massachusetts avenue is to be thronged and crossed and recrossed all day long by railway-tracks.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to ask the Senator to yield to me a moment. I will move to strike out of this bill all that relates to the running of tracks within the city limits.

Mr. CONKLING. Then what will be the effect of the bill?

Mr. DAVIS. The effect will be this: that the Washington Branch and the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company may connect their tracks outside the city limits, so that produce going South or coming from the South will not have to come into the city and back out again to its destination. The Senator perhaps is aware that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company has built from the neighborhood of Bladensburgh a track for its southern travel and southern freight which leaves the Washington Branch there and goes to Alexandria, crosses the Potomac there, and connects with the Virginia railroads. The result of this connection outside of this city will be that if a train of freight is coming from the South or from the West it need not come into the city as it does now, and back out on the other track. For the present I understand that the railroad company is willing to accept that much to facilitate their trade.

Mr. CONKLING. And the Senator assures us that the bill, as he will move to amend it, will mean that and nothing more?

Mr. DAVIS. Nothing else in the world.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. That is all.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I will consent, if no other Senator objects, that the unfinished business lay aside informally provided we may have a vote without debate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I trust the Senate will not undertake to pass this bill in that crude shape, which inevitably makes it necessary for us to legislate hereafter at both ends—that is, at this end where the depot is, and at the other end where the branches come into the city. If it be the pleasure of the Senate to postpone this bill until the day after to-morrow, until I can have time to see the requisite data upon which to frame a proper amendment in relation to Delaware avenue, I shall be prepared to offer an amendment which I think the railroad company ought to accept and which I hope will be acceptable to the friends of this bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to strike out——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, will the Senate postpone the pending order and proceed with the consideration of the railroad bill?

Mr. CONKLING. I consent to the unfinished business being laid aside informally, subject to demand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill No. 571 will be considered as before the body unless objection be made.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to strike out all after the word "and" in the seventh line down to the word "provided" in the sixteenth line, being all that relates to the city, which will be followed by another motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is to strike out, commencing in line 7 of section 1, the following words:

> And, also, with both said branch roads, to enter the city of Washington at a point on its northeastern boundary, between the points where said two roads now enter said city, and to locate and construct said roads upon such new route, and with such number of tracks in said city as may be agreed upon between said company and the board of public works of the District of Columbia, to its present passenger depot, or such other as may be constructed on square 681.

So as to make the section read:

> That the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct a lateral road, from any point on its Washington branch, (into the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia,) to intersect the Metropolitan branch thereof at any point in said county and District: Provided, That such work shall be completed within five years after the passage of this act.

Mr. SARGENT. It ought to say, "and outside the limits of the city of Washington."

Mr. DAVIS. It does that by speaking of "the county;" but I have no objection to inserting "and outside the corporate limits of the city of Washington."

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to postpone this bill until the day after to-morrow.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I had better demand the regular order.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope not, because it will only take a few moments longer to dispose of the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. My friend from West Virginia will observe that my friend from Vermont moves to postpone the bill until the day after to-morrow. Of course that means that he is going to debate and oppose this amendment. Surely my friend from West Virginia will not ask me to give way longer under those circumstances.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire myself to contribute with the Senator from West Virginia to the passage of a bill that will secure to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company equal facilities with any other company. I wish to see them have an opportunity to build a good depot at a proper place in this city; and in my own judgment the whole thing had better be considered at once. While we are giving them the right to make this lateral road, indispensably necessary for the connection of the southern and western trade, we ought also to fix the terms and conditions and place where the depot is to built, and give them all reasonable facilities to reach it. Let them not lose this opportunity, which I think they now have, to secure a permanent depot at the junction of Delaware avenue and Massachusetts avenue—the very best place in the city for a depot. It seems to me it is better and wiser for the public at large, for this railroad company, and for all concerned, that the legislation on the subject should be made at once. The place where this depot is to be constructed should be fixed and clear, and the legal right given to the company to establish it there, and then they should have every advantage which any railroad can properly have.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to add one word to what the Senator from Ohio has said. I voted myself in favor of allowing a depot to be established on Sixth street, and I am desirous to give equal or as generous facilities to every competing road that comes into this city. I would give to the Baltimore and Ohio road that which is just and right; and wishing to accomplish that precise object, I think the Senator from West Virginia had better let the bill go over until the day after to-morrow, when we may look the whole matter over and accomplish that which shall be in the very best interest of the road.

Mr. DAVIS. Adopting the suggestions of the Senators who have just spoken, I will consent that the bill shall go over until the day after to-morrow, with the understanding that after the morning hour on that day it shall be taken up, if the appropriation bills are not in the way; and I would say now that this bill has been this whole session before Congress and nothing has been done, and for a week it has been asked each morning by some gentleman to put it off until the next morning, and the session is nearly at a close.

Mr. CONKLING. I call for the regular order.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The unfinished business of yesterday is the bill (H. R. No. 1215) to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, A. D. 1873, which is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONKLING. The Chair may not be aware that by unanimous consent the reading of the bill at large was waived, any Senator of course being at liberty to call for the reading of any part he desires.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The repealing chapter was excepted, to be read.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Vermont calls for the reading of the seventy-fourth chapter.

The Chief Clerk read "Title 74, repealed provisions."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, if he will not think it implies any inference on the committee, as it does not, how sure the committee is, as we necessarily take this revision entirely on trust, that it does embrace existing law and nothing new?

Mr. CONKLING. That is not a very easy question to answer: "how sure is the committee?" I scarcely know how to answer that. It is a question I have heard put to a witness sometimes, and always excluded when objected to, it relating to comparative degrees of assurance. Certainly I can only say, as the Senator from Vermont well knows, that this work has engaged the attention of three sets of commissioners, and the examination of the committees of the two Houses, and of the committees of the two Houses acting jointly, and of the House special sessions being set apart for many days for its consideration; and all those concerned, as far as I can judge, tried to do their duty in regard to it. But when the Senator asks me to state how sure I am, or how sure they are that this immense volume, made of the gathered meaning of seventeen or eighteen volumes of statutes, contains no blunder, I repeat the question is difficult to answer. There is upon the second page of the bill, or preceding the second page as it stands, a list of errors called "errata," which are to be corrected in the reprinting; and many other errors have been found and have been corrected.

Perhaps I should be more candid in my answer if I were to say to the Senator from Vermont that I have no expectation that this work is free from error. I have never known any revision of laws that was. We have had several revisions in the State of New York conducted by very eminent and expert men usually, and we never had one which did not contain errors. I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] will bear me out in saying that although they revise very carefully, in spite of all their processes, errors are found. I presume errors will be found here; and as they are developed they must be corrected by future legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would ask the Senator from New York—for I have not given sufficient attention to know—whether he has been careful to preserve rights which have accrued under the law as it stood at the time the revision took effect?

Mr. CONKLING. I think the Senator will be satisfied that in that regard there is no danger from the bill. The repealing and saving clauses are very careful and very broad, preserving all accrued rights on both sides, preserving penalties where they have accrued, preserving rights and opportunities where they have accrued, and providing with I think very thorough carefulness of language that no person and no right shall suffer by any casus omissus or the like which may be found in the work.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Of course there does not seem to be any other way to dispose of this subject than the way recommended by the committee; at any rate, no practical way at this session. It would take all the rest of the session, no doubt, to go through with it in the ordinary way as theoretically and justly I think ought to be done. And when I say that, I mean also to add that I have no doubt the committee has given it the most careful criticism and attention; and the only advantage of going over it again, having entire faith in that committee, is the advantage of having seventy-three men having different ideas and thoughts, and different objects and motives in their minds, hear it read and examine it and criticise it, rather than five or seven. Of course, there would be a great advantage in that against error and slip over an examination by a smaller number of persons. Everybody understands that.

But it is impracticable, as a fact, to do that at this session of Congress; and the question therefore recurs whether we are to let it go, or whether we are to take it, as the committee ask us to do, in bulk, without reading or knowing its contents otherwise. I am disposed, for one, to take it, because, as the Senator from New York says, it undoubtedly does contain in the main a mere condensation of existing law, and it does contain a very carefully prepared saving of all created and existing rights of everybody; and if there are errors, of course they can be corrected hereafter, although that is not a good way to legislate, as a rule.

On the other hand, one cannot help remembering that two chapters of this revision—I do not mean of this particular book, but of the revision—have passed Congress already. Whether they are reenacted in this book, I do not know. I presume they are. I suppose that the chapter about the Post-Office Department is in this book.

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And the chapter about the Patent Office?

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, sir. If you mean about the Post-Office Department, that is here; but if you mean post-roads, that is a separate bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the general post-office act is here?

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We passed under the revision idea a bill regulating Patent Office affairs and another regulating the Post-Office. We passed those, although, of course, not a quarter as long as this is, without going through a careful revision in the Senate; I believe without even reading them. If they were read, it was a very formal and hurried reading indeed. It turned out that in the Patent Office act the statutes repealed by it were many of them most important to the interests of the United States and not having the slightest reference to patents except that in some section of one of them which I have in mind there was a provision that patent fees should be paid into the Treasury; and in the post-office act it was afterward discovered that there had been introduced what was not the existing law before, a provision conferring power upon the Postmaster-General in reference to making contracts, which I do not think would have received the assent of a majority or even of a small number of the Senators and Representatives in Congress if they had understood its provisions.

Of course, these are difficulties that we are obliged to meet, and this is the experience which we have had in respect to two chapters of the revision, not in this book, because I presume they are corrected in this, but I do not know. Of course it is an unpleasant experience, and it is with a great deal of doubt as to the propriety of any Senator of the whole body of Senators not being willing to sit down patiently and have the committee go over with us the whole of this work, chapter by chapter, and consider it and discuss it as if we were a Committee of the Whole to whom had been committed this business, that I, taking my share of the responsibility for passing it in the end, do not insist upon that and allow the thing to go. I do not say this to lay an anchor to windward, so as to be able to say hereafter, "I told you so," but to say, taking my share of the responsibility as one Senator that it is a kind of legislation which I hope will be very rarely resorted to indeed. It ought not in truth to be resorted to at all; but I do not see any other way, as the Senator from New York says, at this time but to take it.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I cannot but feel that this is a somewhat dangerous business. Conceding, as I have no doubt is the case, that the committee has devoted a great deal of labor and time to the consideration of this volume, it is, after all, substantially, and must be, the work of three commissioners. I believe that was the number appointed to codify the laws. We are told that some fifteen or sixteen volumes have been boiled down substantially into one. This involves great condensation. It involves changing of phraseology, putting the statutes into new language, and shortening them as far as possible. This volume must in the nature of things, therefore, be a digest, and nothing more. We all know the difficulty the courts have, and sometimes it takes them years to settle upon the construction of a single statute; but here these commissioners are allowed to give their construction to all the statutes of the United States, and to change their language, to clothe them in new phraseology, and we take all their work upon trust. We take their construction, their views of the meaning of these laws. Where courts have long differed and will continue to differ in regard to the meaning of a single section, we are to take the views of three men, without consideration, without opportunity of review, in regard to the whole statutory code of the United States. It is a laborious business; there are great difficulties around it; but, for one, I feel that it is a very unsafe business. If the language of the statutes is to be changed, it ought to be considered by Congress, and each session some part of the work should be done. We should not undertake to do it all at one session, but it should be divided out, running through a series of sessions in Congress. It is much more important to have this work done correctly than to have it done in a lump and all at once.

Mr. CARPENTER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The Senator from Indiana says this is a dangerous thing. That is undoubtedly so. It is dangerous to pass any law, because there may be a mistake in it that will harm somebody. That danger is inherent. We cannot avoid that difficulty. Every exercise of sovereign power is dangerous in that sense, that if there is an error lurking in it and if it is not discovered it may do harm.

The Senator says this work has been done by three commissioners, and from that he derives an objection to it. I think it would have been an improvement if it could have been done by one competent man. Where you have got one thing to do, whether it be to carve a statue or paint a picture or revise the laws of Congress, if it can be done by one mind, you are more likely to have it correct than you are if it is participated in by more than one.

Now, what does the Senator suppose would become of that revision if it were to come in here and take the fate of ordinary bills in the Senate Chamber? The youngest boy born in this country to-day never would live to see it disposed of. Suppose it were put into installments, part of it taken up one session and part another, by the time you had gone through two or three sessions your accumulated legislation would make a new revision absolutely necessary; you never would end anything and never would come to any conclusion.

Undoubtedly there will be found errors in this revision. There never was a revision made, as the Senator from New York has said, that did not have errors. It is not in the nature of things that the revision of so many statutes should be absolutely perfect. All that we can do is to give it every guarantee that such a work ever can have, that it is correct. The great benefit of it is that it gives us a starting point for the law, and if errors are discovered, as undoubtedly there will be more or less, they are to be corrected by subsequent legislation, and every man, every citizen, every lawyer, every judge knows what he has got to start with to find what the law is. He is to start with that volume, and then subsequent legislation is all he has got to discover. Tell any common man in the complicated relations of official life, who is an internal-revenue collector if you please or has something to do with the distilling business, that he is supposed to know all the law on that subject and it is to be found in seventeen volumes, and he is to be indicted if he omits a single particular or mistakes a single provision, and he would as soon go to the insane asylum at once as attempt to wade through it. Now, then, he has got a start; he has got the statute of revision; and then he has got to look to subsequent legislation and nothing else, and is certain he has all the enactments on the subject before him.

Mr. SARGENT. I think it would be wisdom for the Senate to adopt the recommendation of the committee and pass the code as it is, for I think great care has been given to this revision. Nevertheless, on an examination of some parts of the code with which I am more familiar from my former occupations, I think I find that it is not an entire codification so much as it is the insertion of parallel passages, if I may so express myself; and I will illustrate by a single instance which I have in my hand. I do not know but that I should be somewhat puzzled as a lawyer, perhaps any one would be puzzled, to know exactly what the law would be in the instance which I call to the attention of the Senate on page 541 of the revision with reference to mining claims. Section 2354 in the original numbering reads, part of it, thus:

> But no location of a placer claim made after the 9th day of July, 1870, shall exceed one hundred and sixty acres for any one person or association of persons, which location shall conform to the United States surveys.

That authorizes a person or an association of persons to take one hundred and sixty acres, and that was the law for a number of years. Finally Congress thought that one hundred and sixty acres of mining land was too much for one person. That might be a matter of doubt. At any rate they changed the law subsequently, as I remember by the history of the legislation as well as finding it here, and they provided—

> That all claims located after the 10th day of May, 1872, shall conform as near as practicable to the United States system of public land surveys and the rectangular sub-division of such surveys, and no location shall include more than twenty acres for each individual claimant.

Mr. CONKLING. Subsequent to 1872.

Mr. SARGENT. No. The first act says subsequent to the 9th day of July, 1870, but the second one says subsequent to 1872.

Mr. CONKLING. Does not the Senator see that there is an interval required to be covered by the first statute?

Mr. SARGENT. Exactly, but that is not the principle of the original law. The second act which I have read was intended to repeal and did in fact absolutely repeal the former one.

Mr. CONKLING. Then it contains something the Senator has not read.

Mr. SARGENT. No, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. He has read nothing that comes within eight rows of apple trees of repealing it, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. SARGENT. I have been unable to find anything further on the subject. But I mean to say that the second law to which I have referred, which made this second regulation and confined the location to twenty acres, did contain a repealing clause of the former legislation, and since that time all locations have been made to each party of twenty acres. If, however, under a fair and reasonable construction of this law, it still remains at twenty acres, then my criticism would have no force.

Mr. MORTON. It repeals the former law necessarily, without any repealing clause.

Mr. SARGENT. But here both are reproduced. Which prevails, the first or second section of this bill? As they are passed contemporaneously, there is no question of time to assist the construction. I mention that to show that there are crudities in this revision. A person understanding that subject thoroughly, and his attention having been drawn to it, could put it in one section, so as to have no confusion. As it is now, we shall have to rely on the judgment of the executive officers in construing the law. This may be the only instance of the sort in this volume; but it is one that struck my attention more particularly.

But, Mr. President, considering the very careful revision that has been given to this code and believing it to be the best thing we can do on the subject, I shall vote with the gentleman who reports it.

Mr. CONKLING. If my friend from Indiana had not spoken so quickly and so positively about this one repealing the other without any repealing clause, I should have been ignorant enough to read this over a good many times without finding it out, and I should not be surprised if some other Senators, even the Senator from Indiana, should be in the same position if he will take this and look at it. Let us see:

> But no location of a placer claim made after the 9th day of July, 1870, shall exceed one hundred and sixty acres for any one person or association of persons, &c.

Then in the next section we find:

> Where placer claims are upon surveyed lands and conform to legal subdivisions no further survey or plat shall be required, and all placer mining claims——

Mr. SARGENT. It is the same thing.

Mr. CONKLING. Not at all. My friend remarks that it is the same thing. I made no affirmation about it. I merely read what the bill says:

> And all placer mining claims located after the 10th day of May, 1872—

That is, located after a different day, more than two years after the first.

Mr. SARGENT. Of course; that is what I said.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That refers to the act of 1872, which was a general act on the subject of mining.

Mr. MORTON. One law modified the other, of course.

Mr. CONKLING. This is getting very interesting. The Senator from Indiana now says "one law modifies the other." Of course, it does; but what he said first was that one law repeals the other.

Mr. MORTON. It does to the extent that it modifies it.

Mr. CONKLING. Even though there was no repealing clause, he said one repealed the other. He does not mean that. He does not mean that when one statute says, even if it relates to precisely the same thing—whether it does or not, I do not stop to consider, although apparently it does not—he does not mean, when a statute relating to one thing requires that after a certain day in 1870 certain claims and rights shall exist, and another statute provides that after a day two years later than that all those rights shall be governed differently, one statute repeals the other. He means that it modifies, as he last says, the other, taking effect upon what shall be in the future the effect of the latter statute. A statute of a State which did that would probably be void by the Constitution of the United States; a statute of the United States which did it might be supposed to be void under another provision of the Constitution for taking away property without compensation. Therefore, the man who after 1870 took one hundred and sixty acres under that statute had just as good a title to it forever as the man who after 1872 took twenty acres under the subsequent statute, and they would not repeal each other, I submit, at all.

Mr. MORTON. I do not suppose anybody can have misunderstood what the Senator from California said about it, or my remark. The second statute was intended to change the first statute and reduce the number of acres in the way of a placer claim that any one could take. The Senator from California called attention to the fact that both of these statutes are placed there together. A dispute has already arisen. The Senator from New York is on hand of course to make it all clear; but he will not always be on hand to make these things clear when these difficulties arise. That is a single instance of confusion already arising upon this code, and perhaps is an illustration of the danger of taking a codification made by three men involving a change of phraseology of all the statutes of the United States that have been carefully considered at different sessions of Congress for some sixty or seventy years. As I said before, I think it is a very dangerous business; and if we wanted an illustration of it we find it in the little colloquy that has just taken place.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. May I ask the Senator from New York whether the reduction in the tariff, made two years ago, of 10 per cent. on certain articles therein specified is taken off each article in this codification, or whether provision is made by which that reduction shall be made as it was in the act? I have not been able to find it.

Mr. CONKLING. It is made by being incorporated in the chapter, so to call it, which relates to the collection laws.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I was not able to turn to it. I supposed that was the way it would be. I saw it was not on each specific article.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONKLING. I move now to take up the next bill in order for the revision of the statutes of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) That bill will be considered as before the Senate if there be no objection.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3349) to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, relating to the District of Columbia, in force on the 1st day of December, in the year of our Lord 1873.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONKLING. There is a remaining bill relating to post-roads, which I now move to take up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2879) revising and embodying all the laws authorizing post-roads in force on the 1st day of December, 1873.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the act (S. No. 253) to authorize the county commissioners of Thurston County, in Washington Territory, to issue bonds for the purpose of constructing a railroad from Budd's Inlet, Puget Sound, to intersect the Northern Pacific Railroad at or near Tenino.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1196) to alter and appoint the times for holding the circuit court of the United States for the fourth judicial circuit, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 1898) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to approve certain bills incurred by the direct-tax commissioners;

A bill (H. R. No. 2442) to protect persons acting in the interest of the United States;

SENATOR FROM ALABAMA.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Alabama contested-election case. I gave notice the other day that I should do so to-day.

Mr. BOREMAN. I gave notice a day or two ago that at the conclusion of action upon the codification of the laws I should move to take up the bill to establish the Territory of Pembina; but I suppose a contested-election case is in the nature of a privileged question. Therefore I will not antagonize this bill to that question; but I shall seek the earliest opportunity to call up this bill immediately after the ending of the contested-election case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the Alabama contested election.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is that a question of privilege?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly it is a question of privilege; but it is in the power of the Senate to act upon it as upon any other question.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I have an appropriation bill here ready to go on with, and from the character of the bill it is not likely to occupy much time; and I hardly know whether I ought to interpose against the motion of the Senator from Maryland. I think I will submit it to the sense of the Senate. I am ready to go on with it.

Mr. SARGENT. I understand this case will probably be finished to-day, and I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that it would be well perhaps to allow it to be disposed of.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Alabama contested-election case?

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Committee on Privileges and Elections ask to be discharged from the further consideration of this subject.

Mr. CONKLING. Is that the only resolution reported?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the only resolution reported.

Mr. MORTON. There is a minority report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The views of the minority have been submitted with the report of the committee. The Secretary will read the closing paragraph of the report of the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. The closing paragraph of the report of the committee is in these words:

So that, in any view of the matter which your committee can take, we are of opinion that Mr. Sykes makes no case entitling him to the seat now occupied by Mr. Spencer, and your committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Mr. Sykes.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I ask that the resolution proposed by the minority of the committee be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Francis W. Sykes, having been duly and legally elected a Senator from the State of Alabama for the constitutional term commencing March 4, 1873, is entitled to the seat in this body now held by Hon. George E. Spencer.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I desire to submit an amendment to that resolution or an additional proposition, if it is in order to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution is not before the Senate; but it can be submitted by the Senator from Maryland in the form reported by the minority of the committee or in any amended form.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Then I will submit a resolution on the subject. It is not customary unless required that the report of the committee should be read. I do not care about it myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will depend entirely on the pleasure of the Senate.

[Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, addressed the Senate. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BOREMAN in the chair.) The Senator from Maryland offers resolutions, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. George E. Spencer, not having been elected a Senator from the State of Alabama by the lawful Legislature of that State, is not entitled to a seat in this body.

Resolved, That Francis W. Sykes, having been duly and legally elected a Senator from the State of Alabama for the constitutional term commencing March 4, 1873, is entitled to the seat in this body now held by Hon. George E. Spencer.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, it is somewhat late. My friend from Maryland has occupied I believe about three hours, and to that I have no objection, for he had a very great task to perform. I shall hope, however, to be able to conclude this argument to-night.

This case is not partisan. I do not approach it in any partisan spirit; and in referring to the democratic party and to the republican party, I shall simply refer to parties as a part of the current history of this case. The question of a title to a seat in this body ought to be above all party considerations; and if I know myself I intend to treat it from a higher stand-point than that of mere party success. I shall have occasion to refer to the status of the republican party in Alabama and in two or three counties as a part of the history of the case, for the purpose of illustrating the facts and applying the law.

I may remark in the beginning that a decided majority in any State has a political and moral right to be represented upon this floor by a Senator reflecting their political views. The democratic party has a decided majority in the State of Maryland, and if by any chicanery, by any intrigue, management, or fraud, a republican Senator was smuggled into this body to represent the democratic majority of Maryland, it would be a fraud upon that majority which should not be countenanced by men of any party; and what would be true in regard to Maryland is equally true in regard to Alabama. Alabama had a decided republican majority. General Grant carried that State in 1872 by something over 10,000 majority, the republican State ticket was elected by over 9,000 majority; and ordinarily that majority would have a moral right to be represented upon this floor by a Senator reflecting their sentiments, and would be so represented unless there was something in the apportionment of the State or something in the management of the election that would prevent such representation.

Mr. President, I am compelled to speak plainly; and, as I before remarked, I do not do it in any partisan sense; but I am compelled to speak plainly, and I must say that the whole trouble in the State of Alabama grew out of a conspiracy—I do not say it was very extensive—a conspiracy by fraud to secure a democratic majority in that Legislature with a view of controlling the organization of the Legislature, the patronage of the Legislature, and more particularly the election of a United States Senator. I do not mean to intimate that Dr. Sykes had any connection with that conspiracy; I have no reason to suppose that he had, nor do I intimate that the board of supervisors of Barbour County were connected with it, and that conspiracy may have embraced but a few men, but the evidence or the papers can leave no doubt in the mind of any impartial man that that conspiracy existed; nor do I mean to intimate that such frauds and conspiracies are confined to any one party, or that my own party has been entirely free from them. I pretend to no such thing; but here is a clearly defined and proven conspiracy equal to and worthy of Louisiana and New York in their very best days.

Mr. President, under the constitution of Alabama the house of representatives consists of one hundred members, requiring fifty-one to constitute a quorum; and the senate consists of thirty-three members, requiring seventeen to constitute a quorum. It so turned out in the election in the State of Alabama that the political complexion of the Legislature depended upon the result of the representative election in the counties of Marengo and Barbour, and of the senatorial election in the two counties of Butler and Conecuh. If republicans were returned from those counties and from that senatorial district, the republicans would have a majority of the Legislature. If democrats were returned, the democrats would have a majority of the Legislature. This was the simple status of the case on the day after the election.

The law of Alabama provides that the supervisors of election in each county shall, within five days after they receive the ballot-boxes sealed up, count the votes and transmit a statement of the exact number of votes to the secretary of state. That is to be done within five days after they receive the ballot-boxes. The law then provides that the secretary of the State, within ten days after he receives the returns from these county supervisors, shall make out his certificates of the persons who have been found to be elected, according to those returns, from the several counties. It is important to bear these things in mind.

On the fourth day after the ballot-box had been placed in the hands of the board of supervisors in the county of Barbour an injunction was taken out before the chancellor of the county, a law officer that we have not got in our State. That injunction restrained the board of supervisors from counting the votes in the precinct of Eufaula, in the city of Eufaula in that county, restrained them from counting those votes as to senators and representatives, but still permitting them to count the votes in that box as to State officers and all other officers. The injunction was fraudulent upon its face. If there was any objection to counting the votes in that box in the Eufaula precinct, that injunction would be equally good as to State officers as to members of the Legislature; but it was confined to members of the Legislature and solicitor for the county. So the injunction, on its face, to begin with, was bad for fraud. It was, besides that, an unheard-of proceeding. Such a thing I had never heard of before, and I doubt if any Senator on this floor had, of an injunction being taken out to prevent the board of supervisors on the inspection of an election from counting the votes in a particular precinct. They could throw the votes out perhaps under the law, or the election might be contested for some illegality or fraud; but the idea of a court interfering to prevent the proper officers from counting the votes of the candidates upon those tickets while allowing them to count the votes on those tickets as to other candidates, was something never heard of before, and was fraudulent upon its face; and it requires only to be stated that everybody may understand it.

The injunction was granted; it was served upon the board of supervisors; and they then made out a return to the secretary of state giving the votes in all the boxes, including this box as to State officers, but giving only the votes in the other precincts as to members of the Legislature, the effect of which was to elect the democratic members. If the votes of that precinct were counted for members of the Legislature the republicans were elected by about 300; if they were excluded the democrats were elected by between 200 and 300.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Is he aware of the fact that each candidate running for senator in that county was a republican? Both candidates for senator were republicans; and the chancellor who granted the injunction was a republican also.

Mr. MORTON. My friend is mistaken.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. No; that was a republican contest.

Mr. MORTON. My friend means well, but he is mistaken. We do not run two republican candidates against each other. We are not in the habit of doing that.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. One was called a liberal republican.

Mr. MORTON. Yes, a liberal republican—a republican running on the democratic ticket. With that explanation, I accept the statement.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. He was not a democrat. We cannot help that.

Mr. MORTON. He had been a republican, but had deserted our camp and gone over to the other. My friend has not materially hurt my statement, I think. Excluding the votes in this box, the count elected the democratic candidates; counting them, it elected the republicans. So this injunction was taken out to prevent the counting of the votes in this box for members of the Legislature, allowing them to be counted for every other office. That was taken on the fourth day after the ballot-boxes came into the hands of the supervisors. They made out the returns, as I before stated, and sent them to the secretary of state. The law gave to the secretary of state ten days after receiving these returns in which to consider them before making out his certificate to the persons who had the highest number of votes. He had ten days to go on. These returns made by the supervisors showed that the Eufaula box had not been counted; they expressly stated that they had been enjoined from counting that box; but the secretary of state, on the very first day he gets that return, makes haste to issue the certificate to the democratic candidates that they had been elected to the Legislature. The injunction was granted on the 11th of November. On the 13th day of November, two days afterward, the chancellor dissolved that injunction, and then the supervisors of Barbour County went on and counted the votes in that box and certified them up to the secretary of state; but that result got there one day too late. There was an interregnum of two days, but in the mean time the secretary of state had improved the opportunity and had issued the certificate to the democratic candidates for the Legislature, and when the correct returns came, showing that the other candidates had been elected by some 300 majority, the work had been done, and he refused to correct the certificates he had wrongfully issued.

It requires but a simple statement of these facts to show the conspiracy. I think I had better read the returns of these supervisors. Their first return was as follows:

STATE OF ALABAMA:

At a legal election by the inhabitants of the county of Barbour, qualified by the constitution and laws of this State to vote for superintendent of public instruction, commissioner of industrial resources, members of the board of education, senators, representatives in the General Assembly, and county solicitor, held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, A. D. 1872, the said inhabitants gave in their votes for said officers, and the persons voted for severally received the number of votes following, namely:

For superintendent of public instruction—Joseph Hodgson, 2,338; Joseph H. Speed, 2,760.

For commissioner of industrial resources—Edward F. Comegys, 2,337; Thomas Lambert, 2,759.

For member of the board of education—Willis Brewer, 2,342; George T. Gibson, 2,760.

For senator—James W. Mabry, 2,172; Jacob Black, 1,981.

For representatives in the General Assembly—Jere N. Williams, 2,180; S. H. Dent, 2,157; M. Cody, 2,183; A. E. Williams, 1,983; Thomas J. Clark, 1,981; Samuel Fontroy, 1,970.

For county solicitor—Alto V. Lee, 2,161; R. D. Locke, 1,985.

They then proceed to quote the injunction, as follows:

JAMES W. MABRY et al. } In chancery, at Clayton.
vs.
H. C. RUSSELL et al. }

To H. C. Russell, judge of probate; Joseph C. Flournoy, sheriff, and A. T. Spence, clerk of the circuit court in and for Barbour County, Alabama, greeting:

Whereas James W. Mabry, Jere N. Williams, M. Cody, S. H. Dent, and Alto V. Lee have filed their bill of complaint in the chancery court for the ninth district of the eastern chancery division of the State of Alabama, praying, among other things, for the writ of injunction to issue to you; and whereas such writ of injunction has been ordered to be issued by Hon. B. B. McCraw, chancellor of said division, upon a condition-precedent which has been complied with:

Now, therefore, you, the said H. C. Russell, James C. Flournoy, and A. T. Spence, are hereby enjoined and restrained from opening, comparing, and counting the votes or ballots cast at box No. 1 in the city of Eufaula, at the election held at said box on the 5th day of November, A. D. 1872, so far as the election for senator and representatives to the General Assembly of the State of Alabama for Barbour County is concerned, and so far as said election for solicitor for Barbour County is concerned. And you and each of you are hereby enjoined and restrained from giving to any person any certificate of election predicated upon the votes or returns in said box No. 1 for senator and representatives to the General Assembly of Alabama as aforesaid, or to any person for solicitor for said Barbour County as aforesaid, until the further order of this court.

Herein fail not, under the pains and penalties prescribed by law.

Witness my hand, at office, at Clayton, this 11th day of November, A. D. 1872.

JOHN A. FOSTER, Register.

To any lawful officer of the State of Alabama, greeting:

Execute this injunction by serving a copy thereof upon each of the defendants and make due and legal return thereof.

Witness my hand, at office, at Clayton, this 11th day of November, 1872.

JOHN A. FOSTER, Register.

Now I come to the concluding part of the first return made out by these supervisors, showing that the secretary of state had notice. I do not believe that the supervisors of Barbour County were a party to a fraud; I exonerate them; but they were used. They go on to say that they set forth all the votes—

Except as to James W. Mabry and Jacob Black, who were voted for severally for senator from said county, and also except Jere N. Williams, S. H. Dent, M. Cody, A. E. Williams, Thomas J. Clark, and Samuel Fontroy, who were severally voted for for representatives from said county in the General Assembly of said State, and also Alto V. Lee and R. D. Locke, who were voted for severally for solicitor in said county, and as to all the persons above named as having been voted for severally for senator and representatives from said county in the General Assembly of said State, and the office of solicitor, the said supervisors certify that they are unable to report or certify the result of the election in said county on the 5th instant, the said supervisors being enjoined from counting the votes in box No. 1 in the city and precinct of Eufaula, in said county, as appears from the copy of said injunction and of the box on which said injunction issued from the chancery court for said county, which copies are made part of this report and certificate.

I think I heard my friend from Maryland some time ago descant with great eloquence upon the corruption and wickedness of Judge Durell interfering in Louisiana. I expected to hear him come down on this court in Alabama with something of the same power; but the Senator wholly failed to do so. You cannot conceive of a more fraudulent and corrupt proceeding than that was to get a return sent up, although it should stand but two days in the office of the secretary of state, and in the mean time he should issue a fraudulent certificate to four members, one senator and three representatives from that county. In that way they got three representatives and one senator.

Now I come to the county of Marengo; and by the way I will state further that the county of Marengo and the county of Barbour were notoriously republican. The county of Marengo was one of the strongest republican counties in the State of Alabama, voting from 1,000 to 1,200 majority for the republican ticket generally, and on this occasion 1,050 majority for the State ticket. The secretary of state knew just as well, when that return came to him, that it was a fraud as if he had committed it himself. If he knew anything about the politics of Alabama, he knew that Marengo was republican by a large majority, and the newspapers contained returns from that county showing that the republican party had carried it by over 1,000 majority, and even the democratic papers had contained returns showing that the republicans had carried that county; and here came a certificate from Marengo County showing that the democratic candidates for the Legislature—three representatives and one senator—had been elected by a small majority. He made haste to issue that certificate also. It turned out that the supervisors of election in that county threw out right and left nearly 1,100 republican votes upon the ground that one ballot-box had got wet in being transmitted from some country precinct to the town, and the rest of them upon the ground that the names of the voters were not registered, when in point of fact there is no law in Alabama, and was none at that time, requiring a registration of voters, and when it was notorious that the registry lists had not been sent there at all—a palpable fraud, a bold fraud. You cannot conceive of anything more barefaced than that was; and here four additional members were secured.

Now I come to the senatorial district of Butler and Conecuh. Escambia County had taken a part of Conecuh County and a new county had been carved out. In that county the vote for the democratic candidate for senator had been put upon separate tickets, and I think the report shows a very clear violation of the law. It would be a violation of the law in nearly every State in the Union to put the vote upon separate tickets, voting for State officers and members of the lower house on one ticket and then voting for senator upon a separate ticket. The democratic votes in Escambia County were put upon separate tickets. The republican votes were put upon the same ticket along with the others, as they ought to have been; and I think the report of the committee shows that very clearly. But when the supervisors of Escambia County came to count the votes they threw out the votes for the republican candidate for the senate on the ground that they had been put upon the same ticket along with the votes of the other candidates. When they came to contest the matter in the Legislature, it was decided that the votes should all go upon one ticket; that it was unlawful to put them on separate tickets.

This is the state of the case. There was a conspiracy to secure a democratic majority in that Legislature, chiefly, I have no doubt, for the purpose of electing a United States Senator. Now, how was it to be met? When the different members came to the capital at the time the Legislature was to meet, the democratic members assembled in the state-house; the republican members including the nine, four from Marengo, four from Barbour, and one from Butler and Conecuh, assembled in different court-rooms. The Legislature that elected Dr. Sykes met in the capitol, and so far they had the form on their side. But there is no law in Alabama requiring the Legislature to meet in the capitol. The counsel for Dr. Sykes were unable to find any law to that effect, but the law simply requires the Legislature to meet in the city of Montgomery. If they meet anywhere within that city they are within the terms of the law. So the mere fact of one body meeting in the capitol and the other body meeting in the United States court-house makes no sort of difference, so far as the legality is concerned. That must depend upon other considerations.

Then it is true that under the constitution the speaker of the old house and the outgoing lieutenant-governor hold their offices until the new Legislature is organized; but it was not pretended in the argument and will not be pretended here that their absence would make the organization of the Legislature invalid. If they appeared at the place where the true Legislature was being organized, they would have a right to preside over each body; but if they did not appear, each body had a right to elect provisional presiding officers, just as this Senate has the right to do in the absence of the Vice-President or the ordinary Presiding Officer, or the House of Representatives in the absence of the Speaker. This principle of law is too familiar to require any further remark. It was the duty of these presiding officers to hunt up the true Legislature, not the duty of the Legislature to hunt up the presiding officers; and if they did not go to where the Legislature was organized, it was their fault, and not the fault of the Legislature.

Mr. President, the two Legislatures were organized. How did the matter stand? In the capitol Legislature, so to speak, they had fifty-four members in the lower house holding certificates from the secretary of state; they had nineteen senators holding certificates, being three over a quorum in the house and two over in the senate. In the other Legislature they had forty-seven members holding certificates in the lower house from the secretary of state and six members who were elected, confessedly so, but had no certificates. In the senate they had fourteen senators who had certificates, and they had three senators who were notoriously elected but who had no certificates, and who were afterward found and determined to be elected. Here, then, were the two bodies. The court-house Legislature had a quorum in each house of members actually elected, afterward confessed by all parties to be elected, and about which there was no subsequent dispute. In the other they had seven members who were not elected but who fraudulently held certificates.

My friend from Maryland said that these men were not to blame for taking seats in the capitol Legislature although they were not elected, because they had certificates. Every man of them knew that he was not elected. Every man of them who took a certificate knew that he was not elected, knew that the votes of his county were against him, but they took these certificates in fraud and took their seats in fraud of the men who were actually elected.

Now, Mr. President, I come to another principle involved in the case, to which I beg the attention of the Senate, and that is not disputed by the Senators on the other side; and that is, that the title to the office of senator or representative does not depend upon the certificate but depends upon the election. The certificate is but evidence of the election. It may be fraudulent; it may be false; but it was expressly held by the Supreme Court of the United States as long ago as the case of Marbury vs. Madison that the title to an office does not depend upon the commission, but depends upon the election or the appointment; and the members who were elected from these counties of Marengo and Barbour held the title to their office through their election by the people, and that title could not be taken away from them or given to them by a mere certificate, and when a certificate is brought in any case to a deliberative body like this, or to the Legislatue of Alabama, that body has the exclusive right to determine the election and qualification of its own members, and it may throw the certificates aside, determine them to be fraudulent and of no effect, as it did in this case, and admit the men who were actually elected.

Here is a case, then, where one Legislature has a quorum in each house actually elected, and who are the members in point of fact and in point of law from those counties. The other Legislature has not a quorum of men actually elected, but a portion of those holding seats hold them in fraud of the law and in fraud of the people.

Now, what is the true question here? I desire particularly to call the attention of the Senate to it? The true question is not that we are to decide who was elected to one branch of the Legislature of Alabama or the other, but we are to decide between two rival bodies which was the Legislature of Alabama. It is not the ordinary case where a man wants to take his seat in the Legislature where there is but one Legislature and he holds the prima facie evidence. That is not the case. Here are two rival bodies each claiming to be the Legislature, and the question for us to determine is now not which appeared at first to have the legal right, but which in point of fact was the true Legislature of Alabama, which body had the quorum of men who were actually elected? Upon that question there is no sort of difficulty at all. It is not which Legislature appeared at the time to be legal, but which was the true Legislature, which one proved to be the true and legal Legislature. There is no question at all in regard to that fact. The Senator from Maryland admits to-day that the republican members from Marengo and Barbour Counties were elected; that the other men obtained the certificates without being entitled to them. He admits the fact that Mr. Spencer was elected by that Legislature which had a quorum in each house of men who were lawfully elected.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me? I beg to call his attention to the fact that the Senator from Maryland expressly and distinctly denied that Mr. Miller ever had received a majority of the votes in the senatorial district composed of Butler, Conecuh, and part of Escambia, and therefore there never was a majority of elected members in the court-house senate.

Mr. MORTON. My friend from Maryland did say that, and in saying that he expressly crossed his path and took back the position which he had labored here to establish, which was that we could not inquire who was elected from the particular county, but he said each House must determine that question for itself. In the case of the senator from Butler and Conecuh Counties there was a contest in pursuance of the law of Alabama, a regular contest, and that contest on the law and the facts was decided in favor of Mr. Miller, and I leave it there. I am satisfied, from reading the report both of the majority and the minority of the committee, that that contest was decided according to law. I do not think there is a doubt about that. I take it for granted it was decided correctly. There was a regular contest, and I treat him as being the lawful senator, and the lawful senator from the first.

Now, I want to call your attention, Mr. President, and the attention of the Senate to another proposition of law, and that is that whoever is found to be the member legally elected, his term of office in contemplation of law begins the day after his election. He may have to struggle for it from the hour of his election until the day his term of office expires; but when he is decided to be the lawfully elected member, in contemplation of law his term began on the day after the election. I read from the constitution of Alabama:

SEC. 3. Senators and representatives shall be elected by the qualified electors on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November. The term of office of the senators shall be four years, and that of representatives two years, commencing the day after the election.

The members from Marengo and Barbour Counties had not certificates; they were kept out of them fraudulently; and the fact was subsequently admitted by all parties that they were elected, and they were the members from the day after the election, and were the members at the time Mr. SPENCER was elected.

I wish next to consider another question. It is of public notoriety, although it has not been adverted to by the Senator from Maryland, that some weeks after this difficulty took place a compromise was made, by which both of these bodies gave up their organization and formed a new Legislature—I believe keeping on the same officers, but all went into a Legislature—and there was but one body left. When they went into that Legislature, by the unanimous vote of all parties, democrats and republicans, the members from Marengo and Barbour Counties were seated. That is an important consideration. There is a starting-point. The fraud was so notorious in regard to those counties that there was not even a contest. Those members were seated by the votes of both parties.

Which was regarded and treated as the Legislature of Alabama? The court-house Legislature. It has been so held by the supreme court of the State in a case of which that court had jurisdiction. I have the opinion of the court here. The court-house Legislature proceeded to elect a State printer. His right to the office was contested. It went before the supreme court, and the question was decided by that court upon the ground that the court-house Legislature was the Legislature of Alabama. I ask the Secretary now to read an extract from the opinion of the chief justice which I have marked with pencil, to which I invite the attention of the Senate. It is upon the very question as to which was the Legislature of Alabama.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

This result I now proceed to read, as follows, to wit:

First. Every officer who, by the constitution or laws of the State, is required to be elected by the people, derives his right to the office by his election, and the evidence of his election, in the first place, usually is the certificate of the proper officer, or if he is an officer who by the constitution or laws is required to be commissioned by the governor, then his commission is the evidence. This evidence—the certificate or commission—is not conclusive, but prima facie evidence only, which may be overcome or destroyed by better evidence, to wit, by the judgment of a competent court; if he is an executive or judicial officer, if a legislative officer, a senator or representative of the General Assembly, then such better evidence is the determination of the legislative body of which he claims to be a member, to wit, the senate or house of representatives, declaring him to be or not to be a member of said body. Each house of the General Assembly is by the constitution made the sole judge of the qualifications, elections, and returns of its own members. (Article 4, section 6, Constitution.) When, therefore, either house declares that a certain person is a member of its body, that is final and conclusive, and no court can go behind it.

The senate and house of representatives each, since their organization under the proposal of the Attorney-General of the United States made for that purpose, has declared that certain persons who had no certificates of election were elected by the people and certain other persons who had certificates of election were not elected by the people, and the first-named persons have been declared and recognized as members of the respective houses. This is conclusive upon us, and we have no power to review or revise what has thus been done. These persons, if elected by the qualified electors, were members of the General Assembly from the day of their election, and being members, then the two bodies who convened and organized at the court-house in Montgomery had a majority in both houses, and having such majority, when recognized by the governor, were a constitutional General Assembly, and were competent to do any act as a General Assembly, except such acts as can only be done by a majority of two-thirds of the members of each house. They could elect a public printer or a Senator to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. MORTON. In this very clear opinion the chief justice states the principle that their title to the office resulted from the election and not from any certificate, and that they were members from the day after the election. Now I wish to refer the Senate to an extract from the dissenting opinion in the same case. One of the judges, Judge Saffold, dissented, not upon the ground that the capitol Legislature was a Legislature, because he expressly denied that, but of necessity that neither of them was for two reasons, neither of which has been adverted to by the Senator from Maryland, and which will not be insisted on before the Senate I am quite sure. Judge Saffold stated two or three propositions to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate, because they are well stated and because they are in the dissenting opinion.

I concur with the chief justice in the following propositions: First. That it is not indispensable to the organization and existence of the General Assembly that it should meet at the capitol, or be presided over in the senate by the lieutenant-governor and in the house of representatives by the speaker, or be recognized by the governor. Secondly. That the members thereof derive their authority to act as such from their election by the people, and not otherwise.

But I maintain that there are cases in which there is no General Assembly, notwithstanding a majority of each house may meet at a time and place appointed by law and organize and assume to be the General Assembly, and that the present is such a case.

We know now—

I call the attention of my friend from Delaware to this—

We know now who are entitled as members thereof to compose the General Assembly, because it has been ascertained by an undoubted General Assembly. It appears from the finding that the prior assemblage at the capitol lacked the indispensable requisite of a General Assembly, to wit, a majority of the members of each house. This was the only defect of that assemblage, either in form or substance. But it is vital, and fatal to its claim to be the General Assembly.

Then he goes on to say:

The assemblage at the United States court-room, lacking every mere form in its organization, had, as has been subsequently ascertained, a majority of the duly-elected members of each house. In refusing to attend at the capitol, and in organizing at another place, its members staked their defense upon the truth of their claim to be a majority of each house.

That is a good statement of it.

The result of a proper investigation vindicated this claim, and prevented the other body from constituting the General Assembly.

Now I come to the reasons why he said the court-house Legislature was not a Legislature:

Necessity is a law. But the validity of acts dependent alone upon it fails if there was not the necessity. The court-house assemblage might have been held to have been the Legislature, if nothing else had transpired within a reasonable time.

Then he goes on say that the court-house Legislature had not two-thirds of all the members and therefore they could not do those things that the constitution of Alabama required to be done by two-thirds of the whole number of members. We know that that reason is not a good one, that this is a Senate, although there is a bare majority of the members elected here while they are not two-thirds of the whole number of members that may be elected. So with regard to every other deliberative body of a country. It was singular that he should fall into that error. But these were the two reasons why he held that the court-house Legislature was not a Legislature. But the propositions that he lays down establish the soundness of the judgment of the majority of the court and overrule utterly any pretense that the Legislature that met at the capitol was the Legislature of Alabama.

Here, Mr. President, we have concurring the fact that the highest judicial tribunal in the State of Alabama accepted this as the Legislature of Alabama, and we have the truth confessed upon all hands and not denied upon this floor that it contained a quorum of legally elected members of each house. It met in the city of Montgomery, the place fixed by law. It met on the day fixed by law. It contained a majority of the actual members of each house; and upon every principle of law and every principle of justice it was the Legislature of Alabama.

Now suppose we come to the other conclusion, what is the effect of it? The effect of it is simply to ratify and make successful a conspiracy and a fraud. Ten thousand republican majority in the State, a majority of the members elected, as was subsequently shown, republicans, and yet by an intrigue and a fraud it was attempted to control the election of the Senator of the United States! If it succeeds here, the result is to make that notorious fraud successful in the face of the law, in the face of the majority of the State of Alabama. I know that this view of the case does not commend itself to a single honorable Senator on this floor. I know my democratic friends will turn from it with the same aversion that I do. While in their own States they represent a majority of the people that have sent them here according to law, they will not tolerate placing a man on this floor who represents the minority when that is done by a conspiracy and a fraud so open, notorious, and unblushing as this was.

I have just one thing further to say; it is unnecessary to protract this argument further. Mr. Spencer received the vote of every member of the court-house Legislature; he received the votes of seventeen senators and fifty-three representatives; he received the votes of a lawfully elected majority of each house. Mr. Sykes received the votes of the capitol Legislature, but they lacked seven votes of being a majority of the lawfully elected members of the Legislature.

Mr. NORWOOD. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. GOLDTHWAITE] was in the Senate this morning, but being unwell went back to his room; but before leaving he requested me to state to the Senate that he desired to speak on this question, and not being able to do so to-day he wished the opportunity to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolutions of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SAULSBURY addressed the Senate. Having spoken till five o'clock,

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator from Delaware yield to me a moment?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. There is occasion for a short executive session; and if it be the Senator's purpose to continue for any length of time, and he will give way now, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will give way. I do not propose to occupy any great length of time.

[Mr. SAULSBURY's speech will appear in full hereafter.]

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting that motion the Chair will lay before the Senate certain House bills for reference.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 27, 1874.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 1394) in relation to the centennial exhibition; and in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1873 and 1874, and for other purposes.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the amendments of the Senate to the deficiency appropriation bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. POLAND. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I rise to make a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the consideration of the bill reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, repealing the Sanborn contracts, on which the previous question is operating.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I desire to make a report from a committee of conference.

Mr. MAYNARD. Is it in the power of a majority of the House to postpone the pending business upon motion?

The SPEAKER. Not while the previous question is operating.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] is very anxious to go on with the regular order, and I will withdraw my report.

COLLECTION OF MONEY DUE THE UNITED STATES.

The House then resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3256) to repeal so much of the act approved May 8, 1872, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1873, and for other purposes," as provides for the employment of persons to assist the proper officers of the Government in discovering and collecting money withheld, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] is entitled to one hour to close the debate.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. NIBLACK.]

Mr. NIBLACK. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that the time allowed for debate upon this question has been so short. I will endeavor, so far as I am concerned, to say what I feel compelled to say within the brief time allotted to me.

During the Forty-first Congress, sir, I had the honor to serve on the Committee on Appropriations with Hon. William H. Kelsey, of the State of New York; and I take pleasure in saying that I found him a careful and economical man as a member of that committee upon all questions of the expenditure of money, and I was therefore at the end of that Congress, when we were separating, and he was going out of Congress, prepared to receive with favor any ordinary proposition he might submit to me which would involve the expenditure of the public money. After the organization of the Forty-second Congress, and I think at the commencement of the second session, on the first Monday of December, 1871—although Mr. Kelsey's memory seems not to be very clear on that point, and I do not claim that mine is—I met Mr. Kelsey here with a proposition similar to that which is embraced in the first clause of this law under which what are known as the Sanborn contracts were made. He produced to me a draught of the legislation he desired to have on that subject, and urged upon me the propriety of adopting something of the kind. I said but little on the subject at the time in response to what he said to me, preferring to take the matter under advisement. Candor compels me to say that the proposition struck me from the first very unfavorably. It looked to me like inaugurating a roving commission to go about the country and do many things which ought not to be done in the name of law and especially in the interest of revenue; and at some time or other I expressed to him that view of the case.

Soon after the organization of the Committee on Appropriations that year, of which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] became chairman, I communicated to that committee the substance of the proposition which Mr. Kelsey had shown me, and expressed to the committee my decided disapprobation of any such legislation, and I invited the attention of the committee to the subject if it should ever be presented to them. I think there was at the time a very general expression of dissent to any scheme of the kind, and when the matter was afterward presented to us, as it was, it was, I think, unanimously rejected. We heard no more of it for a time. When the legislative bill, however, reached the Senate some gentleman—I am not sure who; I never took the trouble to look it up closely, but I am informed that it was one of the Senators from California, Mr. Cole, but of that I cannot speak advisedly; he was chairman, at all events, of the Committee on Appropriations, and he or some other gentleman presented the first clause of the proposition which afterward became a law as an amendment, and it was adopted by the Senate. I will now ask the Clerk to read that first clause.

The Clerk read as follows:

And from and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Treasury shall have power to employ not more than three persons to assist the proper officers of the Government in discovering and collecting any money belonging to the United States whenever the same shall be withheld by any person or corporation, upon such terms and conditions as he shall deem best for the interest of the United States; but no compensation shall be paid to such persons except out of the money and property so secured.

Mr. NIBLACK. That amendment was adopted by the Senate and came back to the House as one of the many amendments of the Senate to the bill. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The committee again objected to the amendment, and recommended non-concurrence in it, and the House non-concurred. That recommendation of the committee, I am reminded, was unanimously made. The amendment, with a large number of others, went to a committee of conference, of which the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FREEMAN CLARKE,] and myself, were the members on the part of the House. After several sessions, in which a number of points of difference were discussed, this amendment came up for consideration. The conferees on the part of the House again objected to it. Thereupon, some member of the committee on the part of the Senate, I cannot now exactly recollect who, although I think I remember, but I will not venture to name him, submitted an addition to the proposed amendment of the Senate, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And no person shall be employed under the provisions of this clause who shall not have fully set forth in a written statement, under oath, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, the character of the claim out of which he proposes to recover, or assist in recovering, moneys for the United States, the laws by the violation of which the same have been withheld, and the name of the person, firm, or corporation having thus withheld such moneys; and if any person so employed shall receive or attempt to receive any money or other consideration from any person, firm, or corporation alleged thus to have withheld money from the United States, except in pursuance of the written contract made in relation thereto with the Secretary of the Treasury, such person shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $1,000 or imprisoned not less than two years, or both, in the discretion of any court of the United States having jurisdiction; and the person so employed shall be required to make report of his proceedings under such contract at any time when required to do so by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. NIBLACK. The committee on the part of the Senate urged that the proposed addition to the amendment would obviate all the objections made to it on the part of the House of Representatives. There was some discussion about it, not very protracted, for we had not a great deal of time for discussion. Substantially the same arguments were used, however, in support of the proposition that I heard urged from gentlemen outside, in the first instance from Mr. Kelsey, that a large amount of money could be saved in this way that could not be reached by the ordinary officers of the Government in charge of the collection of internal revenue. After a great deal of hesitation, and after all the other amendments had been disposed of quite satisfactorily, I consented to sign the report as a whole, expressing, however, my regret at this particular provision, not being personally satisfied with it, but feeling compelled to yield something, as did the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FREEMAN CLARKE,] they both, like myself, signing the report reluctantly.

Upon the report being presented to the House I communicated with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] who had consulted with me before about the matter, and stated to him the result of the action of the committee upon this particular amendment. Thereupon he inaugurated an active contest against the report of the committee of conference, basing his opposition exclusively upon those portions which I have just had read. I stated on that occasion that I was personally opposed to it, and I gave a history of the subject as far as I could. In answer to a question addressed to me by some one I stated that I understood the Secretary of the Treasury was opposed to it. I stated the reasons why I felt compelled to yield my assent to the report as a whole embracing this proposition. After a sharp contest the report was rejected by one majority, I believe, and the bill was recommitted to the same committee.

When we again met the committee on the part of the Senate, I made the point that the House having rejected the report on account of this clause in the bill, exclusively on account of that, so far as the debate showed, the Senate conferees ought not further to press us on that question. Very much to my surprise, and I think to the surprise of my colleagues who took the same view of the matter substantially, the Senate committee still insisted upon the provision. I confess that with that persistence on their part I became a little annoyed, although it is perhaps not kind in me to say so now. I feel not a little surprised that a proposition coming from outside parties, not backed up by any official communication, a proposition so very remarkable to say the least of it, and one in regard to which I felt the committee of the Senate must have been unduly impressed by some influence or other which I could not understand, and therefore I declined to sign the second report on account of its containing this clause as an amendment again to be recommended to the House.

The subsequent record of the proceedings will show that the second report, which was finally adopted in the House by a majority of ten, was signed by but two conferees on the part of the House, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CLARKE,] and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] and not by myself. They yielded solely because they wanted to end a long-protracted controversy, and to save the bill without going through another conference or other delays. I have no doubt they signed it very reluctantly. My recollection is that they did so reluctantly.

I have very little to add further than to say that with all respect to everybody connected with this matter, in either branch of Congress, and especially to the conferees on the part of the Senate, there was something from the beginning about this proposition that carried with it an atmosphere which created in my mind an indefinite suspicion which nothing that afterward occurred was able to remove. It was not that anybody connected with the Senate conference committee was governed by improper considerations, but I felt that some outside and unseen influence was pressing this matter upon both Houses of Congress, looking to results which I regarded as not legitimate, out of which I feared some trouble would come hereafter. I feel bound in candor to make this further statement, that the very fact that the proposition came here through the agency of an ex-member of Congress, having about it what seemed to me something of the odor of a job, had very much to do with influencing my mind against the scheme in all its forms. I say that with all due respect to Mr. Kelsey I should say the same about any other ex-member. I trust that when I become an ex-member, which I will do at no distant day, I will be met by the same prejudice, if you please, if I am ever found here advocating anything which may be construed into a moneyed job of any sort or may look like an unseemly raid on the Treasury.

A few words in conclusion, as my time is nearly out and other gentlemen desire to speak. I am not at all taken by surprise by the developments which have come out of this investigation. Indeed, I always had a shadowy impression that some time or other we should hear of this matter again in some way which would not be creditable to the Government, and which would demonstrate very clearly that the legislation itself was a mistake. Candor, however, compels me to make this additional remark: that if the law had been carefully and prudently administered no great harm could have been done, and good might have resulted in some cases. I say this in the presence of gentlemen who have investigated this subject with me. I regard all these developments which have brought so much scandal upon the Treasury Department in connection with these contracts as presenting a most remarkable case of official negligence and maladministration. The whole theory of the law has been perverted by somebody. Who is responsible I do not pretend now to say. But instead of these men being required to assist the proper officers of the Government, as the law contemplated, the Government officials have been made to assist them; the whole machinery of the Government, so far as it could be made available, was subordinated to the interests of Mr. Sanborn and his associates under this contract. This theory runs through everything connected with the administration of the law; and out of this theory most, if not all, this scandal has arisen.

But, Mr. Speaker, my time is out, and therefore I yield the floor.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

Mr. KELLOGG Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes allowed to me I cannot say all that I might wish to say in reference to this subject. I expect, and I suppose almost every member of this House expects, to vote for the repeal of this law; and I should have been very glad to have voted for its repeal four months ago if the Committee on Ways and Means had given us a chance to do so. I think they should have reported a bill for the repeal of this law as soon as the manner in which it was being carried into effect and the results that were being accomplished under it were brought to their notice. Some of us, I will admit, had almost come to the conclusion, much as we respect and esteem personally every member of that committee, that it would take about eight or nine months at least for that committee to bring forth anything for the consideration of this House. They have reported at last, and we gladly welcome their report. I presume the House will stand by their report and vote almost, if not quite, unanimously for the repeal of the law. But there are one or two things contained in this report, and some things which have been advanced by gentlemen of that committee who have spoken upon it, in reference to which, in the absence of any gentleman from Massachusetts to say a word in behalf of his own citizens, I deem it my duty, although I am liable to misrepresentation, to give my own views in a very few words.

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, this report says that the Secretary of the Treasury deserves "severe condemnation." I shall not speak upon something else which I should have spoken upon, if it had been reported from that committee here; and I might not say what I do now, but for the speech delivered yesterday by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.] But when in addition to the language of that report calling for the "severe condemnation" of the Secretary of the Treasury, the gentleman from Kentucky—although I do not find his speech in the RECORD this morning—says that he will make the record of the Secretary of the Treasury so black that no administration or party can longer palliate his crime, I have felt it my duty to look carefully at the report and the evidence to see whether this officer deserves any such "severe condemnation." The gentleman from Kentucky has been long enough engaged upon this speech of his to give it in the RECORD the next morning. I say that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] was right when, interrupting the gentleman from Kentucky yesterday, he said that if what that gentleman said was true, the duty of the committee was to bring in articles of impeachment and have them sent to the Senate, so that this officer might be tried for criminal omission of duty at least, if not for direct crime. That has not been done yet. I say they should do it or else they should modify the language of their report; and the language of the speeches they have made here should have been less violent, and less condemnatory of the Secretary.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we come to "severe condemnation" in regard to this law, I think we should first look at ourselves. Some of us were members of the last Congress and voted for the passage of this law. I was one of those; and I found myself in good company, along with the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and many other leading members of this House. I voted for the law as many others did, merely to save an appropriation bill, and had no more idea of what would be accomplished under that law than I had that the sun would rise in the west the next morning. I was not here when it was discussed on the first report of the committee of conference. I never heard it discussed or knew of it, but I was here and voted on the final report. I presume that not one man in this House dreamed that there would ever be any such results as have followed from the passage of that law. We voted for that law, and we put it upon the Secretary of the Treasury to make contracts with three persons to aid in collecting certain back taxes. If gentlemen had done justice to the Secretary of the Treasury they would have stated that the whole object, and the instructions of the Department given under the law as the evidence shows, was to collect taxes that were not found upon the books of the collectors. And, sir, we should, in passing judgment upon this case, recognize our own want of foresight, our own want of judgment, in passing any such a law as that. The law has been perverted from what either Congress or the Department expected would be its effect; and it was our duty to repeal it at once, as soon as its operation was known. And the Secretary of the Treasury recommended its repeal early in the session—I give his language as found on page 88 of the evidence, advising "its absolute and unconditional repeal."

Does any member of the House believe the honorable gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NIBLACK] who just took his seat would have consented to that report as one of the committee of conference, or voted for the report of the committee of conference, as he did on the yeas and nays at the first report, if he dreamed any such result would have happened under this law? Does any man suppose the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, [Mr. DAWES,] or the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, [Mr. GARFIELD,] or their colleagues who voted for this law, would have voted for it if any man of them supposed this would have been the result?

If my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] had wanted to treat the Secretary of the Treasury fairly, why did he not say not only did the present Secretary, but his predecessor, Secretary BOUTWELL, when they first came into office under this Administration, find contracts of this same character, made without any law whatever, running way back to the days of that good, honest man of Kentucky, James Guthrie, beyond the administration of James Buchanan and in the days of Franklin Pierce—and James Guthrie was a man whose honesty was never questioned? Another contract was made under James Buchanan. They found half a dozen contracts made by Secretary McCulloch. They found a dozen or more of contracts, as the evidence shows, of this same character when they came into office, and all made without any law of Congress to authorize them. Why do they not say Secretary BOUTWELL and Secretary Richardson, when they came in, annulled every one of those contracts, finding no authority of law for them—that they have annulled every one of them, and made known their opposition to all this class of contracts and all this sort of legislation, and their action and opinions were known to Congress when this law was passed?

What did Congress do? In 1870, we passed a bill providing for the collection of captured and abandoned property or the proceeds of it on this same principle. Under that law contracts were made. It will be borne in mind under all those contracts nothing was collected of any amount; the Treasury was not robbed—no harm was done; but in May, 1872, after a full discussion, after report had been made to the House a second time by a committee of conference, we by a majority on this floor passed the present law; and those of us who voted for it I wish to say—and I am one of the number—are more responsible than the present Secretary of the Treasury. We voted for that bill saying to the Secretary of the Treasury that he should be authorized to make contract with three persons to collect back of unpaid taxes which they might discover; and Secretary BOUTWELL, then in office, followed our instructions and made the contracts; and the present Secretary followed the course already adopted when he took the office.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Let me ask the gentleman from Connecticut a question.

Mr. KELLOGG. Do not interrupt me; I have only fifteen minutes.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I understand the gentleman to say those who voted for this bill had no idea any such construction would be put upon it. Is it not the greater responsibility, then, upon those who construed it in this dangerous way?

Mr. KELLOGG. I am coming to that in a moment; do not interrupt me any further. I think the Secretary was misled as much by the action of interested parties outside, aided perhaps by some officers in subordinate positions, as even Congress was in passing the law.

Mr. Speaker, I have read this evidence carefully, as I have read the report, and I say no unprejudiced man can read the evidence without coming to the conclusion that the Secretary was as entirely innocent of the results which flowed from these contracts as the members of this House who voted for that bill. I have not the slightest idea he could have known anything about them until it was made public so that we all could know it. And although it may be unpopular to state it here, and although I may be liable to misrepresentation, I believe Secretary Richardson to be as pure and honest a man as ever filled an office in the employment of this Government. Are you going to impeach him on the evidence you have? Do it if he has been guilty of anything deserving of it; but do not undertake, I would say to my friend from Kentucky, by denunciation and declamation to draw black lines around his character, or by coming in here with your baby resolutions of censure. Do it according to law, and do it like men.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire to ask the gentleman a question, as I have not a minute to discuss this matter.

Mr. KELLOGG. What is it?

Mr. O'BRIEN. In the course of this discussion a member of the Committee on Ways and Means stated the fact to be found in the evidence that there have been on the part of these officers of the Government "usurpation of authority," "defiance of and trampling upon the laws," "perjury piled upon perjury." Who is responsible for all that?

Mr. KELLOGG. I cannot yield any longer. I find no such evidence as to the Secretary of the Treasury. If there, the committee should have brought in articles of impeachment.

Mr. DAWES. Let me ask a question of my friend from Connecticut.

Mr. KELLOGG. One at a time.

Mr. DAWES. Are you opposed to the repeal of this law?

Mr. KELLOGG. If the gentleman had paid attention to what I have said—he does not often do it perhaps, and it may not be worthy of his distinguished attention—he would have found that at the very outset I said that I was in favor of the repeal of the law and should gladly vote for it. I also said that the committee ought to have reported a repeal long ago and not taken the whole session to report it. We will vote for that repeal now, as soon as we can get to it.

Mr. DAWES rose.

Mr. KELLOGG. Not any more questions in fifteen minutes, unless you will extend my time. I ask my friend from Massachusetts to consider the position of the Secretary of the Treasury. They seek to hold him responsible for all the details of his office, ramifying and branching all over the country—for all the details of the conduct of all the employés of that office.

Mr. Speaker, I say that I do not care how great a man may be, he may have the brains of Alexander Hamilton and Daniel Webster combined, and no man can take the position of head of that Department and not rely on his subordinates for the execution of the details of this or any other law. It is impossible for him to follow out the details of the operation of any tax law until brought to his notice by his subordinates or otherwise. We have the testimony of Secretary Richardson here, showing that from five to seven hundred letters a day pass under his supervision. He cannot examine them all personally. He cannot attend to the details of the execution of contracts of other kinds, and to all the business growing out of the loans of the Government. It is impossible for him or any other man in this position to know the details of the business of his Department. And yet Secretary Richardson has been branded all over the country for not knowing anything about his Department. If you look at the evidence as he gave it, you will see with what simplicity and honesty he told the committee exactly how it was; and so it would be with the ablest man at the head of the Department. Some gentlemen I know have said that he should have said to the committee, "Gentlemen, you passed the law; I suppose you meant something by it; I undertook to carry it into effect as I supposed you would have me do," and that he would have stopped there; but he told them just what the position of the Secretary of the Treasury was. You might as well compare the Treasury Department now with what it was in the time of Alexander Hamilton as to compare A. T. Stewart's store in New York to-day with what it was forty years ago; or to compare a manufactory with from fifteen hundred to two thousand operatives with the little machine-shop with fifteen hands out of which it sprung. I do not believe that the Secretary of the Treasury knew anything about the amount of money being collected, or the different taxes that were collected, or could know it, unless by accident, until the matter became public, when we all know it.

Sir, let us allow the Secretary to speak for himself a moment as to his views upon this class of contracts and of this law. I quote the first part of his evidence, given as long ago as March last, on page 87 of the evidence:

The CHAIRMAN. We are examining the propriety of repealing, amending, or continuing as it is, the law under which the Sanborn contracts, as they are called, were made. If you have views or facts that you deem of service to the committee, we would like to have you state them.

Mr. RICHARDSON. All I can say on that subject is that I have been always entirely opposed to that whole class of legislation. When I came here in 1869, as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, I found a good many contracts of the kind outstanding which have never yielded anything; I thought that they were exceedingly objectionable, and I think that in every instance where the matter was brought to my attention I declined to make any contract. The legislation is objectionable for several reasons. It brings odium on those who make it. In order to enforce it, even though you may employ, appoint, and contract with very good men, they must of course afterward employ detectives, spies, informers—a class of people as to whom you never can tell what they will do. After the contract is made the whole matter passes into the hands of subordinates; you never can know what will become of it. It is entirely out of the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury; he cannot watch everything; he cannot watch anything, in fact, for he knows nothing about them. I suppose that the system affords revenue to the Government to some small extent, but it is questionable whether it does not cost more of trouble than all that is derived from it. I came to this conclusion long before this matter came up.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you advise its absolute repeal?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should advise its absolute and unconditional repeal.

I have no words of palliation or excuse for the way these Sanborn contracts were applied in the collection of taxes. I never heard of Sanborn until after this resolution of inquiry came up at this session. It was doubtless a job got up by outside parties to get all they could of taxes that ought to have gone into the Treasury; and they may have had confederates among officers outside of the Department here. It is admitted by the report that no evidence is found proving that any high official in the Treasury Department had any corrupt connection with these contracts in any manner or form whatever; and it is expressly stated by the report that the committee "find nothing impeaching the integrity of Secretary BOUTWELL's or Secretary Richardson's action." I cannot well reconcile this with the violent manner in which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] addressed the House yesterday. One of the worst charges is that Sanborn took five hundred and ninety-two railroad companies from a railway guide, and was told by the officers of the Treasury Department to put them all in, when he had knowledge of the delinquency of only one hundred or one hundred and fifty of them. The report is as follows:

It further appears from the testimony of Sanborn, that when he applied for this railroad contract, he furnished a list of railroads, taken from a railroad manual or guide, comprising the names of five hundred and ninety-two railroad companies, being substantially the entire list of railroads within the United States; that while he had knowledge of the delinquency of only one hundred to one hundred and fifty of them, he had no knowledge whatever of the delinquency of the remaining four hundred or four hundred and fifty. It also appears that when he so represented it to the officers of the Treasury Department, he was there told that "it didn't make any difference, and to put them all in;" whereupon he made affidavit that the entire five hundred and ninety-two railroad corporations were delinquent and were indebted to the Government. They were accordingly added to his contract.

Yet, if I understood the gentleman from Kentucky yesterday, he charged that Secretary Richardson told him to put them all in, and he then made oath to it. One other member of the committee has made the same statement, I think. Sir, I do not understand this evidence as proving any such thing. The names were put in on the advice of other parties, and the oath was made in New York City. Secretary Richardson swears he had no conversation with Sanborn about this or any other contract. And what does Sanborn himself say? I give his evidence, as found on pages 151 and 152, in his first testimony; and if he afterward said that Secretary Richardson told him to put them in, no fair-minded man would or could believe his testimony, unless carried away in the zeal of investigation after reading carefully the questions and answers found on those pages. Here they are:

Question. You have a list, as you answered Mr. FOSTER a while ago, of five hundred and ninety-three railroads?

Answer. Yes.

Q. Where did you get that list?

A. That list was made up, as I answered Mr. FOSTER, after an examination of quite a number of cases—I think one hundred and thirty or one hundred and forty at least, or perhaps one hundred and fifty cases. There was not a case of those examined, but it was found that they owed the Government something—some more and some less; and I, by my attorneys, made up this list from Appleton's Guide, or somebody's guide.

Q. Taking all the railroads they could find in the United States?

A. I told them so, and that is the reason I objected to the filing of it; I objected myself to doing anything of the kind. I didn't propose to do it, but they said it had better be filed.

Q. Who said it had better be filed?

A. Well, my friends.

Q. Who were they?

A. A couple of attorneys; my lawyers.

Q. Who were they?

A. Well, sir; one of them was Mr. Prescott.

Q. Where does Mr. Prescott live?

A. He lives in Boston.

Q. Was it his opinion as a lawyer that you had a right under the law of Congress to throw in all the railroads you could find in Appleton's Guide, and claim half of what you could make out of them? Did he tell you so?

A. I don't know that he gave me his opinion as a lawyer, but we concluded to put the list in, and I took it to the Department, and it lay there a long while.

Q. In filing your list at Washington you made an affidavit, which I will read, for I want to see how accurately you swear.

Addressing Hon. William A. Richardson, Secretary of the Treasury, you say:

I have the honor herewith to inclose a list of railroad corporations doing business in the United States which are indebted to the Government upon taxes upon dividends and interest paid upon bonds, which they have heretofore withheld and refused to pay.

I would respectfully ask that the inclosed list be added to my said contract made with the Secretary of the Treasury, said contract bearing date August, 13, 1872, and so amended October 30, 1872.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN D. SANBORN.

Subscribed and sworn before me, a legally appointed notary public for the city and county of New York, this 3d day of July, in the year 1873.

WM. H. STINER,
Notary Public.

Q. You made that oath before that notary?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you therefore swore that these roads were indebted to the Government?

A. That I believed so.

Q. And that they had withheld their debts to the Government and refused to pay them?

A. I believed that they were doing so.

Q. I thought you said that you objected to this large list being put in by your counsel?

A. I did at first.

Q. And you now assert that you believed that they were indebted and refused to pay?

A. I objected at first, but after I was informed that they must be all the same, I consented to do it.

Q. You now tell this committee that with the exception of about a hundred and odd railroads on this list you knew nothing about the balance of the five hundred and ninety-three, and that they were put in from Appleton's Guide-book against your consent; and yet you swore as a fact that they were all indebted, and had withheld and refused to pay. Is not that the oath?

A. Yes, sir; that is the oath. I submitted the list to the Department, and it lay there some time.

Mr. BECK. It ought to have lain there a good while longer.

The WITNESS. I asked them if they desired that I should select out the roads that I knew beyond a doubt were indebted, and I think I was told that it did not make any difference—to let it go at that.

Q. What officer of the Department told you that?

A. I cannot remember.

Q. I wish you would try to remember. That may be quite important. At any rate you did it by the advice of the chief officers of the Department?

A. I was there two or three days about it.

Q. And that advice you got from some one high in authority in the Department. In whose office was it that you had this conversation when you were advised to "let it go?"

A. I can't tell.

Q. It was either the Secretary or the Assistant Secretary or the Solicitor that gave you that advice?

A. I don't remember.

Q. Do you remember that it was not either of those?

A. I don't remember; I know I was there talking about the matter two or three days.

Q. To whom did you talk?

A. I talked with the Solicitor and the Secretary about it.

Q. Those were the only men that you consulted, were they not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was one of those officers that advised you to put the roads all in?

A. I can't tell you about that.

Mr. BECK. That was in 1873. Mr. Richardson was Secretary then, of course.

The WITNESS. I wanted it returned, and I told them if they wanted the list revised and cut down to just the number that I knew about, I would do so.

Q. And they advised you to put them all in?

A. Mr. Richardson accepted the whole report.

Q. After his attention was called to the fact that there were a large number of those roads that you knew nothing about?

A. I don't remember whether it was he or some one else that I talked with about that.

I have said what I have upon this matter because I believe that the committee, while they have been faithful and zealous in their endeavors to seek out and stop all iniquity in this matter, have not quite done justice to the Secretary of the Treasury, and because I believe popular clamor is doing him still greater injustice. When I see a man who has borne so spotless a character through life as the Secretary of the Treasury has done unjustly assailed, as I think, if no man else will say a word in his behalf, I for one will not stand silently by or drift along with the current against the convictions of my own conscience.

Mr. FOSTER. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER.]

Mr. KELLOGG. It was agreed that I should have fifteen minutes, and I hold my friend to that agreement.

Mr. CLYMER. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have but a few words more to say; but I insist that I am entitled to fifteen minutes.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the time of the gentleman from Connecticut be extended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] has entire control of the floor.

[Mr. CLYMER addressed the House for ten minutes. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. FOSTER. I now yield a few minutes to my colleague, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire only to call the attention of the House to a single further fact in addition to what was said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NIBLACK] in regard to the ground upon which the provision under discussion held its place in the report of the committee of conference. The gentleman has called attention to the restrictions which the committee put upon the original amendment of the Senate, that very specific information should be furnished, certified to under oath, showing what tax had been withheld, on what ground, and in what way the tax had been covered up and concealed from the officers of the Treasury, and all this was made a necessary preliminary before the Secretary should authorize any contract for the discovery and collection of such concealed and unpaid tax. In this connection, and in order to show the object to which the law was to be directed and the reason for its enactment, I will quote a passage from the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. NIBLACK,] made at the time the report of the committee of conference was considered by the House.

Mr. NIBLACK. The first report of the committee of conference?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes; the first report. The statements made by the gentleman concur with my own recollection of the case. In those remarks he states that it was alleged on the part of the Senate conferees that several great railroad companies—I remember that one was distinctly named—had covered up their annual profits under the name of repairs or of stock certificates, or in some way under their system of book-keeping, which so concealed their income that nobody but a person thoroughly acquainted with the management of the railroad and its manner of keeping books would understand the facts in regard to income. Therefore the first great necessity was to have some arrangement by which to discover the fraudulent concealment of the income and then to collect the tax thereon. It was said that this knowledge was possessed by men not connected with the Government, and who would not undertake to expose and discover it unless by some special arrangement like this they were authorized to do so and were paid liberally for their work. It was that to which the gentleman from Indiana referred in his remarks as the "extraordinary statement" made by the Senate conferees that led the House conferees reluctantly to allow that clause to remain in the law.

Though this legislation was in my judgment unwise, yet, looking at it in the light of experience, I believe that if this provision of the law, as we at last amended it in conference, had been strictly complied with, not one of the great evils in the administration of this law now complained of would have resulted. The following are the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana, to which I refer:

> No man objects more strenuously to perpetuating the late and present system of spies and informers than I do. This, however, seems to rest upon ground a little different from the case of ordinary informers and spies. It is represented to us, very earnestly, too, that there are certain great corporations in the country—I need not name them here—which have so managed their business during the last eight or ten years, since the law in regard to income tax has been enforced, as not to return all the incomes for which they ought to pay taxes to the General Government; in other words, that large amounts of money by systems of either false entries in books or by some other means equally fortunate, have been covered up, representing considerable amounts to which the Government of the United States is fairly entitled under our internal-revenue law.
> I am opposed to this whole system; but I say that, in view of the extraordinary statements made to us as to what would probably be accomplished by the amendment, I did not feel justified in standing out longer against it. If anything comes of it, of course no harm is done. If any good comes of it, of course it will be worth whatever it amounts to. On the contrary, if this particular measure shall prove to be not for the interests of the Government, then it will be the end of such legislation. In fact, it is the expiring effort on the part of the Government to get hold of such information as the Government is entitled to but cannot get in any other way.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS.]

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, the bill now pending before the House is for the repeal of the law under which the so-called Sanborn contracts were made. That law embodies three chief points: First, that the Secretary of the Treasury may employ not exceeding three persons to assist the proper officers in doing certain work; second, that work involves, first and chiefly, the discovery of moneys withheld; and third, that the collections under this law must be of moneys withheld in violation of law. Those are the substantial points of the statute which we now ask the House to repeal.

Previous to the passage of that law, previous to the incoming of this Administration, a practice prevailed of giving contracts for the collection of money; and when this Administration came into power such contracts were found still in force. By the evidence of ex-Secretary BOUTWELL, on page 299 of report 559, it appears that one of his first acts as Secretary was to cancel all such contracts then in force; and Mr. Solicitor Banfield in his evidence on page 37 of the same report gives a list of the contracts which had been made previous to the incoming of this Administration. These go back as far as 1855 when Mr. Guthrie was Secretary of the Treasury, and to 1858 when Howell Cobb occupied that position. This practice had prevailed without law, if not in defiance of law.

Mr. CLYMER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask one question?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLYMER. From the time the gentleman mentions up to last year, did the Secretary of the Treasury ever order the persons officially charged with the collection of the revenues of the Government to lend to persons holding such contracts all their assistance and the aid of all the machinery of the Government?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I do not see how the question bears upon what I am stating. I am stating now (and I must decline to yield further to questions which are not pertinent) that contracts were in force without law if not in direct violation of law as far back as 1855; so that when it was proposed to pass the statute which we are now considering the claim was made that it was for the regulation and restriction of an established policy of the Government; and the claim was made besides that by such a law much money that otherwsie could not be collected might be brought into the Treasury. That was the motive for the passage of the law. With our present experience there is hardly a man upon this floor who would vote for that provision. But it is only within a week that we have repealed with reference to customs this same principle of moieties which is embodied in this statute, and which is as old as the Government.

It was a mistake to pass the law; but the law might have been upon the statute-books and might have been enforced without scandal and without odium. If the Secretary of the Treasury had insisted that these contractors should assist the proper officers and not take control of them; if he had demanded that they should discover the moneys which they were to collect, instead of taking the records of courts, instead of copying railway guides and making general claims upon them; if he had required them to collect moneys withheld, instead of seizing on those on their way to the Treasury; if he had scrutinized their claims to moieties, and only allowed them for service actually rendered, the statute might have stood and been productive. But this was not the method of procedure.

So the doors were opened wide to abuses; and those abuses came like doves to the window. The law was in legislation like nitro-glycerine in strong hands—dealing vigilantly, it might have been useful; without care, without the greatest discretion, it was calculated to prove, as it did prove, dangerous and destructive.

When the House called for the correspondence and records with reference to these contracts, the Committee on Ways and Means gave them immediate attention and agreed to report a bill for the repeal of this provision. It was upon the request of the chief contractor that delay occurred. He desired to be heard by himself and by witnesses against the repeal; and he was heard. A thorough and complete investigation was made. The result is in the report before you. It is not the fault of the Committee on Ways and Means that the bill which the House is to-day considering was not before it early in March. The committee bring it forward now, and ask for the indorsement of the House upon their report as embodied in the bill as now submitted.

Not only here but in all free countries it is the province of the legislature not simply to pass laws, but to see that they are properly administered. In another free country it has been said of the legislature—

Ours is not a council of sages for framing laws and planning amendments of the constitution, but a free and vigorous parliament, which watches over the destinies of an empire. It arraigns ministers, directs their policy, and controls the administration of affairs; it listens to every grievance, and inquires, complains, and censures. Such are its obligations to freedom and such its paramount trust and duty. Its first care is that the state be well governed, its second that the laws be amended. (May, volume 2, page 577.)

Not only so, Mr. Speaker, but the Constitution gives to Congress more than the power to legislate—the authority to supervise administration. It is Congress which has power not only to "lay taxes," but to "collect" them. No money can be "drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law." Congress, then, must have the substantial control of the Treasury in all its branches. I waive now the provision that the House of Representatives has the "sole power of impeachment" of "all civil officers." The power to enforce the laws involves the right to direct administration. Above that is the right to estimate methods, to criticise procedure. Does any one deny our authority to correct evils, to suggest reforms? Surely not. Then we may discover evils, and may expose them. This House has not abdicated the privileges of its individual members to form opinions and to express them. In order to punishment, certain proceedings are essential. But an offense that may not reach to the altitude of a crime may deserve to be criticised. It is well that the voice of this House should be heard in counsel, in complaint, even in emphatic criticism; for thus the lesson of official accountability will be most clearly taught. And all this is the undoubted right and duty of the free representatives of a free people.

Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that not one syllable has been urged against the bill which is now pending. The unanimous report of the Committee on Ways and Means upon the whole subject of the Sanborn contracts has been referred to in this debate, as it has been in the private deliberations of members upon this floor It meets with the substantial approval of all parties. It is judicial in its severity and in its fairness. Only the extremest partisans upon either side take exception to any part of it.

Mr. FORT. Let me ask the gentleman from New York a question.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Certainly.

Mr. FORT. Does he know of one single member of this House who proposes to vote against this bill of repeal?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I do not.

Mr. FORT. Then I hope the committee will crown itself with laurels, retire from the field, and let the bill be passed.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I am glad, Mr. Speaker, to have the indorsement of the gentleman from Illinois of the work of the Committee on Ways and Means, and to have his statement beside that there is not one man upon this floor who will oppose the bill which that committee ask shall now be passed. His statement is all the more noteworthy, because proclamation was long made that the bill would be trodden under foot.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask for a vote.

Mr. FORT. Let us have the yeas and nays, so we may know who will vote against it.

Mr. FOSTER. This bill has occupied but three hours of the time of the House.

Mr. FORT. O, no; it has been up for three or four days.

Mr. FOSTER. Three hours is all the time it has occupied.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is operating, and the first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

SECTION —. That no Senator, Representative, or Delegate to Congress shall, after his election or during his continuance in office, act as agent, attorney, proctor, advocate, solicitor, or counsel, for any person against whom suits or proceedings other than criminal may have been or are about to be commenced for violation of the revenue laws, or who has any claim for drawbacks or reclamations for duties, taxes, or excises paid or demanded, or for the United States, or any agent, employé, informer, officer or officers, of the revenue or customs service of the United States, in any suit or proceeding relating to the customs dues, excises, or taxes; nor shall he receive any compensation, gift, or reward from such persons or officers for any service, advice, counsel, or aid afforded such person or persons, officer or officers, agent, informer, or employé. And any person offending against this provision shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punished by fine not exceeding $5,000, and imprisonment for a term not exceeding ten years, at the discretion of the court trying the same, and shall be forever thereafter incapable of holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the Government of the United States. And any person who shall pay, or cause to be paid, to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate, or to any person for his use or benefit, directly or indirectly, any sum of money or other thing of value because of such service or advice, relating to any of the matters aforesaid, shall have the right at any time to bring suit for the recovery thereof or its value, in any court of the United States, against such Senator, Representative, or Delegate, or the person or persons who received the same, or may unite all such persons in the same suit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. SPEER demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, and tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered, and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was passed.

Mr. FOSTER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MORNING HOUR.

The SPEAKER. Reports are now in order from the Committee on the Judiciary, it being one hour after the reading of the Journal.

CIVIL-RIGHTS BILL AND GENEVA AWARD.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to say for the information of certain gentlemen who have asked me that the civil-rights bill and the Geneva award bill are not to be reported from the Judiciary Committee on this call to-day. I say that so everybody may know.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does the gentleman's committee expect to take up the whole day?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir; and more too.

Mr. GARFIELD. I want before the day is over to get in and finish the legislative, &c., bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I hope you may.

COMPENSATION OF REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3501) relative to the compensation of Representatives in Congress; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that whenever any member of the House of Representatives dies after the commencement of a session of Congress the compensation to which he would have been entitled up to the date of the election of his successor shall be paid to his widow, or, if no widow survive him, to the heirs at law; provided that the person elected to fill the vacancy shall be compensated only from the date of such election.

Mr. SPEER. Will that reach the case of the gentleman from New York, lately deceased?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It will.

Mr. SPEER. It seems to me only to apply to future cases.

Mr. HEREFORD. It does not reach this case.

Mr. SPEER. Let it be again read.

The bill was again read.

Mr. SPEER. I suggest to the gentleman that he insert the words "present or any succeeding Congress."

Mr. CONGER. I would ask the gentleman to make an exception in the case of the late Mr. Mellish. I wish that the committee should report a resolution that his salary for the remainder of his term shall be paid to his widow, who is in very indigent and straitened circumstances, and I think the House would unanimously join in such an amendment as that to this bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will state that in the opinion of the Committee on the Judiciary this bill will cover Mr. Mellish's case up to the date of the election of his successor some six months hence, and will also cover all cases arising in the future. Heretofore the law has been that when a member dies his pay has been taken back by his successor from the date of his death, which is the most odious of all the odious features of back pay. We desire to give the pay of the deceased member to the widow or heirs up to the time the new member is elected, and give it to the new member forward from that date. We have used the language of the constitutional amendment on the question of citizenship, which applies to all that have been born or shall hereafter be born. But in order that there may be no mistake, I am willing to insert the words "has died, or shall die." We cannot provide for a special case in a general law.

Mr. SPEER. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to accept this amendment: to insert the words "that this act shall apply to the members of the present Congress."

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It might be made to read: "when any member of the present or succeeding Congress has died or shall die."

Mr. CONGER. That will cover the case of Mr. Mellish.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. That case was covered before; but if gentlemen will allow me I will get this general bill through, and at a later hour in the day I will report a bill to meet the special case of Mr. Mellish.

Mr. SPEER. I simply desire to say that I had the same object in view that the gentleman from Massachusetts says he has.

Mr. COBURN. Does this bill apply also to the case of minor children?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It applies to the widows and heirs at law.

The SPEAKER. The amendments are withdrawn, and the gentleman from Massachusetts gives notice that in a later part of the day he will introduce a bill covering the case of the late member from New York.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RAPHAEL SEMMES.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3221) to relieve Raphael Semmes, of Alabama, of political disabilities.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was put upon the passage of the bill; and on a division there were ayes 102, noes not counted.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the bill was passed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of H. M. Turner, John H. Deveaux, and others, of Georgia; and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CONSTITUTIONAL GUARANTEE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported adversely on the petition of citizens of Louisiana asking for the application and enforcement of the guarantee contained in section 4 of the articles of amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and the same was laid on the table.

INSPECTION OF THE CONDITION OF PRISONERS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3502) to provide for the inspection of the condition of prisoners punished for offenses against the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY AND NAVAL SERVICE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also, from the same committee, reported (as a substitute for House bill No. 3128) a bill (H. R. No. 3503) in regard to crimes committed by persons in the military and naval service of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that hereafter general courts-martial be invested with a jurisdiction, concurrent with that of the courts of the State or Territory in which the crime is committed, of the crimes of murder, manslaughter, mayhem, rape, arson, robbery, burglary, larceny, and assault and battery, as well as of attempt to commit an assault and battery with intent to commit any of said crimes, when the same are committed by persons in the military and naval service of the United States or subject to the Articles of War; provided that the punishments for such offenses shall not exceed those authorized by the laws of the State or Territory in which the crime was committed; and that in all cases where the civil courts have obtained, or shall obtain at any time before conviction, jurisdiction of the aforesaid offenses, the trial shall proceed only in such civil courts, and all proceedings in the courts-martial shall at once cease.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. A similar bill to this was referred by the House to the Committee on the Judiciary upon some question of the right of Congress to provide for courts-martial for the trial of crimes committed by persons in the military and naval service of the United States, or, as the Constitution expresses it, "in the land and naval forces of the United States." The committee after examination came to the conclusion that there was no constitutional impediment, and have accordingly reported this bill. Unless some gentleman desires to discuss it, I will call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FOURTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, House bill No. 1196, to alter and appoint the times for holding the circuit court of the United States for the fourth judicial circuit, and for other purposes.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill provides that a term of the circuit court for the district of South Carolina shall be held at the city of Charleston on the first Monday in April and on the first Monday in November in each year; that a term of the circuit court for the eastern district of North Carolina shall be held at Raleigh on the third Monday in April and the third Monday in November in each year; that a term of the circuit court for the western district of North Carolina shall be held at Greensborough on the first Monday of May and the second Monday of December in each year; that a term of the circuit court for the eastern district of Virginia shall be held on the last Monday in May and the first Monday in January of each year; that a term of the circuit court for the western district of Virginia shall be held at Lynchburgh on the third Monday in January in each year; that there shall be a term of the circuit court for the district of West Virginia held at Parkersburgh on the first Monday in February in each year; that there shall be a term of the circuit court for the district of Maryland held at Baltimore on the first Monday in June and the first Monday in October in each year; that all cases now pending in the circuit courts for said districts shall stand for trial at the term next ensuing after the passage of this act, and all writs and process returnable to the terms of court now fixed by law shall be returnable to the term next ensuing after the passage of this act; that all acts inconsistent herewith, and acts giving circuit-court powers to the district courts in said circuit, are hereby repealed; and that the actual traveling expenses of the circuit judge in going from place to place to hold said courts shall be defrayed out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DIRECT-TAX COMMISSIONERS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, House bill No. 1898, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to approve certain bills incurred by the direct-tax commissioners.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to approve all bills for necessary and proper expenses incurred by the direct-tax commissioners while collecting the direct taxes in the late insurrectionary States, notwithstanding the bills for such expenditures were not presented for approval prior to payment.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Does that change the law in any respect except as to the time of approval?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It does not alter the law except in regard to certain bills which were paid before they were approved. This bill provides that they may be approved now, after they have been already paid. It is simply a matter of book-keeping; that is all.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEDUCTIONS FROM SENTENCES OF PRISONERS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3504) to provide for deductions from the terms of sentence of United States prisoners; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill provides that all prisoners who have been or shall hereafter be convicted of any offense against the laws of the United States, and confined in execution of the judgment or sentence upon such conviction in any prison or penitentiary of any State or Territory, which has no system of commutation for its own prisoners, shall have a deduction from their several terms of sentence of five days in each and every calendar month during which no charge of misconduct shall have been sustained against each severally, who shall be discharged at the expiration of his term of sentence, less the time so deducted; and the certificate of the warden or keeper of such prison or penitentiary of such deduction, shall be entered on the warrant of commitment; provided that if during the term of imprisonment a prisoner shall commit any offense for which he shall be convicted by a jury, all remissions theretofore made shall be thereby annulled.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COLORED RESIDENTS OF CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3505) for the relief of the colored residents of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill provides that all colored residents within the limits of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, at the time when the thirteenth article of amendment to the Constitution took effect, and their children, shall be, and are thereby, declared a part of said nations or tribes, with all the rights to vote, hold office, send their children to the public schools, and all other rights now enjoyed by said Indians; and the denial to any of those colored residents of said nations by any person or persons whatever of any of the rights or privileges mentioned in the act shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and the person or persons so offending shall be liable to indictment in the United States courts having jurisdiction over said nations, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 or by imprisonment not less than one month nor more than one year.

Mr. SHANKS. It seems to me that this bill is in violation of the treaty provision with these nations.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, sir; it is exactly in accordance with them.

Mr. SHANKS. I would like to hear the gentleman explain how it is in accordance with them.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will explain it in a moment. When the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians were removed under the treaty there were certain provisions in the treaty as to slaves they owned and as to their treatment. Those slaves have now become freemen under the Constitution of the United States, but being a part of the Choctaw Nation they are not entitled to the same rights and privileges among the Indians that they would be among white men if resident among them.

That being so, the committee have provided that the colored persons formerly the slaves of the Chickasaw Nation shall have the same rights among the Indian tribes that they would have if they were in any other part of the United States.

Mr. SHANKS. If I recollect aright, the treaty of 1868—the last one made with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians—provides the special terms on which negroes may become citizens of that country; and it provides specially that they shall have a certain amount of land, but that they shall not participate in the moneys of the Indians.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. This bill does not affect that.

Mr. SHANKS. But this bill makes them citizens of the Choctaw Nation, which by the treaty it is provided they may become within two years; that is, within two years the Choctaw Nation may make them citizens, or, if not, they may retire from the country. I am not advocating that the negroes should be compelled to leave that country; I think they ought to be citizens of that country, as I would say that the colored people who have been in bondage in other parts of the United States ought to be citizens there. But what I now desire is that the treaty made by the United States shall not by the act of this House be openly and forcibly violated. Hence I have sought to ascertain whether the Judiciary Committee desire by the bill introduced here to break down the treaty, or whether it is the opinion of the committee that the bill is in conformity to the treaty. I understand from the statement of the chairman of the committee that he believes the bill to be in conformity to the provisions of the treaty. If that is so I have not a word to say against the proposition; but I did not so understand the bill when I heard it read.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I wish to say on behalf of myself and also of the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] that this is the first time that either of us has heard of the bill just reported. We were not present when this matter was considered in committee; and I am not prepared to say what will be its effect. Whether it does conflict or not with any treaty made with the Indian nations I do not know; for I have not considered the bill at all.

It seems to me, however, that the bill contains some very peculiar provisions. I suppose that the colored persons residing among the Choctaws or other Indian nations in the Indian Territory are by the amendments to the Constitution made citizens of the United States. This bill not only provides that they shall be entitled to the privileges and immunities of other persons in the Indian Territory so far as schools, &c., are concerned, but it makes them citizens of that country as well as citizens of the United States. I suppose it makes them equal to an Indian, and equal to a white man, and, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] suggests, with all the privileges of both. This is the way the proposition strikes me from the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHANKS. I ask the Clerk to read the third article of the treaty of 1866 with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians.

The Clerk read as follows:

ART. 3. The Choctaws and Chickasaws, in consideration of the sum of $300,000, hereby cede to the United States the territory west of the ninety-eighth degree west longitude, known as the leased district, provided that the said sum shall be invested and held by the United States, at an interest not less than 5 per cent., in trust for the said nations, until the Legislatures of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations respectively shall have made such laws, rules, and regulations as may be necessary to give all persons of African descent, resident in the said nations at the date of the treaty of Fort Smith, and their descendants, heretofore held in slavery among said nations, all the rights, privileges, and immunities, including the right of suffrage, of citizens of said nations, except in the annuities, moneys, and public domain claimed by, or belonging to, said nations respectively; and also to give to such persons who were residents as aforesaid, and their descendants, forty acres each of land of said nations on the same terms as the Choctaws and Chickasaws, to be selected on the survey of said land, after the Choctaws and Chickasaws and Kansas Indians have made their selections, as herein provided; and immediately on the enactment of such laws, rules, and regulations, the said sum of $300,000 shall be paid to the said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in the proportion of three-fourths to the former and one-fourth to the latter—less such sum, at the rate of $100 per capita, as shall be sufficient to pay such persons of African descent before referred to as within ninety days after the passage of such laws, rules, and regulations shall elect to remove and actually remove from the said nations respectively. And should the said laws, rules, and regulations not be made by the Legislatures of the said nations respectively, within two years from the ratification of this treaty, then the said sum of $300,000 shall cease to be held in trust for the said Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, and be held for the use and benefit of such of said persons of African descent as the United States shall remove from the said Territory in such manner as the United States shall deem proper—the United States agreeing, within ninety days from the expiration of the said two years, to remove from said nations all such persons of African descent as may be willing to remove; those remaining or returning after having been removed from said nations to have no benefit of said sum of $300,000, or any part thereof, but shall be upon the same footing as other citizens of the United States in the said nations.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not see that this bill is at all in contravention of that treaty. The bill may be said to be a civil-rights bill for the negroes in the Indian country; that is all. It is to give them the same rights in the Indian nation with reference to the Indians that they would have had if they had been slaves among us. Now, unless we want to have the Indians a privileged class, I do not see that there can be any objection to this measure.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Will the chairman of the committee [Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I wish to inquire whether these colored persons to whom this bill relates are not now citizens of the United States under and by virtue of the amendments to the Constitution?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Just as much as the Indians, no more and no less.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I suppose they are more.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No, sir.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The Indians are not covered at all by the amendments to the Constitution. Those amendments do not relate to Indians; they refer to the colored people. Those amendments have abolished slavery and made those people citizens of the United States. This bill, as I understand, destroys in effect their citizenship of the United States and puts them on an equality with the Indians.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It puts them on an equality with the Indians, no more.

Mr. ELDREDGE. And gives them all the privileges of Indians. Now, in doing so, does it take away from them the privileges conferred upon them by the amendments of the Constitution abolishing slavery and conferring citizenship?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Giving a man something never takes anything away from him.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do not know about that.

Mr. SHANKS. By the provisions of the treaty of 1866 the door is opened for the Choctaw and Chickasaw councils to adopt these people as citizens of their government and give them all privileges under it; or, if they do not do so, then within two years the opportunity is given and money is offered to these colored people to leave that country. Two years have passed. The Choctaws and Chickasaws have refused to admit these colored persons as citizens of their tribe. The time has passed and the negro has not gone out of the Indian Territory. It leaves the matter in the condition in which it now is. Three hundred thousand dollars appropriated to pay for certain lands of the Choctaws and Chickasaws now lies unexpended. It is unexpended because the Choctaws and Chickasaws refused to admit these people as members of their tribes, and because the negroes themselves have not gone away.

The treaty of 1866 itself provides how it shall be executed. It has not been carried out. These colored men have been made citizens of the United States as all other colored men have been. It detracts from the rights given them by the power of the Government itself when you say they are anything less than American citizens. By this proposition you attempt to fasten upon these American citizens something else. That is what I wish to call attention to. In doing that we violate, as I think, the treaty stipulations made in 1866, being the last treaty we had with these people.

These Choctaws and Chickasaws have the title in this land. They hold it under patent of the Government. We are proposing here by this bill to force upon them a people they are not willing to receive into their tribe. We attempt to force upon their farms and upon their lands these negroes whom they do not want. We attempt to force upon these Indians a division of their property without their consent. That is what is complained of.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I resume the floor.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is simply to give to the slaves of the Choctaws and Chickasaws the same rights among the Indians that the Constitution of the United States has given to the negro slaves among white men. If they are citizens of the United States they are not citizens of that tribe. In order to make them portions of that tribe which held them in slavery this bill is offered. It takes away no right from them; it adds no right to them except to be a portion of the tribe of their Indian masters who heretofore held them in bondage.

Mr. McKEE. Does it take away any right of property from these Indians?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It takes away no right of property at all. This treaty which is brought up, and which is skillfully drawn, provided that the Indians might either adopt these slaves as part of the tribe or they would give the negro so much to go away. They neither adopted him nor did the negro go away. He staid at his home; they would not take him into their councils; they would not take him into the nation. Now we propose to give him the same rights in that Chickasaw and Chocktaw Nation he would have among us if he lived among us.

We are answered it is a solemn treaty. We can repeal treaties, if we choose, by law at any time. No one doubts that if there is any treaty in the way, which I deny. I insist that treaty ought not to prevent us from doing justice to these people who were held in bondage. And as the Indians will not give them their rights in the tribe where they held them as slaves, I wish the Congress of the United States to do so.

Mr. SHANKS. I ask the gentleman to permit me to introduce this amendment: "Provided no provision of the treaty of 1866 shall be affected by the provisions of this act."

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I am quite content with that.

Mr. SHANKS. Then I have nothing further to say.

Mr. HEREFORD. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEREFORD. There is a matter here in reference to which I do not see my way clear. If these Indians reside in the Indian Territory, which is as much their own as any ground we have, what power has the General Government to interfere simply by law with their rights one way or another?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The right to do what?

Mr. HEREFORD. In anything.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Pardon me. The General Government in my judgment has a right to do what it pleases with anybody within its jurisdiction, and the Indian is within its jurisdiction. The General Government can take if it pleases the shirt off my friend's back, and it cannot do more to the Indians than to anybody else.

Mr. HEREFORD. I understand that these Indians live in the Indian Territory, and that the General Government has made certain treaties by which they say that the Congress of the United States will never interfere with these rights.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, pardon me; you are interfering with their rights every day.

Mr. HEREFORD. I would like to know how?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Well, sir; I cannot tell you.

Mr. HEREFORD. We do not do it except in so far as we have power to do it by virtue of the treaties. We have never interfered one step further than we are authorized to do it by virtue of the treaties.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Why, sir, we have abrogated forty treaties.

Mr. HEREFORD. For instance, by virtue of one of the treaties the General Government agrees and binds itself that it will never organize in this Territory any territorial form of government without the consent of the Indians. Now, sir, could we do that?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. HEREFORD. If we can do it, it is simply because might makes right.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. O, no.

Mr. HEREFORD. In no other way, because the Indians have our plighted faith that we will not do it, and when we gave them these lands they gave us in exchange for them some of the most valuable lands in the United States, and we gave them titles and deeds to every acre of land that they hold, and we at that time agreed that we never would legislate in a certain direction and they have our plighted faith. True, we can do it; but if we do we are responsible in the eyes of God and of all civilized nations for having violated our plighted faith, and this bill, to my mind, looks in that direction.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I must resume the floor. I cannot spend the whole day over the rights of a few negroes and the fancied right of a few Indians.

Mr. COBURN. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Is not this property held in common stock, and are we not now forcing into the tribe a number of negroes who would divide with them their property in case of a division?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Nothing of the sort.

Mr. COBURN. Well; these Indians hold their property in common.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. There is nothing about property in this bill.

Mr. COBURN. But if these persons become members of the tribe, do they not share with the other part of the tribe in the property of the tribe in case a division takes place?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. My friend from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] has provided for that by his amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I would ask the gentleman if he has any objection to striking out the minimum punishment? Owing to the general character of the rights conferred and penalties imposed, I think the minimum ought to be stricken out.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have not the slightest objection.

Mr. KASSON. Then strike out the words "not less than one month" and also the words "not less than $100;" so as to fix a maximum instead of a minimum punishment.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Very well; if any gentleman thinks he is in danger he may move to strike out those words.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman can do it himself.

The amendment suggested by Mr. KASSON was agreed to.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I move to insert the words "while so resident," to come in after the word "declared," near the beginning of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment offered by Mr. SHANKS was also agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HEREFORD. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 140, nays 67, not voting 82; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. BANNING. My colleague, Mr. SAYLER, is detained at home sick.

Mr. BROWN. I am paired with Mr. HALE, of New York. I would vote "no" on this bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALARY OF THE LATE MR. MELLISH.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for adoption at this time:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, directed to cause to be paid from the contingent fund of the House to the widow of David B. Mellish, deceased, late a member of this House, a sum equal to the amount of his salary as a member of this House from the date of his death to the end of the Forty-third Congress.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman to ask authority for such a provision to be put on the deficiency bill, which will be up for consideration in a few days. We cannot pay that out of the contingent fund of the House very well without having trouble with the accounting officers of the Treasury. If he will just ask consent of the House to let it be put on the deficiency bill I think it would be better.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I will do so.

No objection being made, leave was accordingly granted.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the order just made; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF GOVERNMENT AGENTS, ETC.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with a recommendation that the same do pass, House bill No. 2443, to protect persons acting in the interest of the United States.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill provides that when any person has been or may be prosecuted, either at law or in equity, in any court, by any party, for any act done, or omitted to be done, to any captured or abandoned property or property claimed to belong to the United States, or because of any act concerning such property or injury thereto, and it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Treasury that the acts done by the person so prosecuted were done by him in good faith in order to deliver up or preserve the property for the use of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury may direct the district attorney of the proper district to defend such suit in behalf of the United States; and if said suit shall have been brought in any State court, the district attorney shall file a petition in that court to have the same removed to the circuit court for the district in which such suit is pending, setting forth the order or direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, and that the district attorney believes and has reasonable cause to believe that the subject-matter of said suit is for or concerning property hereinbefore described; and thereupon all further proceedings in said State court in said suit shall cease, and the process and all papers in or concerning the same shall be transferred to the circuit court, and the same shall have day and hearing therein the same as if brought in said circuit court, with like effect to the defendant as is provided in the case of suits against an officer appointed or acting by any revenue law of the United States or a person acting under the authority of such officer.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. POTTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported adversely upon the following; and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the same, and they were laid upon the table:

The memorial of Julius Francis and others, citizens of Buffalo, asking that the 12th day of February, being the birth day of Abraham Lincoln, be declared a national holiday;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 86) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election by the people of Senators of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 3042) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873, and to fix the compensation of the President of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2802) to incorporate the Anglo-American Mutual Company.

ROSA V. JEFFREY AND OTHERS.

Mr. POTTER. from the same committee, reported back the petition of Rosa V. Jeffrey, late Johnson, and the children of Claud M. Johnson, of Lexington, Kentucky, for relief; and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM TOD HELMUTH.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3506) for the relief of William Tod Helmuth, of New York; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Library, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

QUALIFICATION OF JURORS.

Mr. POTTER. I am instructed unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back with an amendment House bill No. 3499 in relation to qualifications of jurors in the courts of the United States.

The bill provides that no person shall hereafter be qualified to sit as a juror in any court of the United States who cannot read and write the English language.

The amendment was to strike out the words "hereafter be qualified to sit," and to insert in lieu thereof the word "serve."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. CONGER. I object to this bill, and if in order I desire to offer an amendment. It requires an educational qualification entirely unnecessary. If a man can talk and understand the English language he is as well qualified to serve as a juror as if he could read it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. How could he write a verdict?

Mr. POTTER. It was suggested to the committee, and it was a suggestion of great weight, that educated foreigners who speak the English language first learn to read it and write it.

Mr. CONGER. That is not the case. There are foreigners who speak the English language as well as the gentleman from New York [Mr. POTTER] does, and that is saying a great deal, but who cannot read and write it. They are as well qualified to sit upon a jury as any member of this House.

Mr. POTTER. No portion of our naturalized citizens are so anxious in regard to the qualifications for jurors as are the Germans. I received the other day a copy of a leading German paper having an article upon this subject, which I did not read, because I could not read German, urging much broader qualifications than these.

Mr. FORT. It would be very hard to get a jury in New Mexico under this bill.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman allow me to offer an amendment?

Mr. POTTER. What is it?

Mr. CONGER. To strike out the words "read and write" and insert the words "speak and understand" before the words "English language."

Mr. POTTER. I cannot do that.

Mr. CONGER. I would like to test the sense of the House on that amendment.

Mr. POTTER. That would be absolutely unnecessary. No judge would take a man on a jury who cannot understand the English language.

Mr. CONGER. The committee extend the qualifications further than the court would do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take the sense of the House on reconsidering the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed, in order to give the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] an opportunity to offer his amendment.

The motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

The bill was then read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POTTER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SETTLERS ON SAN BUENAVENTURA LANDS, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. POLAND. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back adversely the petition of Charles O'Hara and others, and the petition of E. H. Daley and others, settlers upon land included in a survey of the ex-mission of San Buenaventura, California, asking the passage of an act providing for contesting a Mexican title under which adverse claims to the lands have been sustained as valid by the Supreme Court of the United States. I move that the petitions be laid on the table, and the report be ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. POLAND. I am also directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back the petition of Sara J. Spencer, asking for the right of suffrage for women in the District of Columbia, and petitions of various persons all involving the question of woman suffrage. The committee instruct me to move that all these be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT COURTS IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. POLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3507) to provide for the manner of fixing the terms of the district courts in the Territory of Washington, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that the judges of the supreme court in the Territory of Washington, or a majority of them, shall, when assembled at the capital of said Territory, fix and appoint the several times of holding the several courts in their respective districts, and limit the duration of the terms thereof; provided that the judge or judges holding such courts shall adjourn the same without day at any time before the expiration of such terms whenever, in his or their opinion, the further continuance thereof is not necessary.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CRIMINAL COURT IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. POLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3508) conferring jurisdiction upon the criminal court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the criminal court of the District of Columbia shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the police court of the District of all crimes and misdemeanors committed in the District.

The second section provides that the provisions of the thirty-third section of the judiciary act of 1789 shall apply to courts created by act of Congress in the District.

Mr. POLAND. I will take no time in explaining this bill unless some gentleman desires it.

Mr. SPEER. Does the bill apply to pending cases? It should not do so.

Mr. POLAND. It has no effect upon pending cases in any way. I will state in a word the necessity for this bill. Three or four years ago Congress established a police court in this District, giving it exclusive jurisdiction over certain classes of crimes and misdemeanors. Very grave doubts are entertained as to the constitutionality of that law; and it is understood that the supreme court of the District has made a decision which squints in the direction of deciding that the police court has constitutionally no such jurisdiction. If that should be so held, there would be no criminal court in this District having jurisdiction over those offenses. Therefore we provide in this bill that the criminal court of the District of Columbia shall also have jurisdiction over the same cases.

Mr. SPEER. Does this bill affect the Buell libel case in any way?

Mr. POLAND. Not in the slightest degree.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SURVEY OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. POLAND. I have been directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report favorably upon the bill (H. R. No. 973) to expedite the survey of private land claims. The committee have made some slight amendments which are incorporated in the bill; and for the purpose of saving time I report the amended bill as an original bill.

The bill (H. R. No. 3509) to expedite the survey of private land claims was read a first and second time.

The bill was read in full, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in all cases where a claim to land by virtue of any right or title derived from the Spanish or Mexican authorities has been or shall be finally confirmed, either by the tribunal or tribunals of the United States, or by any act of Congress, and the survey thereof has not been made and established prior to the passage of this act, it shall be the duty of the surveyor-general of the United States for the State, Territory, or district within which the land claimed is situated to cause the claim to be accurately surveyed, and a plat thereof made, whenever directed so to do by order of the district court of the United States for the district or Territory; or if the land be situated partly in two districts or Territories, the survey may be ordered by the court aforesaid in either of the said districts or Territories; and such district court shall direct such survey and plat to be made upon the application of the owner or owners of such claim, in writing, setting forth the nature and extent of the claim, where the land is situated, and when the claim was confirmed, and by what tribunal or tribunals or by what act of Congress.

SEC. 2. That the district court aforesaid shall designate a reasonable period within which the survey and plat, directed as provided in the preceding section, shall be made and returned to the court, and may enforce the execution of its order by any appropriate process; and it shall be the duty of the surveyor-general, in person or by deputy, to make such survey and plat, and return the same into court within the time designated, if practicable, or such further time as the court may allow, and to enable him to do so he may appoint such special deputies as he may judge necessary.

SEC. 3. That when the survey and plat shall have been made, as hereinbefore provided, and returned into court, the surveyor-general shall give notice that the same has been done, by a publication once a week for six consecutive weeks in two newspapers published in the district or Territory where the land is situated, to be designated by the court, and by delivering a copy of such notice to the district attorney of the United States of the district or Territory; and within that period the owner or owners of the claim, the said district attorney on behalf of the United States, and any party claiming to have an interest in land adjoining such claim, with the boundaries of which the survey returned conflicts, may file with the clerk of the court objections to the survey, which objections shall set forth distinctly the errors alleged in the survey; and, if filed by any party other than the United States, shall also set forth the extent and nature of the objector's interest, and shall be verified by the objector or some one cognizant of the matters of fact alleged in his behalf. On the expiration of the said period of six weeks, and on proof of due publication, as hereinbefore required, of the notice aforesaid, and of the delivery of a copy of such notice to the district attorney of the United States for the district or Territory at least thirty days previously, the court shall appoint a day for the hearing of parties on the survey and plat returned, and any objections filed thereto: Provided, That where the land is situated in any Territory of the United States, it shall be the duty of the judge by whose order the survey has been made to give due notice of the time and place for such hearing to the other judges of the supreme court of said Territory, and said judges shall meet at the appointed time and place. On the hearing the court may examine the surveyor-general or deputy who made the survey, and any witnesses produced in support of the survey or of the objections filed thereto. If the objections filed be overruled, and the survey and plat be found correct, the judge of said court, or the presiding judge thereof, if there be more than one judge, shall indorse his approval thereon; but if in the opinion of the court the survey be erroneous in any particular, the court may order it to be corrected in such particular, or may order a new survey to be made, and upon the return of such corrected or new survey, made in accordance with its opinion, the like approval as aforesaid shall be indorsed thereon.

SEC. 4. That from the decrees of the district court or supreme court of the Territory approving or correcting the surveys, as provided in this act, an appeal shall be allowed within ninety days after their entry on behalf of the United States, or the owner or owners of the claims confirmed, or any party objecting to the survey approved, as hereinbefore provided, or aggrieved by the decision of the court, to the circuit court of the United States for the circuit embracing the district, or, if the decision be rendered by the supreme court of the Territory, to the circuit court of the United States for the adjoining circuit; and the decision of the circuit court shall be final: Provided, That where a decree confirming a survey has been heretofore entered by the district court, but has not become final at the date of the passage of this act, appeal shall be allowed within ninety days after the passage of this act, but not afterward.

SEC. 5. That the survey and plat of any claim, when finally approved as provided in this act, shall be forwarded to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and thereupon it shall be his duty to cause a patent to issue for the land to the owner or owners thereof, as soon as practicable thereafter; and until such patent is issued the said survey and plat approved shall have the same effect and validity as a patent.

SEC. 6. That this act shall apply to all confirmed claims to land, by virtue of any right or title derived from Spanish or Mexican authorities, excepting where such claims have been patented, or have been surveyed, and the survey thereof has been finally approved by a district or circuit court of the United States or the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or, in case of appeal from the Commissioner, by the Secretary of the Interior, or by the expiration of the time in which to file objections: Provided, That where surveys have already been made, but not so approved, the same shall be returned to the court as herein provided for surveys ordered by said court without further survey: And also provided, That this act shall not apply to cases where surveys have already been returned to and are now pending before the Commissioner of the Land Office, or on appeal before the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 7. That all cases other than those excepted in the last section where a claim to land by virtue of a right or title derived from the Spanish or Mexican authorities has been or shall be finally confirmed, and a survey is not made of the land claimed as heretofore provided for in this act, or proceedings taken under this act, to obtain such survey within six months from the passage hereof, if the claims have been already confirmed, and within six months after their final confirmation, if hereafter confirmed, it shall be the duty of the court, upon the application of any settler on the land claimed, or in the vicinity thereof, having an interest in having such survey made, to order the surveyor-general of the United States for the district or Territory to make the survey thereof in like manner as hereinbefore provided; and upon the return of such survey the like proceedings shall be had in all respects as hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 8. That all expenses incurred in making any survey, or modification of any survey under the provisions of this act, shall be paid for out of the Treasury of the United States. All the other costs of the proceeding shall be paid by the parties thereto, and the court may apportion them as shall be just and equitable.

SEC. 9. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. HOLMAN. It occurs to me that these extensive surveys which are for the benefit mainly of private individuals should be made at the expense of the parties interested, not at the expense of the Government.

Mr. POLAND. The provision of the bill in that respect is in accordance with existing law. In that particular we make no change in the law. Wherever a title is established which takes land out of a large body of public lands the survey is always made under the direction of the surveyor-general at the public expense. The whole point of this bill is this: when a title has been established and the only remaining question is about the boundary, we provide that instead of sending the case here to the Land Office to be heard upon ex parte evidence, to run through a long period of time and to be attended with great expense, the survey shall be returned into the local court and be determined there. In relation to the expense of the survey, the law now provides that it shall be paid by the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not attach any importance to what the law may be at the present time. The question is what should be the law in such cases? The surveying of this tract of land, embracing forty or fifty thousand acres, and the fixing of boundaries is a matter of private rather than public concern; and it seems to me that the parties for whose benefit the survey is made should pay the cost. This appears to me a matter of common justice.

Mr. POTTER. I wish to put a single question to the gentleman from Vermont. He spoke of the survey being returned into court. Does this bill provide that the survey shall be filed with the clerk of the court, or is it to be filed at all?

Mr. POLAND. When the survey is made it is to be turned into court.

Mr. POTTER. What court?

Mr. POLAND. Into the district court of the district.

Mr. POTTER. To be kept among the clerk's papers?

Mr. POLAND. No; when the survey is established it is to be certified to the Land Office to issue the patent.

Mr. POTTER. Is that provided for in the bill?

Mr. POLAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. POTTER. Frequently years elapse between the making of the survey and the establishing of it; is there any provision for keeping the survey papers in the meanwhile?

Mr. POLAND. No, sir; except the general provision that the court shall keep its files.

Mr. POTTER. Does the bill provide the surveyor shall keep the papers?

Mr. HOUGHTON. Permit me to answer that point.

Mr. POLAND. Certainly.

Mr. POTTER. That is all I wish.

Mr. HOUGHTON. The survey is made under the direction, in the first instance, as provided by the bill, of the surveyor-general of the United States of the State or Territory within which the land is located. He certifies a copy of the plat of the survey to the district court of the United States upon objection being made to the survey by any party in interest.

Mr. POTTER. What becomes of the original?

Mr. HOUGHTON. The original is retained in the office of the surveyor-general of the United States.

Mr. POTTER. That is provided in the bill?

Mr. HOUGHTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. POTTER. That is as I think it ought to be. This meets, I understand, with the views of the Committee on Private Land Claims as far as they understand it.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I have heard no objection to it.

Mr. POLAND. The bill was passed in the last Congress.

Mr. POTTER. There was a bill which came from the Committee on Private Land Claims, and as I understand my friend from Vermont it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and this is meant to cover the same.

Mr. POLAND. That was another bill and not this bill.

Mr. POTTER. But this is intended to cover this very matter of surveys?

Mr. POLAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOUGHTON. This is a more comprehensive bill and covers the whole ground.

Mr. POLAND. Let me say a word to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] As the bill was drawn it provided all the expenses of the court, aside from the survey which everybody understands is a Government expense, might be charged upon the Government, and therefore we put an amendment in the bill providing all the expenses of establishing this survey, except merely making the survey itself, shall be paid by the parties, and the court shall apportion that expense among the parties as shall be just and equitable.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Vermont will see, while the general features of this bill are desirable, that after the return of the survey and notice is given a controversy has sprung up between adverse parties who are claimants, then all the costs of all this will be thrown upon the Government.

Mr. POLAND. The committee did not deem it wise to undertake to change what has always, as we understand, been the universal practice and policy, and that is when any person is entitled to any portion of the public lands taken out of the general public land, it was always set off by the surveyor-general, and done at the expense of the Government. If there is litigation springing up about it, at further expense, we provide by an amendment put into the bill it shall be apportioned among the parties making the dispute as the court shall deem to be just and right.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that some time ago a bill was reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary after it had been passed upon favorably by the Committee of the Whole. When the bill was brought into the House it was referred to the Judiciary Committee. I wish to know from the gentleman from Vermont whether the bill now reported from the committee does the same thing that bill did? If it does, and covers the same ground or more extensive ground to the same end, I have no objection.

Mr. POLAND. The committee thought this was a more comprehensive bill than that.

Mr. PACKARD. That was considered by the Private Land Claims Committee and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. If this bill answers the same end, the Committee on Private Land Claims, having considered it, of course do not object.

Mr. PAGE. Is there any appropriation now provided for the survey of private land claims, or will the surveys provided for in this bill be paid for out of the general appropriation made for the survey of the public lands?

Mr. POLAND. I suppose so; the bill makes no provision about that.

Mr. PAGE. I understand that, and the result will be that it will take all the appropriations made for surveys of the public lands to pay for these surveys.

Mr. POLAND. Where surveys are made in such cases they are paid for by the Government.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

Mr. POLAND also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3510) to amend the act entitled "An act to further the administration of justice," passed June 1, 1872; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that the thirteenth section of said act shall be amended so as to read as follows:

That when in any suit in equity, commenced in any court of the United States, to enforce any legal or equitable lien or claim against real property, or to quiet title to, or determine any adverse claim, interest, or estate, or establish any equitable right, title, interest, or estate in land, situate within the district where such suit is brought, one or more of the defendants therein shall not be an inhabitant of or found within the said district, or shall not voluntarily appear thereto, it shall be lawful for the court to make an order directing such absent defendant to appear, plead, answer, or demur to the complainant's bill at a certain day therein to be designated, which order shall be served on such absent defendant, if practicable, wherever found; or where such personal service is not practicable, such order shall be published in such manner as the court shall direct; and in case such absent defendant shall not appear, plead, answer, or demur, within the time so limited, or within some further time, to be allowed by the court in its discretion, and upon proof of the service or publication of said order, and of the performance of the directions contained in the same, it shall be lawful for the court to entertain jurisdiction, and proceed to the hearing and adjudication of such suit in the same manner as if such absent defendant had been served with process within the said district; but such adjudication shall, as regards such absent defendant without appearance, affect his property within such district only.

The second section provides that whenever a party in whose favor a final judgment or decree shall have been or shall be rendered by any circuit court shall have died, or shall die, before the time allowed for taking an appeal, or bringing a writ of error thereon, such appeal or writ of error may be taken without reviving the cause in the circuit court, and notice shall be given, and the same proceedings had in such case in the Supreme Court as are provided in cases of the death of a party after appeal taken or writ of error brought.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE TO UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. POLAND also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3511) regulating the removal of causes from State courts to the circuit courts of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It provides that in any suit now pending, or that may hereafter be commenced, in any State court in which there is a controversy between citizens of different States, or between an alien and a citizen of one of the States of the United States, and the matter in dispute exceeds the sum or value of $500 exclusive of cost, any such alien defendant, or any one of the defendants who is a citizen of a State other than that in which the suit is brought, and who is a party to and interested in such controversy, may remove the suit from such State court to the circuit court of the United States held in the State and district in which such suit is commenced by presenting to such State court his petition and affidavit, and giving security, as required by the act of March 2, 1867, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for the removal of causes in certain cases from the State courts,' approved July 27, 1866;" and the proceedings thereupon shall be as provided in said act and the act of which it is amendatory. All the provisions and requirements of said acts relating to the removal of cases from State courts shall apply to cases removed under this act. The right of removal herein provided for as to suits now pending may be exercised at any time before final trial and within six months after the passage of the act and not thereafter; and as to suits hereafter commenced, the application for removal may be made at the term or session of the State court at which the plea or answer is required to be filed, and not thereafter.

The second section provides that in all cases of application for removal of a case from a State court to the circuit court of the United States, the party making such application, in addition to the requirements of existing laws, shall execute bond with good and sufficient surety to be approved by the State court, conditioned that upon his failure to file a transcript of the record of the case in the circuit court of the United States on the first day of its next session, or, if the case shall be remanded by said circuit court to the State court because the same was improperly or wrongfully removed, he will pay to the opposing party any and all costs that may accrue by reason of such failure or wrongful removal; and such bond shall remain in the State court for the benefit of any party who is or may become entitled to the benefit thereof; and upon the failure of such party to file the transcript and enter the case on the first day of the next session of the circuit court, it shall be the duty of such court, on motion of the opposing party and upon the production of a duly-certified transcript of the petition for removal, to remand the case to the State court, and the same shall not thereafter be removed; and upon making an order remanding a case to a State court, the circuit court shall cause to be made a taxation of the costs sustained by the party on whose motion the order remanding the case is made, including a reasonable attorney's fee, and the same shall be paid by the party seeking the removal, and the bond aforesaid shall be a security therefor.

Mr. POLAND. This bill, or substantially the same bill, was brought before the House by the Committee on the Judiciary in the early part of the session and was recommitted. The first section of the bill changes the law in this: under the old judiciary act if a suit was brought against a defendant who resided in the State and another defendant who resided out of the State, the defendant who lived out of the State had no right to remove the cause from the State court into the circuit court. The substance of this section, the change that it would make in the existing law if passed, is this: that it authorizes the defendant who resides out of the State where the suit is brought to remove the case into the courts of the United States, although there may be another defendant who lives in the State.

When this bill first came before the Judiciary Committee I voted against it myself in the committee, and my impression was against it. But more reflection on the subject and conversation with gentlemen from other States and other portions of the country, that are somewhat differently affected from what we are in New England, has satisfied me that this is a wise provision. When the bill was before the House at the former time that I speak of, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. E. R. HOAR] opposed this section, and opposed it on the ground that it would be in violation of the Constitution. The Constitution provides that the judicial powers of the courts of the United States shall extend to controversies between the citizens of different States. The language used in the judiciary act which was passed soon afterward was very different from that in the Constitution, and it is very clear I think, if it were now a new question, that under the judiciary act of 1789 all the defendants must reside out of the State in order to have the right of removal.

In my judgment it is clear that the language of the Constitution is broad enough to authorize Congress to provide for the removal of cases where one of the parties to the controversy on one side is a citizen of another State. This question has been before the Supreme Court this last winter in a case under the act of 1867, which it was claimed gave the very power which the first section of this bill gives directly. The question was argued before the Supreme Court as to whether Congress had the constitutional power to do this. The court was not under the necessity of deciding that question, because they decided that under the act of 1867 Congress had not attempted to enlarge, and had not at all enlarged, the scope of the judiciary act of 1789 in that respect.

Mr. MAYNARD. As the law now stands, is it not posssible for a suit to be brought in a State court against a non-resident owner of real estate jointly with a tenant he has in possession, and thereby prevent the real defendant, the non-resident owner, from getting his case into the Federal court and giving it Federal jurisdiction?

Mr. POLAND. I suppose that is so.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will not this bill operate to prevent that?

Mr. POLAND. That is one of the difficulties which this bill is intended to cure.

Mr. MAYNARD. If the gentleman will allow me, I will call his attention to another point in the bill. I see that it requires that a transcript of the record shall be taken to the Federal court on the first day of the succeeding term.

Mr. POLAND. I will come to that hereafter; that is in another section of the bill. I say this question was argued last winter before the Supreme Court, and my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. E. R. HOAR] was one of the counsel who argued it, and he satisfied himself that it was clear that Congress had no constitutional power to do this thing, and he undertook to satisfy the court that it was so, and I believe my friend thinks he did satisfy a majority of the judges that it was so—that Congress had no constitutional power to do this. But the information I have upon that subject is directly the other way from that of my friend from Massachusetts. I understand, so far as it is proper for anybody to understand anything about it, that the opinion of a majority of the judges was that it was within the constitutional power of Congress to pass just such a law as the first section of this bill.

Now, whether it is wise and judicious to do such a thing or not is a fair subject for difference of opinion. On the one side it is said that parties will be joined in a suit for the purpose of preventing a removal; and on the other side it is said that parties will be left out for the same purpose. The Committee on the Judiciary were not exactly unanimous in regard to the first section of this bill. Those who were opposed to it said that it would afford an opportunity for jurisdiction to be changed at the will of the parties by the form of bringing their suits, and by putting in fictitious parties. And precisely the same argument may be made on the other side.

The second section of this bill merely makes a further provision in relation to the security to be given, to which I understand there is no objection. The third section of this bill provides that in all actions hereafter brought the application for removal shall be made at the first term of the court thereafter. That was the old law of 1789, that when the defendant sought a removal of the cause he must do so at the time of entering his appearance. But in later statutes, especially those passed during and since the war, we have provided that applications for removal may be made at any time before trial; which I think, and the committee think, is very mischievous in its consequences. A party will let his case run on in a State court until he is satisfied that he will be beaten, and then dodge off into a Federal court. The third section of this bill provides that in all suits hereafter commenced the practice shall go back to the act of 1789, and parties seeking the removal of causes shall do so at the very outset.

Mr. SPEER. Does not this bill apply to pending cases? Parties may be ready for trial, having entailed on themselves large costs and expenses for witnesses, &c., and without a day or an hour of notice parties may change their causes from one court to another. I think this class of legislation is always objectionable, where it affects rights which have become quasi vested rights under the law which existed when the cause arose.

Mr. POLAND. The amount of change will be very small. In all pending causes, where the parties have not applied for a removal, they would have the right to do so now, except in the particular class of cases to which the first section of this bill applies, where there are several defendants, some of them living in the State where the suit is brought and some residents of other States. In that class of cases it would extend the right of removal to cases to which the law does not now extend it, cases that are now pending, undoubtedly a very small and limited class of cases.

Mr. POTTER. I hope the House will give some attention to this bill, for it proposes to reverse the nearly uniform practice and policy of the country in regard to the jurisdiction of the Federal courts from the time the Government was established until now. We have indeed authorized parties to remove into the Federal courts cases in which but one of the defendants was a non-resident of the State in which the plaintiff has brought the action. But it has with a few special exceptions been only in that class of cases which admitted of being divided, and which could be carried on in the Federal court with the non-resident defendant and continued in the State court with the resident defendant.

But here is a bill which provides that if one of several defendants be a non-resident of the same State with the plaintiff, then the whole cause may be removed at his instance into the Federal court. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] says that the language of the Constitution, "citizens of different States," clearly includes, as he thinks, a case in which but one of the defendants is a citizen of a different State from the plaintiff. I shall not now discuss that question. Certainly that has not been the general view of the lawyers of the country. But as that question has been discussed incidentally in the Supreme Court of the United States, and one of the counsel was the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. E. R. HOAR] who was formerly Attorney-General of the United States, I leave it to him, as especially familiar with this question, to speak to the House upon it. It seems to me the true construction of the Constitution is not clearly in the direction the gentleman from Vermont indicates.

But, even supposing that we have the constitutional power, I beg the House to look at the practical effect of such a law as this bill provides for. Take the ordinary case of a person in any State who files a bill in equity to foreclose a mortgage. What is necessary for him? To make as parties the debtor and also the person in possession of the land, and everybody having any lien upon the land. These must all be made parties to the proceeding. There may be in some cases—indeed there often are in these foreclosures—as many as twenty, thirty, or forty or more defendants. Now, if any defendant in such a case having some claim on the property, be it never so small, happens to reside outside of the State, the effect of this bill if it become a law will be that the suit may be taken by this non-resident defendant into a Federal court, and the thirty-nine other defendants may be compelled to go far away from home, perhaps to the other end of their State, into a jurisdiction with which they are not acquainted, and under a practice which is strange to their attorney, to determine their rights in this ordinary action of foreclosure.

Besides, in such a case how is the Federal court going to get jurisdiction of all these other thirty-nine defendants, who, in the case I have supposed, would be residents of the same State with the plaintiff? For my learned friend from Vermont, although he has asserted that in his view it is clear that there may be Federal jurisdiction when one defendant is a citizen of a different State from the plaintiff, has not asserted, and I do not know that he will assert, that the Federal court would thereby acquire jurisdiction over the thirty-nine other defendants who are citizens of the same State with the plaintiff.

Mr. POLAND. That is precisely the same puzzle, with the other end up.

Mr. POTTER. Yes; it is the same puzzle with the other end up, but with the most serious end up. I have known exactly such a case, in which a railway company was defendant, which had been removed into a Federal court under the existing law when it was alleged the plaintiff could not get a fair trial in the State court, and the Federal court flung the case out as to all the other defendants, because it said it had no jurisdiction over those other defendants residing in the same State. Apart from this, to carry into a Federal court such an action as I have alluded to, wherein the man who holds the mortgage, the man who owns the land, and all the codefendants except one are residents of the same State, would, it seems to me, amount in many cases to a denial of justice.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I understood that it was agreed in committee that this provision of the bill should be struck out, so that in this respect the law should remain as it now stands. I remember very well the argument that was made upon the question; and the result, as I supposed, was an agreement of the committee that this provision should be struck out.

Mr. POLAND. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] is entirely mistaken. It was, however, agreed in the committee that gentlemen who are opposed to this section should have leave in the House to move to strike out the section.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Perhaps that was the understanding. I certainly could not assent to such a provision; and I suggested in the committee that in addition to such a case as that suggested by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. POTTER,] this case might arise: A party might be procured by fraud to allow his name to be used for the very purpose of taking the case out of the jurisdiction of the State court and into a Federal court. This bill would enable a person nominally made a party to the suit to make his application for the removal of the case, although he knew there was no liability to which he could be subjected.

Mr. POTTER. Yes, sir; as the gentleman from Wisconsin suggests, a plaintiff wanting for any reason to take his case out of the ordinary jurisdiction of the State court might procure some person outside of the State, with some real or fancied claim on the property, to be made a defendant, and thus enable the defendant in his interest to oust the State court of its jurisdiction. Any number of like instances in which the jurisdiction of the Federal court would be extended over a controversy substantially between citizens of the same State may be reasonably supposed. It seems to me there could be few more dangerous propositions than to change the practice of the country for the last seventy-five years, and put the jurisdiction of all ordinary suits into the Federal courts whenever a non-resident is made a defendant. Nothing, it seems to me, could in this respect be more dangerous than just the first section of this bill.

It was before the House on a former occasion, and was referred back to the Judiciary Committee because of this particular clause. It is now here again. The House, so far as I am concerned, may as well consider it at one time as another. But it is in fact a revolution in what has been the judicial practice of the country; a revolution not only without cause, but it seems to me in the interest of injustice; for it will alike deprive parties entitled to the benefit of the courts of their own State of that benefit in many cases, but will so crowd and clog the Federal courts as in effect to amount to a denial of all justice.

Mr. ELDREDGE. In connection, then, with the understanding in committee, I move to strike out the first section of the bill.

Mr. POLAND. I yield to the gentleman for that motion.

Mr. ELDREDGE. My impression was (I presume, however, that the gentleman from Vermont is right and that my memory is at fault) that the committee agreed to strike out this section. It certainly ought to be struck out, for the reasons suggested by the gentleman from New York, and for the reason which I before suggested, which is, that a plaintiff having a cause of action coming within the jurisdiction of a State court may procure a non-resident to allow himself to be sued in conjunction with the party against whom the real cause of action exists; and thus the case may be taken into a Federal court by the fraudulent procurement of the plaintiff in the action.

Mr. E. R. HOAR rose.

Mr. POLAND. How long does the gentleman from Massachusetts want?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I should like to make a statement.

Mr. POLAND. For how long?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Until I get through—I cannot tell. I do not wish to make a bargain with the gentleman from Vermont. If he does not wish to allow me to address the House on a legal point——

Mr. POLAND. My friend is the last man in the world I would be discourteous to, if to anybody; but there are many gentlemen on the Judiciary Committee who wish to make reports.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I will not be longer than I can help; but this is an important matter, in my judgment, because upon the best consideration I can give to it I desire to say to the House, and I ask the attention of the lawyers of the House especially, that this first section of the bill is a violation of the Constitution which we are sworn to support. Entertaining that opinion I should not do my duty if I did not state that fact and the reasons which lead me to that conclusion.

I shall not follow the example of my friend from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] in stating what information I get of the private opinion of individual judges of the Supreme Court. I should not have deemed it proper in what I have to say to the House to say I understand it one way and he understands it the other. I did not authorize him to state to the House anything as to my understanding, and do not make any statement of that kind. I cannot say I consider his statement of his understanding as the proper thing to lay before the House.

Mr. POTTER. Understand what? The effect of a decision of the Supreme Court which is not yet announced?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Their opinions about a question which is not before them for decision.

Mr. Speaker, this is the question exactly, and I ask the attention of the House to it for a moment. By the Federal Constitution the judicial power of the United States extends to controversies between citizens of different States. That is the only clause upon which the decision of this question depends. Now, under the judiciary act of 1789 it was provided that the circuit courts should have jurisdiction over suits between citizens of different States, differing from the language of the Constitution only in the use of the word "suits" instead of the word "controversies." Under that act for seventy-five years the Supreme Court have construed in one way what is meant by the phrase "between citizens of different States." They have uniformly held it was between parties all of which on the one side were citizens of a different State from all on the other; and there has never been a statute of the United States that has varied from that construction or has extended beyond it up to this bill now introduced. I say that advisedly, and I wish to state what the apparent but not real exceptions are. It has been provided, whenever a nominal defendant not essential as a party to the controversy has been made a party, notwithstanding he was a citizen of the same State with the plaintiff, the real suit and real controversy being wholly between citizens of different States, jurisdiction might be had in the circuit court. In the statute of 1866 Congress went one step further, and, in my judgment, as far as they could go, and provided where the subject of the suit is divisible, so that an entirely independent judgment may be given between the citizens of different States who are parties, that as between them it might be removed and the remainder of the suit remain for judgment in the State court. Then came the statute of 1867, in which it was thought by some persons, I suppose, that an attempt was made to go further. It provided—there using the words of the Constitution, no longer "suits" but "controversies"—that in any suit where there was a controversy between the citizens of different States any party to the controversy might remove it. Under that statute the supreme courts of five States held they must give the same construction to it as to the language of the judiciary act, and that all on one side must be citizens of a different State from those on the other. Two circuit courts of the United States—Judge Dillon, an eminent judge, formerly chief justice of Iowa, and Judge Blatchford, of New York—held the same. And the one exception to that uniform current of decision was a decision made by Judge Shipley, of Massachusetts, the other way, which was the cause of that question being carried to the Supreme Court of the United States. The constitutional question was argued fully before the Supreme Court of the United States, and also the construction of the statute. The court did not decide the constitutional question, as it did not become necessary; that is, it did not decide it in terms, but I submit to the House it did decide it in fact. The court decided that the statute of 1867, where one of the defendants was a citizen of a different State from the plaintiff, if there were other defendants who were citizens of the same State, did not allow that one to remove a suit to the circuit court. And that, under language which is exactly the language of the Constitution, where there is a controversy between the citizens of different States, in order to give the Federal courts jurisdiction of the suit, they must all on one side be citizens of different States from those on the other. Now, whenever the courts say what is the meaning of the language in the Constitution, and what is the extent of the judicial power on this subject, by reason of citizenship, they have already in effect decided that when it is a controversy between citizens of different States it must be between citizens, all of whom on one side are from different States from the parties on the other side.

Mr. Speaker, I am as much opposed to this bill on the ground of policy as I am of constitutional power. I can see that in some of the States which participated in the late rebellion, and where some classes of citizens claim that they do not have justice done them in the State courts, there may be a strong pressure to provide by special legislation for their relief. I hope we are going to have that system of things soon come to an end. But I cannot be in favor of extending all over this country a system which takes from State tribunals and from State domination what properly belongs to it, for the purpose of remedying what I hope is to be a temporary evil. We are in danger always of sacrificing great principles of government, of violating the lines which are drawn between State and national authority by reason of some temporary and particular exigency. I am in favor of protecting up to the line of the power of the General Government every citizen of this country against injustice or against inequality before the law. But I do not believe that we are to change our judicial system in such an important particular with a view to that. If remedies are necessary for such a state of things, I hope we shall afford them by more speedy and direct means. I hope very much more than that: that the condition of the country may soon be such as to need no remedy whatever.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts before moving the previous question. I suppose the only controversy in reference to this bill is as to the first section.

The Judiciary Committee were unanimous in reference to the other portions of the bill, and therefore I take up no time as to that. My friend from Massachusetts is very much in the condition that I have found myself a great many times. I scarcely ever argued a case in court but what I convinced myself. I failed a great many times in convincing the court I was right; but I scarcely ever failed in convincing myself that I was on the right side, and my friend seems to have been equally fortunate in his adventure in the Supreme Court.

Now, the Constitution says that the judicial power of the courts of the United States shall extend to controversies between citizens of different States; but is it clear, as my friend says, that where there is a controversy between a citizen of a State and upon the opposite side of that controversy there are two parties, one living in the State and one out of the State, there is a controversy between citizens of different States. My friend has referred to the old judiciary act. I know that lawyers who have lived long enough to have their heads get white are very apt to refer to the old judiciary act of 1789 as a part of the Constitution, as about as sacred as the Constitution.

Mr. POTTER. That is a mistake that my young friend from Vermont has not fallen into.

Mr. POLAND. No; I do not refer to myself.

Now, the language of the Constitution is that the judicial power shall extend to controversies between citizens of different States. See how unlike that is to the language of the statute of 1789, "that if a suit be commenced in any State court against an alien, or by a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought against a citizen of another State, and the matter in dispute is above $500, the defendant may remove it." Now, my friend says that nobody ever thought of trying to amend the law so that one of the several defendants could remove the case until now, or at least until the act of 1866 was passed. Nobody ever thought of trying to amend the law so that a plaintiff could remove a case. There never was any provision of law from 1789 down to the time of the passage of the act of 1866 that authorized the plaintiff in a case to remove a cause, and still nobody ever doubted that the law of 1866, which allows the plaintiff as well as the defendent to remove a case, was entirely constitutional. And although this act of 1866, in describing the suit or action or whatever it was, between citizens of different States, used the word "controversy" instead of the word "suit;" still it was perfectly apparent, as I have always thought, and as the Supreme Court decided, that it was not intended to make any change whatever in the law, except to authorize the plaintiff as well as the defendant to apply for a removal.

Now, I am not going to take any time upon the argument of whether it is wise or unwise to make this provision. It is said that the jurisdiction of a court one way or the other can be turned by the way in which parties bring the suit. Is not that always in the control of the plaintiff? The plaintiff, when he brings the suit, selects the parties on both sides. And is there not very great danger that where the real substantial matter of controversy is with the citizen of another State there may be some pretense, some legal ground, as in the case put to me in the question of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] where the owner of real estate living outside of the State has a tenant upon the land, the tenant is made a party to the suit with the owner, and by including the tenant who has no interest in the controversy, who is merely a nominal party, the real party who lives outside of the State is prevented from having this removed? I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The first question was upon the motion of Mr. ELDREDGE to strike out the first section of the bill.

Mr. POLAND. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY.]

Mr. McCRARY. In the short time allowed me I will not undertake to discuss the constitutional question in this case, simply observing, however, that to say the least of it, it is a very grave question. But I desire to say a word or two about the policy or expediency of the provision proposed by the first section of this bill. It may do well enough in some parts of this Union to increase the facilities for taking causes out of the State courts and into the Federal courts. But I am sure I can speak for a large section of the country when I say that the people will complain bitterly if Congress shall increase these facilities to the extent proposed or to any extent.

Take my own State as an illustration. We have there but one circuit court which meets at the capital of the State. There is now upon the docket of that court about two thousand causes. Now, take these small controversies from every district in the State, where one of the parties on the one side or the other may be a non-resident, and carry them into the Federal court, and in a large class of cases it would be a practical denial of justice. I undertake to say here that even if Congress has the power to do this thing, it ought never to be done until there is some change in the judicial system of the United States which will secure the settlement of controversies promptly and at a reasonable expense and without unreasonable inconvenience in the Federal courts.

I have had a bill referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for the purpose of relieving the people of my own State from the great burden of which at this time they are complaining because of the vast accumulation of business in the Federal courts. There is no better judge in the country than the judge of that circuit; he labors almost incessantly; and yet business is constantly accumulating in that court to such an extent that litigants who enter it must be delayed year after year, and compelled to litigate at a place far from their homes.

I hope that upon this ground, saying nothing at all about the constitutional question, the House will not adopt the provisions contained in the first section of this bill. I have no question but that the business in the circuit court of the United States for the State of Iowa, and I presume it is so in all the Western States, will, if this section becomes law, accumulate to such an extent that every litigant who goes into that court will be delayed from three to five years before he can get a trial in any cause whatever. It will double and treble the number of causes to be carried into that court. For that reason alone, without discussing any other, I hope the first section of this bill will be stricken out.

Mr. POLAND. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.]

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to say a few words upon this bill. I look upon it as a bill of great consequence to many portions of the country and being no harm anywhere. I cannot doubt that where two people in different States have a controversy with each other, that must be a controversy between citizens of different States, although joined in the controversy are two people of the same State. Therefore I have no difficulty about the constitutional question. But had I such a difficulty, I can only say that the courts have not yet decided it, although the case brought before them by my colleague [Mr. E. R. HOAR] gave them an opportunity to decide it if they had chosen to do so on that ground; but they did not. If we are wrong and have no constitutional power to do this, then we do no harm to anybody.

Now, what is the exact thing that is desired to be done? It is where, as in many States, in order to get control of the person of the defendant within the jurisdiction of the State court, parties come forward with their suits and join in them nominal defendants. The defendant never can join plaintiffs; the plaintiff always has charge of the litigation, and can bring into it whom he pleases. And when he catches a non-resident in his State, in order to keep the case in the State court, he may please to join him with a nominal party resident of the State, and keep him there until the case comes before a jury and then strike him out, when it is too late for the defendant. In that way great wrong is done. From Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, the cry comes up to us for relief. Under the guise of State laws, parties in this way get around our removal acts. It is in answer to that cry that the Committee on the Judiciary after full consultation came to the conclusion that this bill ought to pass.

I have been asked will not this allow a plaintiff who has a claim to bring his debtor into the Federal courts in foreign states? By no means. It is a question of joining on the other side. They must have somebody who will conspire to do that, and that is most difficult. It is very easy to join a nominal party, without a conspiracy on either side. I hope that this first section will remain a portion of the bill.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New York. I am permitted by my friend from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] to occupy the attention of the House for a single moment, to present (and I trust the presentation will be considered before the House acts on this bill) the practical operation of the measure in the city in which I reside. We have in that city twenty thousand gentlemen doing business as members of firms there, but residing in the State of New Jersey or the State of Connecticut, and citizens of those States respectively. Now, I submit to the distinguished gentleman from Vermont that under this bill, if a simple collection suit should be instituted against one of those firms, that suit, upon the application of a single member of the firm a citizen of New Jersey or Connecticut, may be transferred to a Federal court. Thus a single circuit judge may be compelled to take jurisdiction of a vast multitude of actions amounting to thousands upon thousands, although in my State fifteen judges with co-ordinate or practically co-ordinate jurisdiction upon questions of collection and ordinary questions affecting property are unable to dispose of all the cases coming before them. Why, sir, suppose a Vermont man had sold wool or anything else to a firm in my city, and that a member of this firm, a citizen of another State, desired to prevent or defer the collection of the claim. In such a case I venture to affirm the claim could not be collected within the next ten years under the operation of the first section of this bill.

Apart from the great constitutional question, in which I have an abiding faith in the correctness of the opinion of the learned gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. E. R. HOAR,] I coincide entirely with the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY,] as to the practical operation of this first section, which I submit should never be enacted into law. True enough, legislation is for the whole country and is not to be framed with special reference to the city in which it is my lot to reside. But I understand that the general course and tendency of civilization in this country is toward cities, and as a rule they are located and planted in contiguity to other States. There are aliens residing in the city of Boston; there are aliens, I have no doubt, residing in the city represented by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts; all these and others are to be affected in suits for mere collections.

If the bill provided that a single defendant, a citizen of another State, might remove the case, then it would supply a deficiency which has long existed in our statutory enactments with reference to the transfer of suits.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The law now authorizes a single defendant who resides in another State to remove his case from the State court to the United States court.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New York. The gentleman will permit me to say that he is mistaken. It is the misfortune that there is no such law. I invite any man on this floor to show me wherein the existing law provides that a defendant a citizen of the State of New Jersey, who is sued in the State of Illinois by a citizen of New York, can have the case transferred.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I agree with the gentleman as to the propriety of striking out the first section of the bill; and I hope that will be done.

Mr. POTTER. I wish to put to my colleague [Mr. SCUDDER] as a practicing lawyer one question. Does he not know that in the city of New York the passage of this bill would amount to a denial of justice in at least one-half the cases arising there?

Mr. SCUDDER, of New York. More.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment to strike out the first section, it was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; there being ayes 96, noes not counted.

The bill, being engrossed, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAXATION OF DEPOSITS IN SAVINGS-BANKS, ETC.

Mr. POLAND. I have been instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back with certain amendments the bill (H. R. No. 2442) explanatory of the act of June 30, 1864. In this case as in others, the amendments have been incorporated with the bill, which is now presented as an original bill.

The bill was read a first and second time. It provides that all deposits made in institutions now existing which do business only as savings-banks, and are recognized as such by the laws of their respective States or by Congress, are hereby declared to be exempt from taxation on deposits in savings-banks, or institutions having no capital, although having a capital stock or bond for the additional security of their depositors, and paying dividends thereon; and no tax shall be assessed upon the deposits made in such institutions, or collected of them on said deposits, otherwise than as herein provided; provided that all the profits of such savings-banks, less the aforementioned dividends, are divided among their depositors, and that the capital stock is invested only in the same class of securities as is used for investing the deposits, and that interest at the rate of not less than 4½ per cent., to be made good if necessary from the capital stock, be paid to their depositors in all cases.

Mr. MAYNARD. That is rather a remarkable bill to come from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURCHARD. I make the point of order that the bill changes the provision of the internal-revenue laws with regard to the taxation of deposits in banks.

Mr. POLAND. Mr. Speaker, there may be some question perhaps as to the liability of the bill to the point of order. But in explanation of the bill, I wish to say that a certain class of savings-banks have a small capital which they call a guarantee capital; they do no business as banks, but loan this small capital as they do their deposits. It has recently been held by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that under the act of 1864 these banks, having a capital, must pay taxes upon all these deposits, while in general the deposits of savings-banks are not taxed at all except above a certain amount.

In reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] who thinks this a queer bill to come from the Judiciary Committee, I will state that it was sent to our committee, as I understand, upon the request of the Committee on Ways and Means, who first had the bill before them.

Mr. BURCHARD. The gentleman will allow me to say that a bill identical with this is now before the Committee on Ways and Means. It has been considered, and in a modified form was I think authorized to be reported, though I am not certain about that. At any rate the proposition should come from the Committee on Ways and Means if from any committee.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] desire the reference of the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means or to the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BURCHARD. I make the point of order that the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. POLAND. If the gentleman from Illinois insists on his objection, I withdraw the bill, giving notice that I shall move next Monday to pass it under a suspension of the rules.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, notifying the House that that body had passed bills of the House of the following titles without amendment:

ARKANSAS.

Mr. POLAND. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report the following resolution for adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five members be appointed by the Speaker, who shall inquire into the disturbed condition of governmental affairs in the State of Arkansas, all facts relating thereto and the causes thereof, and whether said State has now a government republican in form, the officers of which are duly elected and as now organized ought to be recognized by the Government of the United States; and for this purpose said committee may, if necessary, send for persons and papers, and, if necessary, may proceed to said State, and have leave to report at any time by bill or otherwise.

Mr. POLAND. I demand the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 61.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. POLAND. No, sir.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I ask the gentleman from Vermont to allow me to insert "South Carolina."

Mr. POLAND. I decline to yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 134, nays 84, not voting 71; as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. BROWN said: I am paired upon this question with Mr. HALE, of New York; otherwise I would have voted "no."

The result of the vote having been announced, as above stated,

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF IMMIGRANTS, ETC.

Mr. CONGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3512) for the better protection of immigrants, and to prevent the importation of criminals into the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CENTRAL BRANCH UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3513) to enable the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company to submit its claims against the United States under existing laws to the decision of the Supreme Court; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, under and by virtue of the acts of Congress commonly called the Union Pacific Railroad acts, approved respectively July 1, 1862, July 2, 1864, and July 3, 1866, claim the right to enter on the public lands of the United States and extend their railroad from its present terminus to a junction with the Main Trunk Union Pacific Railroad at or near the one hundredth meridian of longitude, and for that purpose to take earth, stone, and timber from the public lands adjacent thereto; and that they will be entitled to grants of lands and issues of bonds from time to time as the road is built, and as is provided in said acts in regard to other roads built under the same; and whereas doubts have arisen as to the true construction of said acts and the rights and claims of the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company under the same: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all the said claims made by said Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company under said acts against the Government of the United States be referred to the Court of Claims, to be by them heard, adjudicated, and determined. For this purpose original jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court, with authority to hear and determine the questions of law and fact arising out of said claims of said Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, to state its findings of law and fact, and to give the true construction of the said acts, and determine the obligations of the Government of the United States in relation thereto, and also to enter judgment upon the same in the manner prescribed by the law and the rules and practice of said court, which findings and judgment shall be binding upon the said company and also upon the Government of the United States and the executive officers of the same. In case the decision of the Court of Claims shall be in favor of the said railroad company, the Attorney-General shall appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States for such findings and judgment, in the same manner as appeals are taken in other cases from said Court of Claims to said Supreme Court, or under such regulations as the said Supreme Court may direct; and a like appeal may be taken by said company in case the judgment or decree of the Court of Claims are adverse to said company. Said Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company may prepare a bill setting forth their rights and privileges and claims under said acts, and present the same to said Court of Claims for adjudication as aforesaid; a copy of which bill shall be delivered to the Attorney-General of the United States who is directed to appear and represent the rights of the United States in the premises. Either party be allowed to take evidence according to the rules and practice of said Court of Claims, and each of the said courts is requested to give the precedence to said cause upon their respective calendars.

SEC. 2. That in case the final judgment of said courts shall decide the right of said railroad company to extend their road as aforesaid, then the time for finishing said road mentioned in the said acts shall be extended for a period equal to the time consumed in the adjudication of said claims, computing the same from the date of final decision already rendered by the Department of Justice.

Mr. SPEER. I raise the point of order on that bill that it involves $8,000,000, and must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not see how it does.

Mr. SPEER. The claims of this railroad company amount to $8,000,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. And there is to be no further action by Congress after this bill passes in relation to the payment of these claims.

Mr. SPEER. If they obtain a judgment they will have a right to take from the Government about $8,000,000 in bonds and land.

Mr. FRYE. This bill authorizes the settlement of their legal rights.

Mr. RANDALL. It involves the giving away of money.

The SPEAKER. Is this the same bill which was reported from the committee on the call for reports of a private nature?

Mr. SPEER. It is the same bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill was reported from the Judiciary Committee on private-bill day, and the point of order was then made that it was not a private bill and the Chair sustained it, because it had reference to the public lands of the United States, and bills of that character are always held to be public bills. The Chair understands that the bill refers for adjudication to the Supreme Court of the United States a question of rights under the laws as they now exist.

Mr. SPEER. To the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. With appeal to the Supreme Court.

Mr. SPEER. It refers the claim of this railroad company to the court for adjudication, and authorizes the court to enter judgment, and, of course, there will have to be an appropriation to pay that judgment.

Mr. RANDALL. No; they can get the lands without any further legislation.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill involves, of course, the payment of the judgment.

Mr. SPEER. To the amount of about $8,000,000.

Mr. POLAND. If the court decides that the law is that we are to pay, why, of course, we are bound to pay. The court does not make the law or change it.

Mr. SPEER. But, at present, the company have no right to raise the question against the Government. This bill gives them a right to make a demand for $8,000,000.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Does not the bill go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. SPEER. That is what I am contending.

Mr. RANDALL. It gives the public lands away without further action by Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the bill to be read again carefully, and asks the attention of the House thereto.

The Clerk again read the bill.

The SPEAKER. There are two points in this bill that involve different questions of order. The first is that it refers the claim of a railroad company to the Court of Claims for adjudication. The Chair does not perceive that there is any difference between the point involved in this case and that involved in such bills as that for the relief of the contractors for iron-clads who were given the right to go to the Court of Claims, and on that point he thinks the bill must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

But there is another point still more palpable which the Chair did not notice when the bill was first read, and that is that the bill extends the time for the completion of the road under its land grant, and a bill extending the time of a land grant has uniformly been held to be subject to all the same rules as the original land-grant bill. If there were any doubt on the first point the second would be entirely conclusive, and the Chair rules that the bill must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

CONDEMNATION OF LAND FOR PUBLIC USE.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3514) to provide for the taking of land by the United States for public use, and providing for just compensation to the owners thereof; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read. The first section provides that if any officer of the United States is authorized to build any public building, lighthouse, fort, or breakwater, or to occupy or cause to be occupied any land belonging to any person, corporation, or State for the use of the United States for any purpose, he shall make known to the attorney of the United States for the district in which the land or the principal part of it is situated, giving a description of the same by metes and bounds as near as may be, accompanied by an accurate plan thereof, that such designated parcel of land is needed for public use of the United States; whereupon said attorney shall file an information in behalf of the United States in the circuit or territorial district court of the United States for said district, setting forth as specifically as may be, and by metes and bounds where practicable, the lands sought to be taken for public use, together with the names of the owners of the same, and of all persons interested therein so far as known, describing the estate or interest so far as the same to him may be known, and the public uses for which said lands are sought to be taken, and asking that the value of the said lands, and the estate or estates or interests of every person therein, and the damages by the taking thereof to each may be determined; that upon the filing of such information the court shall order due notice to be given to all persons named as interested by serving a copy of said petition, with day and place of hearing, upon each of them personally, by a marshal of the United States, at least twenty days before the day of hearing of said information in said circuit or district court, if their residence is known; or if the residence of any person interested is unknown, then also by giving public notice for a like time in one or more of the principal newspapers in said district; that upon the return day of said notice, any party may appear and in a summary manner set forth his interest in writing in said lands, and ask for a jury to determine the value of his interest in said lands, and the damage to him occasioned by the taking thereof, which time of taking shall be the time of filing said information; whereupon said court shall frame an issue to the jury upon any question of conflicting title or interest in said land or the value thereof, or damage done by taking said land, or the advantage or betterment to be derived by any other lands of the same owner or party in interest lying in the neighborhood, which may be derived from the use by the United States, upon the request of the district attorney of the United States, or any party in interest; which issue may be heard and determined in due course of law, as in other cases of trial by jury; and that if neither party ask for a jury, the value of the land and the state of their interest, and all questions at issue between the parties, may be determined by the court.

The second section provides that in determining the damage sustained by any person in the taking of the land, the market value thereof at the date of the commencement of proceedings, disregarding any fictitious value given to it by the fact that it is required for public use, shall be the basis of such compensation; but regard shall be had to all damages done to such persons, whether by taking his property or injuring any part of it in any manner; and there shall be allowed, by way of set-off, the benefit, if any, to any other property of such by reason of the taking and use of said land; and in assessing the damages, the jury shall find a gross sum as a value for the land and the damage; and, if there is more than one party, shall divide that sum among the parties in interest according to their several estates and interests therein.

The third section provides that all the land required by the United States to be used for one purpose may be put in the same information, whether owned in several parcels, in common, or however otherwise; and that one and the same jury may determine the interests of all parties therein, and the several damages due to each therefor, by the taking thereof as hereinbefore provided.

The fourth section provides that from and after the filing of the information, the right to use and occupy the land described therein shall vest in the United States so long as it shall be devoted to public use, and for all purposes while so occupied the United States shall be held and deemed to be the owner thereof.

The fifth section provides that judgment shall be rendered upon the verdict in favor of each party interested, according to the amount assessed by the jury to be due him for the taking and damages to the land, subject to the set-off as before provided; which judgment shall be a debt due to him in severalty from the United States, and shall bear interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the date of the verdict; provided that a new trial may be granted to either party for any cause sufficient at common law.

The sixth section provides that in case any owner or party interested in the land taken is a minor, married woman, or insane person, or person otherwise incapacitated from appearing in court, the court may appoint some competent person as a guardian ad litem to appear and represent the person so incapacitated whose land is taken.

The seventh section provides that in case any question of law shall arise on such trial, whether the same be by the court or jury, the case may be carried therefrom to the Supreme Court of the United States by exceptions and writ of error, with like effect as in other cases.

The eighth section provides that the provisions of the act shall be applicable to all cases for the taking of land for the use of the United States, whether the same has heretofore been taken or used by the United States, or may hereafter be taken; and the proceedings therein provided shall take the place of, and be in lieu of, all other proceedings for the taking of land; provided that nothing contained in the bill shall hinder or prevent the purchase of any land by the United States for public use from the owner thereof at an agreed price.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman who reports this bill [Mr. FRYE] to a clause in the fifth section, if I remember it aright, where the interest on the amount found due is made to begin to run from the finding of the verdict. Yet the bill provides that the United States may take possession of the land from the commencement of the proceedings. The proceedings may run for months before the verdict is rendered, and the United States are virtually in possession of the land during all that time. I think it would be only just that the parties should be entitled to interest on the amount found due from the time the Government should take possession of the property. If the gentleman will permit me I will move to strike out the word "verdict" and insert the words "commencement of the proceedings."

Mr. FRYE. I do not know that there is any objection to that.

Mr. CESSNA. There is objection to that; the jury always allow interest.

Mr. CONGER. But this bill specially limits the payment of interest from the time of the verdict; it should be from the time of the occupation of the land.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. You cannot occupy until after the verdict.

Mr. CONGER. The bill says the United States may take possession of the land at the commencement of the proceedings.

Mr. HURLBUT. The question of occupation enters into the question of damages.

Mr. CONGER. It does not appear so in the bill.

Mr. FRYE. Yes; it does.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the fifth section be again read.

The fifth section was again read, as follows:

That judgment shall be rendered upon the verdict in favor of each party interested, according to the amount assessed by the jury to be due him for the taking and damages to the land, subject to the set-off, as before provided; which judgment shall be a debt due to him in severalty from the United States, and shall bear interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the date of the verdict: Provided, That a new trial may be granted to either party for any cause sufficient at common law.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman to permit me to insert the word "occupation" after the word "taking."

Mr. CESSNA. There is no objection to that.

Mr. FRYE. I will consent to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POTTER. If I understand the bill correctly, no provision is made for securing the consent of the State. Gentlemen assume that in any case where the United States requires land, it can be condemned against the citizen owning the land in the courts of the United States.

Mr. FRYE. No assent of the State is required.

Mr. POTTER. The gentleman assumes that none is necessary?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir.

Mr. POTTER. I will not say that is not correct, although it has been a serious question. The bill also provides, I believe, that on the question of damages the benefit to the remaining portion of the land shall not be considered by the court.

Mr. FRYE. That is so.

Mr. POTTER. The Constitution says that private property shall not be taken for public use without due compensation given. In many States it is held that due compensation means the value of the particular piece of property taken, without considering whether the rest of the property is thereby benefited or not. It might open too wide a door for estimating damages to leave the jury to say whether the property is benefited by taking off the particular piece. I think it is so held in most of the States in regard to condemnation of land for public use.

Mr. FRYE. In my State it has been held that juries may take that matter into consideration.

Mr. POTTER. And, on the contrary, the State of Indiana has repealed the railroad law on that very point.

Mr. FRYE. I have no objection to striking that out.

Mr. POTTER. I will examine the bill, and see what amendment is necessary.

Mr. GARFIELD. While the examination is being made, I desire to say that in the Committee on Appropriations we have had frequent occasion to come in contact with the difficulty that constantly presents itself in obtaining land for light-houses, post-offices, and other building purposes. Most of the action of the courts and of the Government hitherto in obtaining lands has been complicated by having no machinery of our own by which we can condemn lands for the use of the United States. If we wanted to build a little light-house in Michigan, for instance, it was necessary to get through the Legislature of Michigan permission to go before the courts of Michigan to condemn the land. I know that Judge Cooley has held, and I think he is right in that, that it is a violation of the Constitution to put the United States as a stranger in a State court to secure the right to a piece of land for a building for the use of the Government. I think where the sovereign has power to condemn private property for public use it must be for the public use of the sovereign, and that the United States does not need to ask the authority of a State to condemn the property of a citizen, in which property the State as a State has no interest; that the United States ought to have its own machinery for condemnation.

We had a case a few weeks ago in Cincinnati where there seems to have been a sort of a mixed effort, where a case was actually tried in the district court of the United States to condemn a piece of property for the post-office building. There was no law of the United States to regulate the proceedings, and they had to make a law pro hæc vice. They said that for that proceeding the law of Ohio should be employed by the court in making the condemnation. That at once raises the question of constitutionality. It was finally determined by the court that for that purpose the laws of Ohio became the laws of the United States. But when that case was ended there were no more cases to which it would apply. If this bill gives us that general provision of law which we need, I shall be glad of it.

Mr. CESSNA. That is just what it does.

Mr. FRYE. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has explained the bill and the necessity for it better than I can do. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] will allow me to suggest that these purchases of ground for public purposes are all in pursuance of appropriations previously made. The gentleman seems to overlook the fact that the money is appropriated at the time the Government authorizes the purchase of the land. Hence interest could not accrue except in case of misconduct on the part of public officers. Our theory is that the debts of the Government are paid at the time they become due; therefore I submit to the gentleman that the interest feature of this bill ought to be struck out.

Mr. POTTER. O, no; there may be an appeal.

Mr. FRYE. I demand the previous question.

Mr. POTTER. I understood the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] to assent to my amendments.

Mr. FRYE. I do not like to assent to them; and I do not want to spend time in discussing them.

Mr. POTTER. It is not my fault that the gentleman from Maine must do one or the other.

Mr. FRYE. Well, I will not accept them.

Mr. POTTER. Then I move to amend——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] yield?

Mr. FRYE. No, sir.

Mr. POTTER. Without these amendments the bill is clearly and flagrantly unconstitutional according to the judicial decisions in our State, and, so far as I know, most of the States of the Union.

The question being on seconding the demand for the previous question, tellers were ordered; and Mr. FRYE and Mr. POTTER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 66.

So the previous question was not seconded.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask the indulgence of the House to say that to-morrow morning immediately after the reading of the Journal I shall, if I can obtain the floor, move to lay aside all previous orders that the House may consider the currency bill. I shall renew substantially the motion that I made on last Monday, and test the sense of the House without further discussion upon the question. The amendments suggested by the Committee on Banking and Currency will be found in the reprint which was ordered by the House.

Mr. POLAND. And I give notice that I shall insist upon taking up the unfinished business that may go over.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the position of business, so that members may proceed intelligently. It will be within the power of the majority of the House to postpone other orders for the purpose of taking a vote upon the currency bill.

Mr. POLAND. As I understand, the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary in relation to judicial proceedings in Utah stands as the special order.

The SPEAKER. Precisely; but there is nothing to prevent the House from postponing it for two hours or for half a day or for six months.

Mr. RANDALL. And a postponement would let in the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD.]

The SPEAKER. Yes; it would merely make the Utah bill subordinate to the bill of the gentleman from Tennessee if a majority of the House should so decide.

Mr. COBURN. I understood that to-morrow was fixed absolutely for the bill for the reduction of the Army.

The SPEAKER. It is; but the rules clearly provide that a majority may postpone any special order; which does not, however, thereby lose its priority. The bill of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] may be postponed for an hour or two in order that the bill of the gentleman from Tennessee may be voted upon. The House will observe that there is no necessary conflict in the disposition of business. The majority can decide which measure shall be first heard.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to repeat what some gentlemen around me seem not to have understood, that it is the purpose of the Committee on Banking and Currency to invoke the action of the House by calling the previous question without further discussion of the subject.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And without an opportunity to offer amendments?

Mr. MAYNARD. Without other amendments than those the committee propose.

REDUCTION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. COBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill for the reduction of the Army which I desire to bring up to-morrow may be reprinted.

There being no objection, the order was made.

CONDEMNATION OF LAND FOR PUBLIC USE.

The House resumed the consideration of the pending bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. POTTER. I offer the amendments which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 2 strike out the words "and there shall be allowed by way of set-off the benefit, if any, to any other property of such, by reason of the taking and use of said land."

In section 5 strike out the words "subject to the set-off, as before provided."

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to move an amendment to the provision in regard to the payment of interest.

The SPEAKER. There are two amendments pending. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr, HOLMAN] can be received only by unanimous consent

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. POTTER called for the previous question on the amendments.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I call for the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments of Mr. POTTER were agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the whole bill as amended, and I shall afterward call for the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The committee consent that a vote shall be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, if that will be satisfactory.

Mr. HOLMAN, by unanimous consent, moved to amend so that the clause in relation to payment of interest should read as follows:

And shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the verdict in case of appeal therefrom.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 30, noes 60; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. FRYE.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 75, noes 93.

So Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STENOGRAPHERS FOR UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. FRYE also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3515) to provide for stenographers for the courts of the United States; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. FRYE. As this bill will create discussion and make an appropriation, I ask that it be ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

ASSIGNMENT OF WAGES OF OFFICERS OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. FRYE also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3516) to make valid assignments of wages or salaries of officers, agents, or employés of the Government; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that when an officer of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, officer or clerk or other employé of the civil service of the United States, assigns his pay or any portion thereof it shall be part of the duty of the paymaster, disbursing officer, or pay clerk, by whom he is paid to pay the assignee without extra compensation, when the pay so assigned shall be due, on presentation of the pay receipt or voucher duly assigned, and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this are thereby repealed.

Mr. FRYE. This is asked for by nearly all the employés of the Government, and I see no possible objection to it.

Mr. KASSON. Is it not imposing a troublesome duty that the pay officer shall pay every case of assignment of a small or large portion of any indebtedness of an officer? It seems to me it goes beyond anything the Government has ever done before. It ought to be recommended by the Military Committee. They would examine it in connection with duties of the War Department as now imposed by law. Coming as it does from the Judiciary Committee, I presume the heads of the Departments have not been consulted.

Mr. FRYE. It was recommended by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws last year and by the Judiciary Committee this year. It is asked for by nearly all the employés of the Government in Washington, and the committee can see no earthly reason why the officers and employés of the Government should be put under guardianship any more than the employés of a factory, or why they should not be compelled to acknowledge assignments just as much as the employés of factories. Three or four brokers are scattered among the Departments, and when these employés are compelled to make assignments for their own sake, for the health of their children, to supply what they need, they are compelled to pay from 5 to 6 per cent. a month to these brokers. The only reason for it which is given is that these assignments the Government is not compelled to recognize. I know no reason in law or justice why these employés should not have what they ask even though it imposes on the officers of the Government a little extra duty. I demand the previous question.

Mr. COBURN. Let me ask whether this request also comes from officers of the Army or from the War Department?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It comes from all classses of officers.

Mr. FRYE. There are three thousand petitions. I demand the previous question.

Mr. LAWRENCE. This is an important measure and ought not to pass without deliberation.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 29.

The Speaker ordered tellers; and Mr. FRYE and Mr. O'BRIEN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 100, noes 35.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PURCHASERS AT HARPER'S FERRY.

Mr. FRYE also, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 2505) to authorize the Attorney-General to adjust the claims of the Government upon the purchasers of property at Harper's Ferry, with the recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

ABOLITION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

Mr. FRYE also, from the same committee, reported adversely upon the following cases; which were laid upon the table.

A bill (H. R. No. 2163) to abolish capital punishment.

Memorial of the Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends for the abolition of capital punishment.

JAMES MADISON WELLS.

On motion of Mr. FRYE, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2251) for the relief of James Madison Wells, of Louisiana; and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

LYDIA CRUGER.

On motion of Mr. FRYE, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2568) for the relief of Lydia Cruger, executrix of Moses Shepherd, deceased; and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

HENRY S. BULKLEY.

On motion of Mr. FRYE, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2432) for the relief of Henry S. Bulkley and others; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

MARY A. BUIE.

On motion of Mr. FRYE, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Mary A. Buie; and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3517) supplementary to the third section of the act entitled "An act to divide the State of Virginia into two judicial districts."

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I understand that that bill provides for the creation of new officers, and I make the point of order that it must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SENER. I do not think it does.

Mr. FRYE. Yes; it does.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. DAWES in the chair.) The point of order is well taken, and the bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FRYE, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3518) to amend the act entitled "An act to divide the State of Virginia into two judicial districts," approved February 3, 1871; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I suppose that bill is subject to a point of order.

Mr. SENER. It is not subject to any point of order. No clerk is provided for; merely a deputy clerk.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. It involves an expenditure of money; it creates a deputy clerk and provides for an office and extra terms of the court.

Mr. SENER. A deputy clerk at Richmond is already provided for by law, and under the existing law it is within the power of the Attorney-General to allow as many deputy clerks as may be necessary for the public service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the point of order is well taken, as this bill creates a deputy clerk, which is a new office, whatever other way of making deputy clerks there may be. The bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. FRYE, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3519) to provide for holding terms of the United States circuit court for the western circuit of Missouri at Saint Joseph and Kansas City, Missouri; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

A LEGAL DAY'S WORK.

Mr. FRYE, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do not pass, the bill (H. R. No. 2976) to define a legal day's work in certain cases, and fixing the minimum rate of compensation therefor.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I have the authority of the Committee on the Judiciary to present an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill.

Mr. FRYE. I withhold the motion to lay the bill on the table in order that the substitute may be offered.

The Clerk read the substitute, being a bill to define a legal day's work in certain cases. It provides that a legal day's work for conductors and drivers on all street-cars run and operated within the Territory of the District of Columbia shall not exceed ten hours, and that any such conductor or driver employed by any company or corporation within said limits who shall be required or permitted to labor more than ten hours per day shall have right of action against his principal for the value of any additional labor so performed, to be sued for and recovered like other debts, at any time within six years, any agreement, contract, or understanding to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. FRYE. I simply desire to say that I reported, in accordance with the instructions of the Committee on the Judiciary, adversely to the bill. I am personally in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, and shall vote for it.

The question was taken on the substitute; and it was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. POLAND. The Senate has paid us the very high compliment of passing without amendment the revised statutes which the House sent to them some weeks ago. By a joint rule of the two Houses those three volumes are required to be written out on parchment, as they constitute bills. For the purpose of avoiding the expense and delay of doing that, I offer the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the joint rule of the two Houses, No. 6, which provides that after a bill shall have passed both Houses it shall be duly enrolled on parchment, be suspended so far as relates to bills of this House No. 1215, to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, 1873; No. 2879, revising and consolidating all the laws authorizing post-roads in force on the 1st day of December, 1873; and No. 3349, to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, relating to the District of Columbia in force on the 1st day of December, 1873; and that the same may be presented to the President of the United States as engrossed in the House of Representatives and passed in the Senate.

No objection was made; and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. ELDREDGE,] a member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I desire to raise a parliamentary question for the decision of the Chair. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] took the floor this morning at twelve o'clock and he has held it ever since, apportioning the time to such persons as he has seen fit. I have no fault to find with the manner in which he has disposed of it. But I would like to know what is the practice of the House on a question of that sort, whether, after a day is assigned to the Committee on the Judiciary to report, the chairman or any other member of that committee has the right to take the floor and hold it during the day, or for any length of time. I do not complain of the manner in which he has disposed of it, but I want the rule settled.

The SPEAKER. The organ of the committee in the House is the chairman. It is ordinarily the case that the chairman indicates the order in which reports are to be made from the committee; it is always assumed to be by agreement of the committee. Were any point raised, the Chair presumes that strictly the members of the committee would have the right to be called in the order in which they are named on the committee. If there is any dissatisfaction with the mode indicated by the chairman, the Chair does not know of any——

Mr. ELDREDGE. The assignment has not been in the order indicated by the Chair. I do not complain, but I only wish to know the rule.

The SPEAKER. In case objection was made to the assignment indicated by the chairman of the committee, the members of the committee would have a right to be called in the order named in the appointment of the committee.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. ELDREDGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported adversely upon the following petitions; which were laid upon the table:

The memorial of De Lorma Brooks, of Wisconsin, for relief; and

The petition of certain citizens of Texas, asking for some inquiry into the condition of affairs in that State.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I am also instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back three bills providing for general amnesty, and ask that they be laid upon the table, for the reason that the House has already passed a bill for that purpose which has been sent to the Senate.

Accordingly the following bills were laid upon the table:

A bill (H. R. No. 101) to remove the political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States upon certain classes of citizens;

A bill (H. R. No. 118) for the removal of all disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 282) providing for general amnesty.

EXECUTORS' BONDS.

Mr. ELDREDGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with the recommendation that the same do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 3247) in relation to executors' bonds in the District of Columbia.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That whenever, in any last will or testament, a request shall be made that the executor or executors be not required to give security, the judge of the orphans' court shall not require security of any executor unless on the application of some person interested or when from his own knowledge he thinks security should be required.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect immediately.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to strike out the last section of the bill as not necessary.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I have no objection.

The motion to strike out was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELDREDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. ELDREDGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3520) to remove the political disabilities of General George E. Pickett and Dr. William H. Williamson, of Virginia; Thomas Hardeman, jr., and James Jackson, of Georgia; and John H. Reagan, of Texas; which was read three times and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. ELDREDGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back, with the recommendation that the same do pass, a bill (H. R. No. 2770) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a court for the investigation of claims against the United States,'" approved August 6, 1856.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time.

The bill provides that any three judges of the Court of Claims shall constitute a quorum, and that the concurrence of three judges shall be necessary to the decision of any case.

Mr. CONGER. I will ask the gentleman whether the effect of the bill would not be, in case three judges were present and but two assented to a proposition, that an adverse decision would be the result?

Mr. ELDREDGE. The court as originally established consisted of three members, and it was provided that two should be a quorum. The court as now constituted has five members; and this bill proposes to require that three shall constitute a quorum.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ELDREDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BOHEMIAN-SLAVONIAN BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

Mr. ELDREDGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 2005) to incorporate the national grand lodge of the Bohemian-Slavonian Benevolent Association; which was laid on the table.

BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. TREMAIN. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back the Senate amendments to the bankrupt bill, with the recommendation that the House do non-concur in those amendments and ask for a committee of conference. I wish to occupy the attention of the House for only a few minutes on this question. I do not propose to discuss at all the merits of the proposition that the House shall adhere to its own vote in favor of the repeal. I presume every gentleman has made up his mind upon that question. It will be remembered that among the first acts passed by this House at the commencement of the present session was the bill repealing the bankrupt law. The Senate, after retaining that bill for a long time, has finally returned it with certain amendments, and desires in that form to make the bankrupt law a fixed and permanent system of the country. The House, which was supposed to represent more immediately the public interest, passed by an overwhelming majority the bill for the repeal of the law, the vote being as five or six to one. When the amendments of the Senate were referred to the Judiciary Committee (I think I may properly say this without disclosing any of the secrets of the committee-room) we were anxious to perfect the Senate amendments so far as possible, and we have devoted several very laborious sessions to that work. But the more the subject was considered the more confirmed became the majority of the committee in their original conclusion that every effort should be made to procure a repeal of the law, and that only after we should have failed in all reasonable and laudable efforts in that direction should we occupy time in attempting to patch up this law.

As I have already said, I do not propose to discuss the merits of this question, unless it should be necessary by way of reply to what may be said by gentlemen who may be opposed to the action of the committee. But I take the first opportunity that has been presented to me to notice by way of explanation and of vindication a charge in relation to my connection with this bill, affecting my honor and integrity. The House will remember that I had both the honor and the misfortune to report from the Committee on the Judiciary the bill to repeal the bankrupt law; and this is the first proper occasion that has presented itself to allude to some extraordinary aspersions made during the progress of the debate on that bill and subsequently in regard to my connection with it.

When that bill was under discussion, it was stated by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON] that it was introduced by the attorneys for Jay Cooke. This statement I desired to explain at the time, but as I had spoken once upon the bill I could only be heard in case no one objected. At the end of the two hours allowed for debate by the special order I obtained the floor for this purpose, when objection being made the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON] moved that five minutes be allowed me. But an objection was made by the opponents of repeal on the ground that an equal number of speeches had been made for and against the bill. As a single objection was sufficient, the opportunity which I sought could not be obtained.

On the following day the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON] made the following statement as the same is reported in the RECORD:

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I wish to occupy a moment or two with a personal explanation. When the bill in relation to bankruptcy was under consideration yesterday I made some remarks, in the course of which I referred to the introduction of the bill by the lawyers of Jay Cooke & Co. What I said seems to have been misunderstood by some persons. Hence I desire to say this morning that I did not say, nor mean to be understood as saying, that any member of this House as an attorney of Jay Cooke & Co. was introducing bills here in the interest of that firm. What I meant was that lawyers of that firm, not members of the House, had brought a bill here and procured its introduction. I intended no reflection upon any gentleman whatever.

I now learn, Mr. Speaker, that in relation to this matter charges affecting my integrity and honor have been published broadcast throughout the length and breadth of the country. I have been denounced as a trickster. Accusations of bribery and corruption have been widely circulated. The statement has been published that the question which agitates Washington is how much I received from Jay Cooke & Co. It has been said that I alone was responsible for the bill, and that I had violated the instructions of the committee in reporting it. My silence in this House, which as I have stated was involuntary and the result of the special order limiting debate, has been cited as evidence against me. Certain organs of the democratic party in my own State, which have never failed to pursue me with vindictive hostility since that period twelve years since, when, disregarding party ties, I came to the aid of my country's integrity, have eagerly caught up these accusations and served them to their readers in every variety of form which fiendish malignity could suggest.

The New York World, one of the leading papers of this class, in a recent editorial on this subject headed "Exit Tremain," proceeds to hold me up as a "mere trickster;" to lament the destruction of the "bright hopes and high expectations" of my friends; to bewail my rapid fall from a high position to a place "lower than the Credit Mobilier swindlers and salary-grabbers;" to declare that "every move that I make in Congress will be looked upon with suspicion by all honest men;" and kindly to advise me "to resign, go home, and contemplate in retirement the suddenness of my fall."

These are only a few flowers plucked at random from the bouquets presented to me upon my first appearance in the Halls of Congress. The remainder, however, were equally fragrant, beautiful, and complimentary. As this is the first sprinkling of choice literature which has been showered upon me from the unpurchasable, discriminating, and independent press of the country, or rather from that portion of it which fails to recognize the distinction between the liberty and the licentiousness of the press, I receive it with all due humility as an earnest of the deluge which is likely to follow.

For my vindication I beg leave to state the history of my connection with this bill. At the first meeting of the Judiciary Committee the various bills relating to this subject were referred to a sub-committee of three, of which I was one. It so happened that I stood alone in favor of a repeal; and, on reporting the matter back to the whole committee, a majority decided after full discussion in favor of repeal, and the sub-committee were directed to prepare a bill. This was on Friday, and it was deemed important by the committee to report the bill on the following Monday, as that was the only day in the week when a motion to suspend the rules to receive the bill could be entertained.

It was my desire and I moved that the committee should meet the next morning to receive and adopt the bill that might be prepared, but I was overruled by the committee. The sub-committee proceeded immediately to perfect the bill. The bill which they reported was not introduced by the attorneys of Jay Cooke, nor by any other persons except the committee. Among the various bills on the table of the Judiciary Committee was one introduced by Mr. PARSONS, of Ohio, providing in a single section for the repeal of the bankrupt law. This was taken, and two new and original sections prepared in the handwriting of members of the Judiciary Committee themselves were added. Among other bills on the table was one providing for an amendment of the law, containing provisions which it was believed with proper alterations would be an improvement upon the old law as to pending cases. These sections were freely altered in important particulars, and were adopted by the sub-committee. The principles of the bill as reported were, first, a repeal of the bankrupt law; second, a provision for winding up all pending cases according to the terms of the old law except in the special cases provided for in the bill; third, a provision for pending cases by allowing a majority in interest of the creditors to make agreements as to the disposition of the bankrupt's estate, and subjecting him to examination at the instance only of the assignee chosen by such majority. These latter provisions it was believed would relieve the law from some of its present severe features, and enable creditors to realize much more from the estates than they would yield under the forced sale provided for under the old law. The bill was prepared on the same day and received the approval of every member of the sub-committee before the House adjourned. I then presented it to the chairman of the committee with a request that he would report it, but he gave it back, declaring that by parliamentary usage it had become my duty to report it; whereupon, neither seeking nor avoiding the post of duty, I reported it to this House.

The first knowledge, information, or suspicion I had that any provisions of the bill were supposed to be prepared in the interest of Jay Cooke, or that any bill had been introduced in his interest, was after the bill was reported to this body. The bill on the table, from which, as I have stated, certain sections were taken and altered, was printed and had been introduced in the ordinary manner by a member of the House. It was a bill not for repeal but for amendment, and I had no knowledge, information, or suspicion that it was introduced in the interest of any particular person, nor have I now any such knowledge except the statement of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. WILSON,] which was made on the floor of the House. The bill was prepared without consultation on my part with any person outside of the members of the committee. I had no acquaintance whatever with Jay Cooke & Co., or any of his attorneys or agents. His name had never been mentioned, nor his interests discussed by any member of the committee, so far as I knew or believed. I regret that the committee rejected my proposition to meet on Saturday and consider the bill. It was open to every member, and after it was prepared it was actually seen and examined by a majority of the Judiciary Committee, in fact was reported. I was not wedded in any manner to the details of the bill, and had no other desire or interest in it except to repeal the old law, or essentially amend it, (and I believe the former course to be in accordance with the wishes of my constituents,) and to make provision for pending cases, that should be as just and equitable as possible. When the charge was made that this bill had been prepared in the interest of Jay Cooke and no opportunity was offered to explain, I voted, as did, I believe, a majority of our committee, in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK,] which simply left the old law in force as applicable to pending cases, and reduced the cost and fees one-half, and the same majority of our committee, or at least I, a member of the committee, was entirely content with this disposition of the matter, and greatly pleased with the overwhelming majority given by the House for the bill as amended.

In taking leave of this subject, I will add in the broadest terms I can command that I challenge and invite the fullest scrutiny and investigation in relation to my action in connection with this bill, and I declare that there is not the slightest foundation for any charge, accusation, or insinuation whatever against me, no matter whether they originate in the brain of sensation, irresponsible newspaper correspondents, or in the malice of political editors, or from any other source whatever.

In making this explanation I carefully refrain from recrimination, as my only purpose is to set myself right before this House and the country, and to defend that reputation which is dearer to me than life. It is my earnest desire that courtesy and kindness shall prevail among those gentlemen who are brought together upon this floor as the law-makers for the nation; that the debates here shall be confined wholly to the intrinsic merits of the matters before us, and that all our proceedings shall be conducted with that dignity which becomes the House of Representatives of the United States. If the high character of this body shall suffer detriment before the people, I would not aid in effecting such an injury, nor would I set the example of traducing it or any of its members. If the custom has heretofore prevailed in debate here of abusing fellow-members, of assailing their motives, and endeavoring to impair their usefulness, it seems to me a custom more honored in the breach than in the observance.

As to the New York World and its malicious libels I have only this answer to make. The World is the same organ which only a few years since was offered for sale in the market as a republican paper, but the republican leaders declined to purchase on the ground that it would be a poor investment. It is the same paper which assumes to be the leading newspaper of the democratic party, but by its pharisaical assumptions of superiority, it has disgusted the principal leaders and editors of that party. On the eve of a presidential election it has thrown its party into confusion by proposing to change front in face of its enemy, and to throw overboard the candidates who had been regularly nominated in national convention.

It was the organ of Tweed & Co. when they held supreme power in the city and State of New York. It represented the chiefs of the Tammany ring when they were at the zenith of their power, glory, and corruption. While the New York Times was nobly exposing these atrocious frauds which have since become historic, the World in the fancied strength and security of the ring sneeringly asked, "What are you going to do about it?"

During that period when patriotic men were struggling to preserve the life of the Republic this paper was engaged in vilifying, denouncing, and abusing President Lincoln, General Grant, and all the war measures of the administration. Having been able heretofore to survive the satanic and malignant attacks of this sheet, I hope I may outlive the present assault and any other attention from the same source, excepting always its commendation and approval.

Now, sir, if no gentleman desires to discuss the amendments to this bill I move the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. Pending that, I move that the House take a recess.

Mr. SPEER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. TREMAIN] charge that the democracy in this House are responsible for Tweed?

Mr. TREMAIN. I spoke merely of the New York World, which has followed me with its libels and its calumnies. I retort, as the gentleman might retort, by asking, Who is my accuser?

Mr. SPEER. But I remember that the gentleman in his first speech here referred to "cell No. 36," (I believe,) occupied by Tweed; and now in his last speech he refers to Tweed again. What has Tweed to do with the repeal of the bankrupt law?

Mr. TREMAIN. If the gentleman had listened to me he would have found that Tweed was connected with the New York World, which has been my assailant; that the New York World, when the exposition was made of the frauds of Tweed, said, "What are you going to do about it?"

Mr. SPEER. Well, you convicted Tweed, and now you ought to let him rest.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order; gentlemen standing in the aisles will resume their seats.

Mr. SPEER. Was not the New York World one of the first papers to denounce the wrong referred to by the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TREMAIN] reports back from the Committee on the Judiciary the Senate amendment to the bankrupt bill, and asks that the House refuse to concur, and that the bill be sent to a committee of conference. Pending that motion the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] moves that the House take a recess.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make a statement. I am one of those who believe that this law should never have been upon the statute-book——

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RANDALL. In view of the circumstances, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I have been necessarily absent from the House during the day, and just this moment came upon the floor. I understand that my name has been used in some way by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TREMAIN,] who has just taken his seat. I do not know what he has said with reference to anything I may have said heretofore.

Mr. TREMAIN. I have said nothing reflecting upon the gentleman at all.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I was about to say that if upon an examination of the RECORD after the gentleman's remarks have been printed I should deem it necessary to say anything, I shall crave the indulgence of the House for that purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on my motion for a recess.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remind members that, by an order of the House made by unanimous consent, the House meets this evening to go into Committee of the Whole on the tariff bill.

Mr. DAWES. For action on the bill, not for debate.

JUDICIARY COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent of the House that the Committee on the Judiciary may finish its work to-morrow evening. We are about half through. There are some important matters behind, such as the question of repealing the law about the payment of debts in the Southern States, and a number of court bills of great importance.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to giving the Judiciary Committee to-morrow?

Mr. POTTER. That does not include the civil-rights bill?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No; nor the Geneva award bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me that we had better settle it to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the business of the committee. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TREMAIN] has just reported back a bill which the committee was authorized to do at any time. If it were merely confined to this day, the House adjourning, the bill would not be pending, because the reports of the Committee on the Judiciary were limited to this day. If the previous question were not called upon the bill it would not be before the House; but as the gentleman has the right to report it at any time, the Chair will give him early recognition to bring the question before the House. The Chair will again ask, is there objection to allowing the Judiciary Committee for reports to-morrow evening?

Mr. POTTER. Excluding the civil-rights and the Geneva award bills.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Of course.

Mr. ASHE. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. I would rather give them the morning hour to-morrow.

And then, on motion of Mr. RANDALL, (at five minutes to five o'clock p. m.,) the House took a recess until half-past seven p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

TARIFF AND INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. BURCHARD. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3491) to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS in the chair.) It is not in order under the order of the House to take up any other business. The session this evening was set apart for the purpose of considering in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the tariff and tax bill.

Mr. CONGER. It is quite important to have a bill I have printed, as the Committee on Patents will report on it Friday next.

Mr. BURCHARD. That can be done to-morrow.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for a division on going into committee.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 15.

So (no further count being asked for) the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. TYNER in the chair,) for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3491) to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes.

Mr. BANNING. I move to strike out "10" and insert "4;" so it will read:

On hops 4 cents per pound.

Mr. BURCHARD. That clause has been already passed, and I make the point of order it is not now amendable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed the clause the gentleman from Ohio proposes to amend has been already passed.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no.

The CHAIRMAN. The recollection of the Chair differs materially from the statement of the Clerk. The present occupant of the Clerk's desk was not here at the time, but the Chair is convinced, while the item had been read and discussed and several votes taken in the committee which were lost, it was left precisely as it is.

Mr. DAWES. I have the impression the committee had commenced reading the next clause, but I am not certain about that. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will show.

Mr. MAYNARD. The recollection of the Clerk would control.

Mr. BANNING. O, no; the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD would show.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the impression that the clause to which the gentleman from Ohio proposes an amendment may be amended, as the Committee of the Whole have not passed from it.

Mr. BANNING. I move, then, to strike out "10" and insert "4," so it will read "on hops 4 cents per pound."

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the imposition of additional duties upon hops. I make this opposition in the first place upon the general ground that it is an increased taxation bearing hard upon the consumer generally and especially upon my own constituents. These constituents are paying more into the Treasury of the United States than any same number in any part of the country. Against such increased taxation this Congress is justly pledged.

It was understood in the beginning of the session from the Committee on Ways and Means that the Government would be conducted upon its present revenues by an economical cutting down of expenditures. Upon this we have acted uniformly since, not with the success the country hoped for, but with probably as much as could have been expected.

Now, this proposition is a direct departure from that understanding. It is a very unjust proposition, because it is unequal. A very deserving class of tax-payers have an unjust burden thrown upon them.

Were it generally understood that we were to have an increased taxation, the duty on tea and coffee would have been restored; this duty would have been general, the least felt and the most available, because readily collected. It goes directly into the Treasury. It is well known to all of us that putting tea and coffee upon the free list did not reduce the price of these articles to the consumer. It is probably as well known that to re-enact the duty would not enhance the value of the articles to the people.

These being the facts of the case, where is the justice of selecting one class and imposing such a burden as this is upon them? If it is meant to protect the growers of hops, it necessarily reduces the revenue. If it does not so protect, it is very partial and unjust.

Now, sir, why do the members from Michigan, Wisconsin, and the hop-growing districts of New York ask an increase of the duty upon hops? Are they prompted to this action in the general welfare of the country, or are they serving their sectional interests at the expense of the entire country, the manufacturers and consumers?

In 1870 the United States produced twenty-five million pounds of hops, of which New York produced seventeen millions, Wisconsin near five millions, and Michigan near one million; these three States producing twenty-two out of twenty-five million pounds produced. So that we see that the hop-growing interest is confined to a very small section of this country, and further examination will show that these hop-growing districts pay less revenue into the Treasury of the Government than any other sections.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I find in the little examination I have been able to give this subject that hop-raising is one of the most profitable and paying industries of the country.

A writer in the American Agriculturist, speaking of hops and the cost of raising, says:

> The cost of raising is from 4 to 6 cents per pound; the average crop all through the country is near 1,000 pounds per acre, where the work is well done, but I have seen 2,500 pounds per acre raised on a large yard. On two large yards in Morris, Oswego County, New York, the average for four years has been 1,700 pounds on the one and 1,800 pounds on the other.

The same writer says the price for the last forty years has been from 17 to 18 cents.

This would be, per acre	$170 00
Expense of raising, per acre	50 00
Net proceeds, per acre	120 00

This estimate is made upon an average price of 17 cents per pound for hops, under which an acre of ground yields a net profit of $120.

An examination of the market for the week ending Monday evening, May 20, 1874, shows the following report of the hop trade:

> The market is quiet but steady for prime to choice western and eastern, 28 to 33 cents per pound.

So that to-day the grower of hops who raises 1,000 pounds to the acre sells at $280 an acre; deduct cost of raising, $50, and he has a net profit of $230 an acre.

Suppose, Mr. Chairman, for the sake of argument the crop of hops in place of being an average crop was only a half-crop, in place of 1,000 pounds per acre was only 500 pounds, then we have to the producer at the present price a net profit of $115 per acre for his land. This is a very good return to the hop-raiser, and is a far better profit upon his investment than any other business or industry is yielding in this country at this time.

The gentleman from Wisconsin, in his speech upon this subject yesterday, tells us the question is not between the producer and the consumer, but between the home producer and foreign producer. An examination of this subject shows the gentleman to be entirely mistaken.

In the American Agriculturist, page 68, I find the following:

> A farmer writing from Northfield, says: "There were 30 acres of hops raised in that town in the past year, yielding an average of 1,000 pounds an acre, worth 40 cents a pound, amounting to $400 per acre. Cost of raising per acre in that town is estimated at $40. Some growers have realized as high even as $500 per acre. These estimates are far lower than the cost of raising hops in England, where rent of land, taxes, tithes, labor of cultivating, manure, &c., are much higher than here. The cost per acre there up to the time of picking is estimated at $150; while the cost of picking, drying, baling, storage, cartage, &c., is estimated at about $175 more. The cost of the kiln is often to the English grower not less than from $1,000 to $1,500, while the cost of the kilns here is rarely more than $75. Our growers expect ordinarily about a pound to a hill; they often get 1½ or even 5 pounds to a hill, making from 800 to 1,200 pounds to an acre. The general average yield in England is about 700 pounds per acre."

Thus we see hops are raised cheaper in this country than in Europe.

The following table shows the imports and exports of hops into and from this country during the fiscal years of 1867 to 1873 inclusive:

Fiscal year—	Imports.		Domestic exports.		Foreign exports.
	Pounds.	Dollars.	Pounds.	Dollars.	Pounds.	Dollars.
1867	865,016	267,102	1,101,603	362,946	238,157	13,852
1868	3,585,843	922,023	532,038	264,029	96,318	25,806
1869	.....	58,728	11,269,555	1,627,248	.....	.....
1870	.....	76,677	16,356,231	2,515,734	.....	64,572
1871	.....	14,524	3,273,653	316,288	.....	37,621
1872	.....	815,041	3,061,244	408,305	.....	15,700
1873	.....	1,386,136	1,795,437	272,403	.....	53,855

This table shows a large amount of exports of hops from this country every year. The amount has been decreasing every year since 1870, when we exported over two and one-half million dollars' worth. This is occasioned by the increased use and consumption of hops in this country, and not by the fact that cheap hops are shipped here from abroad. Hops are to-day worth 12 cents more a pound in this country than they were in 1870, when we exported the largest amount. Then hops were worth a little over 15 cents per pound; now they are worth over 28. Then hop-growers were satisfied to ship their hops to a foreign country and sell them for 15 cents a pound; now they want a protection of 10 cents a pound, when they are selling their hops at home for 28 to 33 cents per pound.

The gentleman from Wisconsin says a large number of petitions have been sent here in favor of the increase of duties to 10 cents. Mr. Chairman, every member upon this floor knows how cheap petitions generally are. I do not suppose that these petitions were cut out of a city directory or cut off of other petitions and pasted on, as I am told is often done, but I do think I have shown that the profits of hop-raising would enable the hop-growers to pay the expenses of a man to ride through the hop gardens to have a petition signed to increase their profits.

Sir, I submit to the members of this House that this demand of the hop-growers is uncalled for, unreasonable, unjust, and ought not to be sustained. It is an imposition upon a class of manufacturers who pay a large share of the revenues of this Government. It is taking more money from an already heavily taxed set of manufacturers and putting it in the pockets of a set of well-paid producers whose business does not pay one cent of revenue.

Mr. BANNING'S five minutes having expired before the conclusion of his remarks, Mr. WARD, of Illinois, took the floor and yielded his five minutes to him, when he concluded his speech.

Mr. STANDIFORD. Mr. Chairman this proposition to increase the duty on hops is one that I consider a very poor illustration of true political economy. It seems to me to be a measure for the special benefit of an exceeding small class of our producers; and while it may have the effect of adding a few dollars of profit to the hop-growers, it will just as surely take away from another and much more numerous class of farmers who are engaged in raising barley.

The hops produced in this country and those which we import are used almost exclusively in the manufacture of beer. The result of this increased duty will be an increase in the cost of making beer, and one of two things must occur: the price of the farmer's barley must be reduced or the price of beer advanced, either one of which will be a positive injury to western industry. Our farmers, especially of Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, depend largely upon the production and sale of this staple, and Chicago, Cincinnati, and Louisville are the great barley markets of the United States, and any decrease in its price will work harm, for the farmer gets little enough now for his productions. I see no reason why one small class of producers should be legislated by Congress into the position of having the price of the productions of their labor advanced at the expense of the farmers of the West. There may be a morality in that way of doing, but I cannot understand it if there is.

Is this increase of duty for the purpose of increasing the cash receipts of the Government and replenishing the Treasury? If so, it is an absurdity as well as an act of gross injustice to the West; absurd because it is a practical prohibition of the importation of hops, and will lose to the Treasury the revenue collected now from that source, which amounts to about $285,000 a year. The burden of the tax thus imposed will fall upon the people of the West, and particularly of the section I have mentioned, which now pays nearly half of the Government tax; these States being the greatest beer-producing and consuming States in the country. It seems that every scheme of taxation has the West for its objective point, while the East, which has all the money, is very delicately touched and tenderly considered when the subject of taxation is under consideration.

If protection is the object of this increase of duty it is simply ridiculous. I have the greatest respect for the farmer. I am a farmer myself, and my sympathies and interests are all with him; but I do say that if he has come down here to this Congress and wants protection from these German hop-growers, if his broad acres cannot compete successfully in his own country with the two-acre farms of the Germans, and if the German hop-grower with his little patch of land, after supplying the immense demand of his own country, can bring his hops across the ocean and sell them so low that the American cannot profitably raise them, I say to the American hop-grower you had better turn your hand to something else.

If you intend to do this for the benefit of the farmer it is a failure, and the American farmer is too intelligent not to understand that it is really an increase of the burden of taxation under which he labors, and the most of which for the support of the government he pays.

I am neither an advocate of beer nor an opponent of it. It certainly enters largely into the domestic economy of the people of this country, and has been aptly called the "poor man's wine." Whenever we legislate so that the effect will be to increase the price of this article, or compel the production of an inferior article, we add another weight to the poor man's burden, or take from him a measure of enjoyment of which he has none to spare.

I trust the House will reject this proposed increase of duty on hops and leave the tariff where it is now. It is a measure which interests advantageously an insignificant few of our people, and is positively injurious to a very large number.

I believe that if you raise this tax to 10 cents a pound it will have the same effect as did the tariff of $2 a gallon on whisky in respect to the collection of internal revenue.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I do not desire to prolong the discussion upon this question.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. Then I move to strike out the last word, or rather I rise to oppose the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has already been advocated and opposed.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. All the speeches thus far have been in favor of the amendment and on one side; but I repeat that I do not rise to prolong this discussion. The whole subject was considered yesterday, and the figures and facts then presented to the attention of the House were sufficient, with other considerations that suggested themselves to members of the House, to secure a vote very largely in favor of the bill as it stands, as it came from the Committee on Ways and Means. It seems to me that there is nothing in the arguments and statistics presented to-day which to any extent militates against the force of the figures we had under consideration yesterday, and I hope the vote may be taken without further debate.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment. I supposed that we had passed over the hop question—hopped over it—but it seems to be revived to-night for some purpose, and that we are hopping back upon it, as the gentleman who has charge of the bill very properly says.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the House to the condition of the hop-trade for the last two years. I took occasion to say in the remarks which I made yesterday that two or three years ago there was an excessive importation of hops into this country, which reduced the price in the Western States to 4 and 5 cents a pound, with the same duty on it as there is now. I will read to the House what the price has been for the last ten years, the highest price and the lowest price of hops in the New York market, and they will see the great variation that has taken place with the same duty:

Years.	Highest, per pound.	Lowest, per pound.
	Cents.	Cents.
1864	37	26
1865	65½	10
1866	70	25
1867	70	40
1868	65	14
1869	20	8
1870	28	8
1871	30	8

In 1872 after the hop-fields of the United States were all destroyed, then low prices had prevailed for three years and the foreign producers had entire control of our market. For three years the lowest price of hops, the reigning price through the season, was 8 cents a pound in the city of New York, and in the region of the West and Northwest where hops were raised they were sold for 4 cents, 4½ cents, and 5 cents a pound, being even below the amount of duty. Almost the entire hop-fields of New York, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, Northern Indiana, and Northern Illinois were plowed up and destroyed as hop-fields, and then commenced importation without any competition in this country. From that time, as you see, the price of hops ran up to 75 cents a pound. Now, what has been the importation since 1871? The following table will show:

In 1871, quantity imported, 100,884 pounds; value, $12,811; duty, $5,044.20; highest price, 30 cents; lowest price, 8 cents. In 1872, the amount imported was 1,999,457 pounds; value, $785,533.11; duty, $99,972.88; highest price, 75 cents; lowest price, 23 cents. In 1873, last year, with almost the entire hop-fields of the country destroyed, and no competition with foreign producers, there was imported into the United States 5,608,902 pounds; value, $1,310,627.27; duty, $280,445.10; highest price, 55 cents; lowest price, 35 cents.

Now, that is the history from the Bureau of Statistics. And I ask any gentleman who knows that the value of the product of a single year, if it is not sold in that year, is destroyed because of the perishable quality of the hops, whether the destruction of our hop-fields by the introduction of hops from foreign countries, until it was worth in the places where produced less than the duty itself, does not call for the action of this House to raise the duty at least so as to protect in some measure this very important industry, and save this million and a half of dollars to our own production?

Now, that is all there is of this. I care nothing for the theories of gentlemen. I have read the facts and figures in this case from the Bureau of Statistics, which gentlemen will find in the report on commerce and navigation for this year, and they cannot be gainsaid.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I desire to say——

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I raise the point of order that the gentleman has spoken once on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order; the gentleman has a right to oppose the pending amendment.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING;] or, if he will withdraw his amendment, I will offer one in its place.

Mr. BANNING. I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Then I will move an amendment which I understand will be satisfactory to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING.] It is to add to the pending clause the following:

Until the 1st of June, 1874, after which time the duty shall be the same as now provided by law, 5 cents per pound.

My object in offering this amendment is that I desire, and I believe the majority of those who are opposed to this increase of duty are willing, that the duty on hops should remain as it is now. I desire to call the attention of this committee briefly to some of the facts connected with this proposed legislation. There are about three counties in Wisconsin, two or three counties in Michigan, and a few counties in New York that raise hops, while there are hundreds of counties all through the East and Northwest and South that do not raise hops but consume them. I am neither a free-trader, like the silver-tongued gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] nor a protectionist in the sense that our able friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] is. I do not desire a free-trade tariff, and do not propose this amendment on that ground. I am for a prosperous condition of affairs, if we can determine what that is. We have that now in relation to the hop production; there is a sufficient protection on that article now to make hop-raising a living, thriving, and profitable industry in the country. And to add 5 cents a pound to the duty upon hops is doing a great injustice to the vast majority of the whole country, of the Northwest especially.

Mr. WILBER. Will the gentleman state how much it costs to grow a pound of hops?

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I am not going into the details of this question now. That matter has been elaborately stated by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING,] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. WILBER] will find it in the RECORD if he does not know it now, though I believe he does know it. It may cost 5 or 10 or 20 cents a pound to raise hops; I do not care what it may cost. The hop trade is now prosperous; and the attempt is being made here to place a double tax upon it; for what? To provide against some possible contingency that may arise in the future, a failure of the crop or an increased importation from abroad. Sir, legislation should not be based on any such principle. It is unjust to the vast majority of the people of this country to legislate upon such considerations as those.

If it is said that this is done for the purpose of raising revenue, then, as I said yesterday when this subject was under consideration, it is simply an ingenious method on the part of gentlemen whose constituents do not raise hops and do not use them particularly, to get out of the overburdened people of the Northwest more money to put into the Treasury. This is not in the interest of the farmers; it is not for the purpose of protecting the three counties in Wisconsin or the two counties in Michigan that we are asked to increase the duty on hops. It is a mere pretense, to set the rights of a few men who raise hops above the rights of everybody else in the country. It is unfair and unjust, and I protest against it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. I think this question has been presented as ably and fully as the friends and the opponents of this measure can desire. As the representative of the Committee on Ways and Means I will simply restate the reasons which governed the committee in reporting this provision, and then I hope the Committee of the Whole will take a vote, and whatever they may do will be satisfactory to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Committee on Ways and Means were of the opinion that nothing would be of so much service to the consumers of hops themselves, those who make beer, as to have a steady uniform price of the article. Whether it be a low price or a high price, if it be a steady uniform price, so that the consumers of hops may know just what it will be, that would be the best thing for those who use this article. And we thought there was no way to secure this except to secure a home production, and no way to secure the home production except to let the home producer know that the man abroad cannot at his will put his hand on the price, cannot at his will hold it all back and put up the price of hops 100 or 150 per cent., or, as has been done sometimes, 300 or 400 per cent. That was what moved the committee to put this additional protection on this article, in order that the producer of hops in this country might feel that there was such a margin between him and the producer abroad that he could look to a profitable return when he planted his hops. I understand it takes three years to bring hops to maturity. I do not know more about hops than I do about many other things in the world. And the allusion of my friend from Illinois [Mr. WARD] to me has no bearing at all, for I have no voice in this matter except as the representative of the Committee on Ways and Means.

I understand that it takes three years to mature a hop crop; and if between the foreign producer who employs to pick the hops children who are almost babes and gives them as compensation for their labor merely enough to keep them from starving—if between the foreign producer and himself the domestic producer can see this home market, then he can go on uniformly in the production; the price will be regular; the maker of beer will know that he can at all times obtain the hops at just that price which the supply and demand will regulate in this as in every other branch of business. This in the view of the committee would be a desirable result; and with this purpose we have reported the proposition.

Mr. BANNING. Is the gentleman aware that hops are now 15 cents a pound higher in New York than they were in 1870 when we imported $2,000,000 worth?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir; I am aware of that.

Mr. BANNING. And does not the gentleman know that this increase in the price has resulted from the increased comsumption in this country?

Mr. DAWES. I will tell the gentleman what we understand to be the reason of this increased price. It is because the foreign raisers of hops for a while put down the price so low that the hop-men of this country abandoned the raising of hops; then the foreign producers as soon as the field was clear put up the price, which has started the farmers in this country to planting hops again; but it will take two or three years before this home crop can come to maturity; and when that time arrives, if there is nothing to protect the home producer from the foreign producer, the latter will again put down the price so low as to ruin the domestic producer, who will become discouraged and say, "I will plant no more hops." And when things are in that condition, the foreign producer will again put up the price of hops.

Mr. STANDIFORD. Can the gentleman from Massachusetts tell us why barley, which two years ago was worth 60 cents a bushel, is to-day worth $1.75?

Mr. DAWES. I have not examined that question. While I do not desire to control the action of the Committee of the Whole, I think that gentlemen who oppose the increase of the duty have presented their side of the question, and so far as I know the views of the committee have been presented. Therefore I hope we shall have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WARD.]

Mr. KASSON. I suggest that by common consent the vote be taken on a motion to strike out the line.

Mr. DAWES. Yes; let the question be between 5 cents (which is the present duty) and the rate which is proposed in the bill.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. That will satisfy me. The form in which I put my motion was to prevent a parliamentary objection.

Mr. DAWES. Striking out the line will leave the duty at 5 cents; retaining the line will make the duty 10 cents.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. WARD, of Illinois, as modified, there were—ayes 43, noes 88; no quorum voting.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I insist on a further count; but I desire to say——

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I object to debate.

Mr. DAWES. Before a further count is taken I wish to say that if it will satisfy gentlemen on the other side I will agree to have a vote by yeas and nays in the House on this question.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. That is all I want. I was about to make that proposition.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I do not think that ought to be insisted upon. The proposition has been beaten on a fair vote.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Then I call for a further count.

Mr. DAWES. I think that this question has been fairly argued on both sides and that it would be right for gentlemen to accept the judgment of the Committee of the Whole; but I will agree to allow a vote by yeas and nays in the House.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. If the chairman of the committee will allow me to offer an amendment in the House to strike out this line and to have a vote upon it, that is all I ask.

Mr. DAWES. I will do that.

The CHAIRMAN. No further count being demanded, the amendment is rejected.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I move to amend by inserting after the pending paragraph the following:

On chromate and bichromate of potassa, 4½ cents per pound.

This amendment is offered to encourage and foster the manufacture of this chemical, which enters largely into the printing of cottons and woolen manufactures; it is a protection which is demanded in the interest of the consumers. This article in the ore is mined in Maryland and Pennsylvania, and Maryland enterprise has established the only manufacture in this country. In Baltimore, over half a million dollars capital has been invested, and after many difficulties we can boast the manufacture of an article superior in quality to the foreign importation and at a price to the consumer less than one-half that which was paid before this Maryland production was attempted. In Glasgow, Scotland, there are two wealthy manufacturers of this important chemical, who have monopolized the whole production abroad, and it remains to be seen whether this Congress will admit of the crushing out of this home manufacture which is now threatened, the effect of which will inevitably give to the English capitalists and producers control of our markets, and when the monopoly becomes complete, then an advance in price to the rate of a few years ago will follow.

The present duty is 3 cents per pound; the amendment asks for 4½ cents per pound. While during the war the cost of mining the ore and labor in manufacture was doubled, and still remains at the highest rate, no protection was asked or given. It is only now, when extermination of our domestic manufacture is sought, that I ask for this Maryland enterprise the same measure of justice that is lavishly dispensed in other quarters. Mr. Chairman, I am not here to demand even the same average protection which like articles are afforded by our laws; but in the interest of the whole country, and for the benefit of all who will share alike in the advantages of the development of our manufactures, to sustain our citizens in their attempts to compete with the foreign producer and thus add to our common prosperity, I ask the adoption of this amendment. Will this small measure of support be denied and our domestic interest in this manufacture sacrificed because the Ways and Means Committee did not report it in their bill; for there is no valid reason or argument that can be advanced against the amendment I have proposed? My constituents are largely interested in this production; the pay-roll of the works in my district average $10,000 monthly. I have a pride in sustaining every enterprise into which Maryland capital enters, but, Mr. Chairman, a higher motive urges me forward in sustaining this amendment. It will secure the successful competition of domestic with foreign manufacture; it will develop and sustain an American production which will to a large extent add to the resources of our country, and in case of war with Great Britain leave us independent of the foreign supply; otherwise we would be deprived of an article so necessary to our welfare. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment will be adopted.

I will say, Mr. Chairman, I am not much on tariffs. I rather incline to the doctrine of free trade; but there are industries, and I think this is one of that character, which should be nursed and fostered and sustained, at least until they become self-sustaining. Then I would have free trade in this article, as I would have it in all others when the prosperity of the country would permit it.

Mr. BIERY. Is this one of the industries which ought to be protected because it is a Maryland industry?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Not by any means. In sustaining any Maryland enterprise or any enterprise into which Maryland capital may properly and legitimately be put, I sustain it because it is for the benefit of the whole country by enabling the consumer to obtain it at a much less price than if the tariff remains where it is now.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KASSON. I wish to state, Mr. Chairman, before the House votes on this question, that the duty on the article is now 3 cents per pound; that it is produced almost exclusively in this country by this concern in Maryland to which allusion has been made; that it had at one time a hard struggle undoubtedly to sustain itself against competition from abroad; and that that effort has resulted thus far in sustaining it and enlarging its production. The proprietor of these works, however, claims he has sustained himself at a very considerable loss in the presence of these occasional attacks upon the market which come from two wealthy manufacturers in a foreign country, who avail themselves of a dull market abroad to flood this market and put the price so low that in one single season he affirms he lost $50,000. Under these circumstances the committee were disposed to treat the question with absolute impartiality and fairness. Perhaps I ought to say there is some difference of opinion in the committee on the subject whether an additional cent per pound is needed to sustain this American industry. I will only speak for myself in saying I think 4 cents a pound would be no more protection, as long as you insist on the theory of the protection of this industry, or in fact as much as you are in the habit of giving to other industries which are competing with like industries abroad.

The question, therefore, is simply between 3 cents and, as the motion puts it, 4½ cents per pound. All competition in this enterprise has diminished year by year. This spring it shows an increase in the last few months of the imported article, and this has subjected him again to the danger which he has been subjected to before at considerable loss.

I only undertake in what I now state of what ought to be done to speak for myself. Other members of the committee speak differently. I would be willing myself to give 4 cents per pound on the basis I spoke of, that it gives him only that portion of protection which in my judgment sustains him against destruction by competition which other like industries have obtained. I only apply the principle as I find it, and say upon that application it requires another cent per pound.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURCHARD. I move to strike out 4½ cents and insert 3, and I desire to present to the committee the considerations which led to the action of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The present law fixes it at 3 cents per pound.

Mr. BURCHARD. I am aware of that fact. The reasons which influenced the committee in deciding after full consideration and hearing the party who was interested in increasing the duty to let the duty remain as it is at the present time are these: From the statements of the proprietor, or one of the proprietors, it appears the manufacture of bichromate of potassa commenced about twenty-five years ago with a limited capital; that now they have, partly by addition to their capital, and partly from investment of the returns of the business, increased the capital to about one-half a million dollars. They commenced the manufacture under a duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem under the tariff of 1846, and they continued year after year under the reduced tariff of 1856, of 15 per cent. ad valorem, which in 1861 was increased to the present rate of 3 cents per pound. Now they ask for an increase of duty. The manufacture of their product is increasing from year to year. Hence it seems to me there is no necessity and no reason why, with a flourishing and increasing manufacture from time to time, they should have any claim upon Congress and the people to have the duty increased. It has been the policy of Congress within the last three or four years rather to reduce than to increase duties. Upon consideration of the whole subject, the committee believe the duty should be left as it is at the present time.

Another thing is that it is an article used largely in other manufactures. It is used as a mordant in dyes and for chemical purposes, and the duties upon all the articles that enter into these manufactures have been adjusted as nearly as can be with regard to the duties on other articles used in the same manufactures, and it would be unjust to other industries to single this article out at this time and increase the duty upon it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. This is a subject which has attracted my attention heretofore, and I cannot do better, perhaps, than to recall and reproduce some remarks I made upon it four years ago. I will ask the Clerk to read the passage I have marked in the Congressional Globe

The Clerk read as follows:

There is another intermediary manufacture—that of the chromate and bichromate of potassa—used as a mordant in printing calicoes and in certain classes of wool-dyeing. This article was formerly produced by only one establishment, in the neighborhood of Glasgow, in Scotland, and was sold for 37 cents a pound. A Baltimore gentleman discovered a deposit in Maryland and another in Pennsylvania, and commenced the manufacture of it. The result was that the price to the consumer went down from 37 to 18 cents. There is a duty on it at this time of 3 cents a pound. The original manufacturer is now dead and his sons are carrying on the business. The price in our market is now reduced to 16 cents a pound, with sharp competition between them and their Scotch competitor. The cost of this article nearly all arises from labor, and I am informed that the monthly pay-roll reaches from $6,000 to $8,000, disbursed in a comparatively poor part of the State of Maryland.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, this is not to be classed among the larger productions; but yet it is a very important one. It is limited in its extent partly by its use, but especially by the source from which it is derived. The result of the discovery by this gentleman, the father of the present manufacturers, and the establishment of the manufactory in this country, has been to reduce the article at least one-half in price. The duty that was placed on it at 3 cents was placed on it before the war and has not been raised since, amounting to nearly 16 or 18 per cent.; about one-half of the average rate per cent. on the various articles which are subjected to tariff duties.

As a matter of fact the statement made by the gentleman is not overdrawn. The struggle to keep up this establishment against a foreign rival, supported by much heavier capital and much cheaper labor, has been constant and very great; and if we give what is asked for by the gentleman from Maryland, 4½ cents per pound, it gives a duty of but little more than 25 per cent., which is scarcely two-thirds of the duty that is imposed upon the average products of the foreign market that are imported into this country.

There is no reason which I can see, none whatever, why we should not protect this establishment; because if it were permitted to go to pieces it would put all our printing establishments and all the branches of the dyeing business into the power of a concern which has a monopoly in Europe and which has been striving to secure the monopoly of the world. It is in the interest of competition, it is in the interest of keeping prices down, that this amendment is offered, and I trust that it will prevail.

Mr. DAWES. Now let us have a vote, and I trust that all amendments will be withdrawn except that offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. BURCHARD. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken on Mr. O'BRIEN'S amendment, and there were—ayes 97, noes 33.

Mr. BECK. I believe no quorum voted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is a further count demanded?

Mr. BECK. Yes; I am opposed to raising the tariff 50 per cent. for the benefit of one man.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the gentleman will accept a vote on the amendment in the House, and let it pass in the committee.

Mr. BECK. That is all I want, a vote in the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. Before we go further, I ask unanimous consent to go back for the purpose of striking out a comma, which comes in just like that between fruit and plants, in the thirteenth line on the second page, by which silk twist has got made into two articles by a comma. I move to strike out that comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I move to insert after the amendment last adopted the following:

On mustard packed in any package of less than 30 pounds or in glass or tin, 20 cents per pound.

Mr. Chairman, the duty upon mustard in bulk is to-day 10 cents a pound, and in cases of glass or tin it is 14 cents a pound. The European manufacturers are making it now in cans of a quarter of a pound, and it would cost the American manufacturer, in competing with them, from 4 to 5 cents on the quarter of a pound to make that kind of tin case or glass jar in which to put it. The result of this is that the foreign manufacturer is now engrossing the market almost entirely, and unless we can raise the duty up to about 20 cents a pound the American manufacturer will be entirely excluded.

And it is with that view, in order to put our manufacturers upon an equal footing with the European manufacturers, that I ask that mustard when sold in packages of one-quarter of a pound or anything less than thirty pounds, shall pay a duty of 20 cents a pound instead of 14 cents a pound. If we do not do that, the American manufacturer will be driven entirely out of the market.

Mr. DAWES. In reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TOWNSEND] I have this to say: The moment we branch out upon matters that have not been considered by the Committee on Ways and Means we will be all at sea, and it would take six weeks to get through with this bill. I did not object to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. O'BRIEN,] because that subject had been before the Committee on Ways and Means and examined by us, and at one time we had put it into the bill. That is the reason I did not make a test question upon that amendment, as I do now upon this.

Now, if we take up new matters that have not been considered by the Committee on Ways and Means, we open this tariff bill so wide that we might just as well throw it up to-night and spend no more time upon it. This subject has not been heard before the committee. I ask the Committee of the Whole to decide upon this matter without going into the merits at all, and determine whether they care to have corrected these important matters of errors in the tariff by which $1,500,000 within six or eight months have leaked out of the Treasury upon a clerical construction, and whether they will have made the changes proposed in the internal-revenue law, or whether we will abandon the whole thing, by merely taking up what may be proper in itself but which has not been considered by the Committee on Ways and Means. I do not speak in reference to this particular article, because I am not talking about the merits of the article, but upon the question whether the Committee of the Whole will say they will only alter and modify what the Committee on Ways and Means have brought in here, and which we think is right, or take up new matters that have not even been before the committee.

The question was then taken on the amendment moved by Mr. TOWNSEND, and it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

On nitro-benzole, 10 cents per pound.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I move to insert after the word "benzole" the words "or oil of mirbane." That is another name for the same article. I do not propose to change the duty.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Will the gentleman explain the necessity for this amendment?

Mr. DAWES. It is only a different name for the same thing.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENDALL. I move to insert after the line just read the following:

On crude borax and boracic acid, 5 cents per pound.

I wish to say a word in regard to the amendment which I have offered, and to state why it should be adopted and incorporated into this bill. I will state a few considerations why the amendment should be adopted. According to the present law the duty upon refined borax is 10 cents per pound, while crude borax and boracic acid are admitted free. I am informed that in many of the Atlantic cities crude borax and boracic acid being admitted free, the refined article is manufactured therefrom in our country and comes in direct competition with our own home production.

Now, in regard to the amount of revenue derived from the imposition of a tariff of 10 cents per pound on refined borax, let us see how insignificant it is. The amount of refined borax imported into this country during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873, was in value $2,152, yielding a revenue, at 10 cents per pound, of only $928. The value of boracic acid and crude borax imported during the same period was $21,382. This yielded no revenue.

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman will aid some of us if he will have the goodness to state what amount of borax can be produced on the Pacific coast.

Mr. KENDALL. I will come to that directly. I thank the gentleman for suggesting it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I think there is an impression that practically the production of this article on the Pacific coast has been a failure.

Mr. KENDALL. My amendment proposes to fix a duty of 5 cents per pound upon this article. During 1873 there were imported 131,085 pounds of crude borax, which with a duty of 5 cents per pound would yield a revenue of $6,554.25, instead of the insignificant sum of $980. I am aware that if a duty is imposed upon this article the amount imported will for a time be somewhat less. But I present this as an approximate estimate.

Now in regard to the question proposed by the honorable gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] and which I am very glad to answer. As to the supply of crude borax in our own country, why, sir, it is unlimited. I am surprised that any gentleman should labor under the impression that our domestic supply has been exhausted. My friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] who supports this amendment, knows very well that all over those western plains the supply of crude borax is absolutely inexhaustible. But on account of the high price of labor in our part of the country, coming, as we do, into competition with the manufacturer who takes advantage of the crude article coming to his hand free of duty, we are unable to get our own production to market.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. I would inquire what is the present duty on this article?

Mr. KELLEY. It was put on the free list, evidently in ignorance of the great resources of the borax lakes of California and Nevada. I heartily concur in the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Nevada, [Mr. KENDALL.]

Mr. KASSON. I should like to call attention to the question of revenue as connected with this proposition. When the duty was 5 cents a pound the importation of the article in 1870 was 2,616 pounds; in 1871, 5 pounds. Consequently gentlemen will see how much revenue we should get from this article with the duty at 5 cents a pound.

Mr. KENDALL. In 1873 the importation was over 130,000 pounds.

Mr. KASSON. That was after we had put it on the free list. When the duty was 5 cents a pound we imported practically none of this article.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Committee of the Whole to adhere to the rule adopted when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TOWNSEND] offered his amendment. I do this the more cheerfully because it will be no hardship. I do not see how it can be a hardship to California and Nevada, with mountains of pure borax and lakes of pure boracic acid. When I visited that region of country two or three years ago I was told that right within sight of where I was there was a mountain three miles round composed of pure borax, so that there was nothing to do but to shovel it up, and that one could bathe himself in lakes of pure boracic acid in pure delight. Now I cannot see any reason in the world why our friends over there cannot supply us, when all they have to do is to ladle it up on the one side and to shovel it up on the other. Hence, I do not think it would be any hardship in this case to adhere to the rule not to introduce any new matter.

Mr. KENDALL. Is not the gentleman from Massachusetts aware—I know he must be—of the advanced rates of wages in our portion of the country as compared with the Atlantic region?

Mr. DAWES. I admit there is considerable difference in that respect. These gentlemen want this duty because labor is a great deal higher in this country than it is abroad. But then we ought to consider the abundance of the natural supply in this country. If our friends of the Pacific coast who delight to dig gold much more than to shovel borax had the energy of the Yankees—I say this with no disrespect—they would spread their supply of borax all over the country because, that supply is inexhaustible; and I do not think there is any distressing necessity for our going outside for this article.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. KENDALL, it was not agreed to; there being ayes 33, noes not counted.

The Clerk read as follows:

On tin in plates or sheets, and on terne and tagger's tin, 1¼ cents per pound.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move to amend by striking out "1¼ cents per pound," and inserting "and on the boxes containing the same 1 cent. per pound."

If the Committee of the Whole will give me their attention for a moment, (and I think they will because this is a reduction of duty instead of an increase,) I will say that I offer this amendment at the instance of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TREMAIN,] who is detained from the House to-night by sickness. All the tin we use in this country has to be imported, and the present duty is 15 per cent. ad valorem. But there are difficulties about the importation as we know—conflicts between the importers and the custom-house authorities, out of which have grown some of the troubles in New York within the last year or two. The returns of the imports of tin in 1872 and 1873 show that a duty of 1 cent. a pound will give an increase of over $70,000 a year in the amount of duties. Now, when tin pans and various other articles of this material are used by the workingman, I think it right that this duty should be no higher than 1 cent a pound.

For the purpose of avoiding any trouble between the importers and the custom-house authorities, the amendment contemplates that the boxes shall be weighed and shall pay a duty of 1 cent a pound. With the weight marked on the boxes there can be no trouble between the custom-house authorities and the importers. If the duty be raised to 1¼ cents a pound the result is an increase of duty in the higher priced tin of at least 20 per cent. over the present rates of duty, and on the cheaper qualities of tin 40 or 50 per cent. I do not believe we want to raise the tariff on this article. I know that my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and other gentlemen on that side, when they have a chance for once to vote for a proposition for a reduction of duty coming from a member from Connecticut, will do so. I repeat that in offering this amendment I act as the proxy of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TREMAIN,] who would have offered it if he had been here.

Mr. BURCHARD. The object of the Committee on Ways and Means in inserting this provision in regard to tin is simply to change the ad valorem duty to a specific duty, which shall be as nearly as possible the equivalent. During the last fiscal year we collected from these items enumerated in this provision $2,353,010. There were imported, as the returns show 1,824,576 hundred-weight. A duty of $1.25 the hundred-weight would be lacking about $55,000 of giving that amount of duty. The committee first considered whether they should make the duty $1.25 a hundred-weight. One cent per pound would fall short of giving the same duty about $300,000. The boxes, as I am informed by a leading importer in this trade, numbered about 1,400,000, averaging about 5 pounds per box. The duties on the boxes would be about $70,000 only. Adding the boxes at one cent per pound, it would fall short over $200,000. Making it 1¼ cents gives a little gain. The exact equivalent would be about $1.15, or a little over that. While we were complying with the request of the trade and the request of the importers and manufacturers of the country when we were changing an ad valorem to a specific duty, and that was the only object we should not allow the revenue to fall short of the amount now received, especially when we are lacking money. These were the reasons which influenced the committee in fixing this rate.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BECK. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "1¼" and inserting "1 cent."

Mr. KELLOGG. That is my amendment. I make it 1 cent per pound including boxes.

Mr. BECK. I make it 10 per cent. for boxes then instead of 5. I was the only one of the committee who voted against 1¼. I thought 1 cent, with 1 per cent. added for boxes, would be the exact equivalent of the duty we now obtain. I had it made out by a man of uncommon intelligence, and I believe in the statement he makes.

By the latest importations of tin plates, that is for the last seven months, according to the statistics furnished by the Bureau of Statistics for the seven months ending January 31, 1874, that is from the beginning of the fiscal year to the end of the month of January last, the total importations of tin plates, net weight, were 114,112,320 pounds, of which the foreign value was $6,689,569, and the duty collected at 15 per cent., $1,003,435. The above importations at a specific rate of duty of 1 cent per pound gross, including boxes, would be total net weight 114,112,320 pounds; adding 5 per cent. for boxes, 5,705,516 pounds, would make a total gross weight of 119,817,836 pounds, which, at 1 cent per pound, is $1,198,178, or an increase of $194,743.

Mr. BURCHARD. What is that 5 per cent. upon?

Mr. BECK. Upon the whole amount.

Mr. BURCHARD. Five per cent. upon the boxes—upon the valuation of the boxes?

Mr. BECK. Upon the value of the tin itself.

Mr. BURCHARD. You have an ad valorem and a specific duty combined.

Mr. BECK. No, sir; I add 5 per cent. to the net weight of the tin for boxes.

Mr. DAWES. Then I understand you add the percentage of the whole for the boxes.

Mr. BECK. Certainly; 5 per cent. of the tin for boxes. When you add that to the amount of tin it makes the gross weight.

Mr. DAWES. Then you have this difficulty, that you cannot ascertain the weight of the tin until it is out of the boxes.

Mr. BECK. You know the weight from the invoices from abroad.

Mr. DAWES. That opens it up to the frauds we have been hearing about.

Mr. BECK. You get all your invoices from abroad. At 1 cent per pound and 5 per cent. of the weight of the tin for boxes, the increase of revenue on the proposition of the gentleman from Connecticut which I advocate would be $194,743 over what we have had at 15 per cent.

Mr. DAWES. I will state what influenced the committee to recommend 1¼ cents per pound. A specific duty brings less revenue from that which enters into every-day wear, such as tins and milk-pans, which are made of a higher quality of tin. But the poorer and cheaper tin pays the same duty. Now, that is just the reverse of what ordinarily happens. The poor man gets the duty lower on his tin by the specific duty than the rich man, a thing which scarcely happens in anything else. But on the question of whether it shall be 1 cent or 1¼ cents the committee find that if it were put at 1 cent we should not get so much revenue as we get this year. It is said by the importers of tin that this year tin is higher than it has been for years past. That may be true, but there is no promise that it will be lower after this year. I think that the difference between 1 cent, which will lose us some $200,000 of revenue, and 1¼ cents, which will give us less than $100,000 more, the importers of tin ought to be reconciled to, and say not a word against it, when we relieve them from all the complications of the old tariff by this operation and give them the simple mode of merely paying 1¼ cents on every pound that they import. This trouble, which is illustrated in the moiety case, where $271,000 penalty was paid for not conforming to the law as to $1,600 worth of duties, all arose out of the complication and difficulty of conforming to the very many requirements of that law. Now all that is done away with, and yet these tin men want us to come a little below the present duty. The Committee on Ways and Means thought they could afford to come a little over it if they had all this conceded to them, and that more than anything else induced the committee to adhere to this proposition. Suppose the Committee on Ways and Means should continue the present complicated tariff, which involves them in all these difficulties and these reproaches; but instead of that they are required to pay only 1½ cents duty, little more than the price paid heretofore. I hope, therefore, that the Committee of the Whole will adhere to this duty of 1½ cents per pound.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLOGG. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BECK.]

The CHAIRMAN. Such an amendment is not in order, as there are two amendments pending.

Mr. BECK. I withdraw the amendment to enable the gentleman from Connecticut to renew it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I renew the amendment for the sake of saying a few words upon this question, if the committee will hear me for a moment. I think the Committee on Ways and Means have done well in making this a specific duty; but the trouble is that they put it from 20 to 40 per cent. higher than the existing duty, if you take the average for the last three years.

Several MEMBERS. O, no.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have the figures, computed by as good an accountant as there is in New York, and if you go back three years, an average of 1 cent a pound will yield you $70,000 more duty than you get now.

Now, for the purpose of simplification we say, put the duty at 1 cent a pound box and all; and then there can be no question between the importers and the custom-house authorities. If you put the duty at 1 cent on box and all, I have the figures to prove beyond question that you will get more revenue than you get now, you will make it more simple and you will not put an additional duty on the consumers all over the country; and the consumers are more interested on this question than the importers. I now withdraw the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, and call for a vote on my original amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. Not until I have opposed it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Very well; I will wait until the gentleman opposes it.

Mr. KELLEY. In 1872 the duty on tin was 25 per cent. The importers of tin then came and convinced the Committee on Ways and Means in the House that it should be reduced to 15 per cent. They now come and ask not only that it be modified to a specific duty, to relieve them from the troubles and embarrassments to which the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has alluded, but they agreed in terms with the committee that the duty should be so adjusted as to compensate fully for the 15 per cent. ad valorem, and the committee prepared this bill in accordance with that agreement. Now, having had the duty reduced from 25 to 15 per cent., and having themselves shown what would be equivalent to the 15 per cent., they come into the House and are attempting to effect a further reduction. I think it unfair and inequitable, and hope that as the gentleman from Connecticut withdraws his amendment the committee will sustain the provision as reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. KELLOGG. I withdraw the amendment originally offered by the gentleman from Kentucky and which I renewed, and now call for a vote on the amendment which I offered originally to put the duty at 1 cent a pound including the boxes.

The question was taken on the amendment; and on a division there were—ayes 80, noes 99.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WOODFORD. I offer the following amendment:

After line 13, insert the following:

On steel in ingots, bars, coils, sheets, and steel wire of all sizes, 2½ cents per pound.

Mr. Chairman, I desire the attention of the committee for one moment, and I will endeavor to be as compact and concise in the statement that I seek to make to the House as possible. At present the duty on steel, which is largely a raw material in our varied manufactures, is partly specific and partly ad valorem. Steel that is worth 7 or less than 7 cents per pound pays 2½ cents duty, less 10 per cent. Steel that is worth between 7 and 11 cents per pound pays 3 cents per pound with a reduction of 10 per cent. Steel that is worth over 11 cents per pound pays 3½ cents per pound with an addition of 10 per cent. ad valorem, and then a reduction of 10 per cent. upon the gross amount.

Now, sir, after a very careful examination of this question it is found not possible to collect this revenue, as it is now paid, without great possibilities of fraud. The temptation to this is continuous. A class of customs officers largely skilled and very acute are rendered necessary. From the very moment the importation is ordered on the other side until it has passed the custom-house here the door is open to fraud. In place of that there should be a specific duty.

Now, let me state a little of that which has fallen within my own personal knowledge. Steel comes here mostly in bars. Take the bars of the two higher classes, those which range between 7 and 11 cents on the one hand and over 11 on the other. Break these bars with a sudden blow, allow the granulated edges only to be seen, place the two classes together, and there is no living expert who can tell which steel is worth from 7 to 11 and which is worth over 11. Whether you will or not, you have got to rely upon the oath of the importer, upon the consular certificate, and upon the proof of the market value upon the other side. These opportunities for fraud should be done away, and a specific duty should be placed on the article.

Now, what specific duty should be put there? The importation is about 50,000,000 pounds per annum. At 2 cents per pound, which was the amendment moved yesterday by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] the revenue would be about $1,000,000. That is less than the revenue which we now collect, and therefore we cannot afford to fix the duty at that figure. At 2½ cents per pound upon the entire importation we should get $1,125,000, which is but a trifle more than we now get. At 2½ cents per pound the revenue would be $1,250,000, which is from $125,000 to $130,000 more than we get at the present time.

If you are laying your tariff in the interest of protection, then protect the capital and labor which are engaged in this industry. Let me call the attention of the committee to a few figures on this point.

The census of 1870 shows that at that time there were employed in the production of steel in this country about 2,400 men, and in the manufacture of tools and articles that are made from steel there were employed 13,521 men. The capital invested in production of steel was $6,000,000, and in the manufacture of tools made from steel $16,000,000.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CROOKE. I take the floor for the purpose——

Mr. MAYNARD. Before the gentleman takes his seat I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. CROOKE. I yield my time to my colleague, [Mr. WOODFORD.]

Mr. DAWES. I do not want to interrupt my friend, but if he goes on in that way and takes ten minutes to advocate his amendment he will entirely pervert the rule and make it necessary to have ten minutes to oppose it.

Mr. CROOKE. Have I a right to the floor?

Mr. DAWES. As this is an important matter——

Mr. CROOKE. It is so important a matter that I take the floor for the purpose of yielding my time to my colleague, [Mr. WOODFORD;] otherwise I would not do it.

Mr. DAWES. I will not insist upon the rule now.

Mr. WOODFORD. I thank my colleague [Mr. CROOKE] and the members of the committee for their courtesy. Allow me to go on one moment with the chain of my argument and then I will close. This matter of tariff would work in this way: To-day American steel sells at 15½ cents per pound and English steel costs nearly 20 cents per pound. The difference in favor of American steel is almost 5 cents per pound. Then why is English steel required? Because for certain tools, for certain articles, for some axes, for certain kinds of saws, and for those industries which employ so many laborers all over our land, the English steel at the higher price is to-day required in the American market. And when we lay this tariff of 3½ cents per pound and then place 10 per cent. ad valorem duty upon that, and then go through the mathematical problem of taking off 10 per cent. of the whole, you will go far toward demoralizing and disorganizing that branch of American industry. To-day we are making at Cohoes, in New York, tools that undersell the Sheffield manufactures in Australia. We are making axes that undersell Sheffield axes all over the world. The head of the ax is made of American iron, while the edge is most generally made of English steel. This is part and parcel of the industry of our country, and in behalf of that great industry, in behalf of that American enterprise which would enable us to sell our products all over the world and to compete successfully with English products, I ask this committee here and now to do justice on the one hand to the steel consumers, and upon the other to shut the door against the giant possibility of fraud under the ad valorem system.

Mr. MAYNARD. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOODFORD] now answer my question? He has stated, and stated very truly, that by the eye the quality of steel cannot be determined; but does he not know that there is a test of the different qualities of steel that is indisputable? I mean the test of fire; and it is a test very easily made by one who knows anything about steel.

Mr. WOODFORD. Precisely; and were it possible to erect forges in every custom-house; were it possible to kindle a fire that ought to burn out the corruptions of the custom-houses, we might test alike the steel and the steal. We have tested it a good deal in a good many ways, spell it as you will. We cannot have the fire; we do have the custom-house frauds. Now, let us have a tariff under which we cannot have the frauds we have had. Let us do what we can to substitute specific for ad valorem duties.

Mr. MAYNARD. How much fire would it take to operate a blowpipe to test the quality of steel?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAWES. Pro forma, I move to make the duty 2½ cents.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I desire now to enter my protest against gentlemen obtaining the floor to oppose an amendment and then yielding to gentlemen who advocate the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will enforce the rule; he has only indulged gentlemen by the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. DAWES. I see the necessity of enforcing the rule, although it is pretty hard to answer these objections in five minutes.

When this matter was before the Committee of the Whole yesterday I stated the reasons which had induced the Committee on Ways and Means to postpone this question of the duties on steel by keeping it out of this bill. There are a great many views to be taken of this question which the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOODFORD] in his brief examination of it has not, I fear, considered. In the face of the gentleman's statement that the quality of American steel is so poor that it cannot be used for edge tools it was demonstrated before the Committee on Ways and Means that of the edge tools manufactured in this country about three-fourths of them are made from American steel.

There is another thing which the gentleman does not seem to have taken into account. He proposes to put all the steel that now pays 2 cents a pound up to 2½ cents. Of all the steel coming into this country about three-fourths is the low grades of steel paying 2 cents. The gentleman proposes to add to those grades of steel ½ cent a pound. Now, all the low grades of steel, both foreign and American, enter into the every-day use of the people of this country; enter into all the farming utensils of the country; enter into all the use and consumption of steel in the country except that of the highest quality. So that the gentleman's proposition is not only to put an increased duty upon the lower grades of steel, but to raise consequently and necessarily the price of the lower grades of American steel. Every farmer's hoe and plow and pitchfork—I wish my friend from New York [Mr. COX] were here to talk about this matter—will be raised in price by this proposition. Now, while it is true that up to this time certain branches of manufacture have demanded and must have the highest quality of imported steel whatever may be the cost, that is not a general truth, applying to all branches of manufacture.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman mean to say that adding to the duty upon an article necessarily increases its price?

Mr. DAWES. I mean to say that it does in the first instance increase the price of an article to put a duty upon it; and I mean to say also that by holding the duty there, if it be an article that can be manufactured in this country, the ultimate result will be to bring it down. At the same time I mean to say that within the last ten years, under the fostering care of our tariff laws, American steel has advanced from one-tenth part of the consumption of the country until to-day it is four-fifths or seven-eighths of that consumption. Ten or fifteen years ago hardly a tithe of the steel consumed in this country was made here.

But the immediate effect of the proposition of my friend from New York is to add just the amount of the increased duty to the price of every article that the farmer and the mechanic of this country use, while on the highest qualities of steel—on the razor and that species of steel—the duty will be reduced. So that there are a great many sides to this question.

I beg the House to take another view of this subject. Suppose that we to-day change the whole system of our tariff on this large industry, leaving other industries, for want of time or care or disposition, as they are. By thus singling out this one industry and bringing down the duty, you put it to struggling with all other industries which continue at existing rates. This to my mind is a very strong objection to taking up this particular industry when there is no disposition to take up all the industries of the country and treat them all alike—lifting them all up or lowering them all together. That was the philosophy of the 10 per cent. reduction two years ago. It treated all these industries alike. It let them all down gently just 10 per cent. and no more. [Here the hammer fell.] I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to state to the committee, Mr. Chairman, that a large majority of the steel consumers of the country have petitioned this House in favor of the maintenance of the present tariff on steel. Their petition was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. It embraced signatures of manufacturers of steel into commodities from nearly all the States in which such manufacture is conducted. Why was this? Why, it is because the development of steel-making in this country under a protective tariff has cheapened their material to a rate below what they had been getting it from England or what they can now get it for. It has given them a supply of the various qualities right at their own door. It was in testimony before the committee from many sources that the best class of American steel is superior to the best class of English steel. It was said and circumstantially shown that our American product encounters prejudice and has been condemned by workmen when sent into the shop as American steel, but when it had been salted so as to make it rusty and a British label had been put upon it, it was pronounced the best steel the same workmen had ever worked. Protection is needed against our own prejudice.

Now, the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOODFORD,] as the chairman of the committee has shown, would add 50 per cent. to the duty upon the lowest grade of steel. It would derange the entire industry in the production of steel, by removing all protection from the higher grades by reducing the duty from 3 cents per pound and 10 per cent. to 2½ cents, and raising the duty on the lower grades from 2 to 2½ cents. The Committee on Ways and Means heard all parties on this subject and found it was difficult to decide. Their conclusion was that wisdom, duty to the industries of the country, duty to the public revenue, required them to omit it from this bill and give it more deliberate consideration.

I ask the Committee of the Whole to free themselves from the magnetic influence of the eloquent gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOODFORD,] and decide again as they did deliberately yesterday, that the Committee on Ways and Means acted wisely in handling with consideration an interest, or whole groups of interests, so important to the industries of the country, so important to its revenues.

Sir, the iron trade is very sadly depressed at this time. In the whole history of Pennsylvania there have never been so many unemployed men at one time as now. Ralroad construction has been abandoned and the numerous rail-mills of the country, most of them, are standing idle. Of the forges and furnaces in Pennsylvania more than one-third are blown out and standing idle.

You gentlemen of Illinois, I ask you what of the iron and steel works at Joliet, in your own State? The city of Joliet gave them the land and the people contributed funds to induce them to embark their capital there. Three million dollars are there and no dollar of it productively engaged. The mills are standing idle. The mines from which the ore came, the quarries from which the limestone for the flux was taken are unworked, and the body of skilled men thus attracted to your prairies are seeking employment elsewhere, or seeking public land upon which to compete with the farmer in further overstocking the depressed market for grain.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman withdraws the amendment and I renew it. I approach the consideration of this question, Mr. Chairman, from a different point of view from that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.] It is a question of more interest to me, perhaps, than any other question which is touched in this bill, because the industry affected is fundamental, and the use of the product of that industry is almost universal in all the industries of the country, from the prairie to the crowded city.

I did believe, Mr. Chairman, and do still believe in the desirability of a specific duty. I did believe in our ability upon the data in our possession to provide a specific duty which would be just to all the interests of the country. I do not believe to-day, upon the evidence yet submitted to the committee, that we are able to do justice to the consuming interests of the country by arranging a specific duty in the manner proposed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOODFORD.] There has always been a certain proportion preserved or attempted to be preserved between the duty upon the raw material and the duty upon the finished material in the way of tools. And, therefore, a specific duty upon the raw material deranges that proportion absolutely, without any knowledge on the part of the House as to the effect that is going to be produced. I desire myself a reduction of the duty on steel. I cannot up to to-night find a basis on which we can do justice on the one hand to the manufacturing interests, and on the other to the consuming interests, and until that basis is found I dare not act. If we raise to-night the duty on the low qualities of steel that enter into plows, hoes, and other agricultural implements, how shall we explain to the people of the West satisfactorily the reasons for that conduct? The lower-priced steels need less protection as a manufacturing industry than the high grades. If, on the other hand, you reduce the high grades, without knowing the proportion as to all the grades that enter into agricultural implements and the other great industries of the country, how will you be able to satisfy in turn that industry and the consumers of the products of that industry? I have only to say that I have shrunk from carrying out my own wishes from the simple fact that I dare not, upon the evidence before the committee now, propose a specific rate that shall be just to the consumers of steel, even irrespective of the interests of the manufacturers.

I go further, and I dare not strike down the duty so low as to destroy an American industry, for the reason that if I must be a slave to a monopoly I will be a slave to an American monopoly in preference to a foreign one. I have one duty from my point of view in the adjustment of the tariff, and that is to so adjust it that competition is promoted and not destroyed. You destroy it in either of two ways: you destroy competition when you make your duty so high that no foreign steel or other product can be imported; you also destroy competition, and I beg gentlemen to mark that, when you put your duty so low that your American industry is destroyed. Consequently, my whole study in the adjustment of the tariff question is to so arrange it that we do not prohibit the introduction of any article and do not prohibit the manufacture in America of that same article if it is within our power to manufacture it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I rise to oppose the amendment, and call for a vote.

Mr. DAWES. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken upon Mr. WOODFORD'S amendment; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. KENDALL. I offer the following amendment, to come in after the line last read:

On crude borax and boracic acid, 3 cents per pound.

I ask the attention of the committee for one moment while I endeavor to explain to gentlemen the necessity of this amendment, so far as one of the local industries in my district is concerned as well as an important interest in the State of California.

I understood from the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means that this question of the tariff upon crude borax and boracic acid was not considered in the committee. Am I correct in that?

Mr. DAWES. If I did state it my statement was not precisely accurate. We did hear one gentleman from California on that subject.

Mr. KENDALL. I want to state that if the subject was not fully considered in the Committee on Ways and Means it was no fault of mine; it was no fault of a single member of the whole California delegation, and we ought not to be cut off here without at least a hearing. Why, sir, there was a most respectful letter—a petition—addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, signed by every Member and Delegate from the Pacific States and Territories, asking that a tariff of 5 cents per pound be levied on this article. An amendment to that effect has been voted down. I ask now and ask urgently that the committee will consider the condition of that industry and grant what we now ask, a tariff of 3 cents per pound.

Sir, all over that western country, in my own State at least, there are large deposits—fields of this crude borax; but on account of the high price of labor we cannot enter into competition with the manufacturers in the eastern cities who import boracic acid free and manufacture it here and come directly in competition with our own producers.

Now, sir, I hope that gentlemen will consider that we who are presumed to know somewhat of our constituencies have petitioned for a tariff of 5 cents per pound, and I ask now for a tariff of 3 cents. Not only was this petition presented to the Committee on Ways and Means, but I presume there are on file with the clerk of that committee many and many letters from private parties, and from various companies engaged in the business in that country, asking for a similar duty.

Mr. COTTON. What percentage would this proposed tax be?

Mr. KENDALL. At 3 cents per pound it would be about 12 per cent. ad valorem.

Sir, if this important industry of my district is to be crippled because the committee refuse this small item which we so urgently ask, I shall be very sorry indeed.

Why, sir, the revenue derived from refined borax at a duty of 10 cents per pound, as I said when I was up before, amounts to the insignificant sum of $928.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KENDALL. Is my time up? I have watched the clock very closely and do not think I have spoken five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman is keeping the time instead of the Chair——

Mr. KENDALL. I have observed the time pretty closely to-night, and have noticed that the Chair has sometimes allowed members to run on for nearly ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. KENDALL] that he has not permitted any gentleman to-night to speak ten minutes or to go beyond five minutes, except to close a sentence.

Mr. KENDALL. They were extremely long sentences then.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada had spoken five minutes when the hammer fell.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. KENDALL, and upon a division there were—ayes 51, noes 67.

Mr. KENDALL. I ask permission to have the yeas and nays in the House on this amendment. It proposes only a 10 per cent. ad valorem duty.

Mr. DAWES. I have no objection to the gentleman having the yeas and nays on his amendment in the House.

Mr. DUELL. I move to insert after the line last read the following:

On teazles, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

I admit that this is a small interest, but it is one which has heretofore received protection at the hands of Congress. By the tariff act of 1842 and the tariff act of 1846 teazles were subjected to a duty of 20 per cent., and under all the subsequent tariffs to a duty of 10 per cent., until 1872, when for the first time it was placed upon the free list. In my district there are some two hundred or three hundred farmers who are engaged in raising this article, which is invaluable to the manufacturers of cloth. It is used for the purpose of raising a nap on the cloth. In consequence of the duty being taken off this article, the farmers who in my district have been engaged in the raising of teazles have been compelled to stop their production, and at this time the manufacturing interests of this country are supplied almost entirely by importation from abroad.

I will say further, that at the commencement of this session I introduced a bill and had it referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, asking that a specific duty should be placed on this article. It has therefore been before that committee and is not liable to the objection raised by the chairman [Mr. DAWES] to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. TOWNSEND,] which he was opposed to considering or allowing to go upon the bill because it had not been considered by the Committee on Ways and Means. This has been before the committee.

Mr. DAWES. I hope we will have a vote on this amendment. It is a matter which has never been considered by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. KENDALL. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman is to have a vote in the House on his amendment, and I hope he will not press his motion that the committee rise. I want to say to gentlemen that this is the last night we can control for the consideration of this bill.

The motion of Mr. KENDALL was not agreed to.

Mr. STONE. I move to insert the following after the last line read:

On sheet steel, 2½ cents per pound.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

On anchovies and sardines, packed in oil or otherwise, in tin boxes: 15 cents per whole box, measuring not more than five inches long, four inches wide, and three and one-half inches deep; 7½ cents for each half-box, measuring not more than five inches long, four inches wide, and one and one-half inches deep; and 4 cents for each quarter-box, measuring not more than four inches and three-quarters long, three and one-half inches wide, and one and one-eighth inches deep; when imported in any other form, 60 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BECK. I move to insert after the paragraph just read the following:

That hereafter one-third of the duties on imports may be paid in legal-tender notes.

Mr. DAWES. I believe that amendment is not germane to this bill. I beg my colleague on the committee [Mr. BECK] not to insist upon that amendment now.

Mr. BECK. Well, I will withdraw it.

The Clerk read the following:

SEC. 5. That yellow sheathing metal and yellow metal bolts of which the component part of chief value is copper shall be deemed manufactures of copper, and shall pay the duty now prescribed by law for manufactures of copper.

Mr. KELLOGG. I desire to offer an amendment to this section, and I will not make any speech if the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] will say it is all right.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the gentleman will permit us to correct the phraseology of this section.

Mr. KELLOGG. My amendment is to add to the section that which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That any person or party exporting metals, rolled, sheet, or in the form of wire, to the Dominion of Canada, to be there used in the manufacture of articles, shall be entitled to receive back the scraps of the same metal so exported free of duty to an amount not exceeding one-half the weight of the metal so exported; the export of the metal and the import of such scraps to be made through the same custom-house, and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Ways and Means have considered that amendment, and it is all right.

Mr. KELLOGG. I call for a vote.

Mr. BECK. I rise to oppose the amendment, and as a portion of my remarks I ask the Clerk to read a letter which I send to his desk. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] who was obliged to leave yesterday by order of the House, requested me, when this section was reached in Committee of the Whole, to have this letter read for him.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

NEW YORK, May 25, 1874.

SIR: In the amendatory tariff bill now with the Committee of Ways and Means we observe there is a section pertaining to yellow sheathing metal, in which it is proposed to make the duty on it the same as that now prescribed by law for manufactures of copper.

The duty on manufactures of copper is 45 per cent. ad valorem. At this rate the duty on yellow sheathing metal would be 7¾ cents, gold; the foreign cost being 8¾ pence.

The duty on yellow sheathing metal according to the present law is 3 cents, gold, per pound, less 10 per cent. This rate furnishes a measure of protection to the domestic manufacturer, and at the same time permits the importation and use of foreign manufactures when desired; but to advance the duty to the equivalent of 7¾ cents per pound would render the importation entirely prohibitory except in bond, and is an additional burden imposed on the commercial and shipping interest of the United States, which are already in a state of depression, rendering it most impolitic and unjust to impose any new burden of this kind.

We are your obedient servants,

GRINNELL, MINTURN & CO.

Hon. S. S. COX,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Ways and Means have considered the particular matter referred to in that letter, and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] has an amendment which will meet their case.

The question was taken by a viva voce vote on the amendment moved by Mr. KELLOGG; and

The CHAIRMAN announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FIELD. I call for a division upon this question.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Committee on Ways and Means have all agreed to it. What in the world do you want a division for?

Mr. FIELD. I will tell the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is dividing, and debate is not in order.

Mr. DAWES. I can state in one word what this amendment amounts to.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. DAWES. It only applies to the brass that is taken out of the country. It is to let in without paying another duty the scraps of the very brass which we have already paid one duty on.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. That will open a wide door to fraud.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is simply getting back our own metal to work it over again.

The CHAIRMAN. This debate is all out of order. The committee is dividing on the amendment.

The question being taken, there were on a division—ayes 78, noes 39; no quorum voting.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask for a further count.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MAYNARD and Mr. KELLOGG were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported ayes 63, noes not counted.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will not insist on a further count. I will offer the amendment in a modified form.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I move to amend by adding to section 5 the following:

And shall be entitled to the drawback allowed by law to copper composition metal whenever the same shall be used in the construction or equipment or repair of vessels built in the United States for the purpose of being employed in the foreign trade, including the trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States.

Mr. DAWES. That puts this article on a level with all the others, in exact accordance with the letter just read at the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to amend by inserting the following:

On jute butts, $6 per ton.

I do not care to debate this question. The committee stands 10 to 1 in favor of it. I ask for a vote.

Mr. KASSON. I have prepared an amendment similar to that, which I propose to offer at the proper place.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move to amend by adding to the fifth section the following:

Provided, That any person or party exporting brass, or metal made partly of copper, rolled, sheet, or in the form of wire, to the Dominion of Canada, to be there used in the manufacture of articles, shall be entitled to receive back the scrap of the same metal so exported free of duty to an amount not exceeding one-half of the weight of the metal so exported, the export of the metal and the import of such scrap to be made through the same custom-house and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. That is the same proposition we have already voted down.

Mr. KELLOGG. I beg my friends to hear me for just two minutes. There is no cheat or anything of that kind in this amendment.

Mr. FIELD. I raise the point of order that this is precisely the same amendment that has already been voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The form of the amendment has been modified.

Mr. KELLOGG. If my friends of the committee will hear me for a few moments, I think I can satisfy them that this amendment ought to pass. For the last three or four years our manufacturers of rolled and sheet brass have opened a trade with Canada; and that country admits all rolled and sheet brass for the purpose of being manufactured into other articles free of duty, precisely as such metal is admitted from England. Now the trouble is that wherever we sell this rolled brass or sheet-brass to be made into articles of manufacture, we have to take back the scrap, which amounts to one-third or one-half.

A MEMBER. Make it one-third.

Mr. KELLOGG. Well, I will modify the amendment by inserting "one-third" instead of "one-half." The proportion runs from one-third to one-half. It depends on the article manufactured. In order to get back this scrap from the Canadian manufacturers, precisely as we do from the manufacturers in New York or in any other State of the Union, we want such a provision as this. At present we are required to pay duty upon our own brass when it is returned to us as scrap from where it is manufactured. The difficulty which we encounter in this respect is what prevents us from competing with the English manufacturers. If you want to encourage the manufacturers of brass in your own country, for Heaven's sake give them this chance to bring back their own scrap free of duty as they would from New York or any other State. This is in accordance with the principle embodied in section 7 of this bill, where you provide that casks, barrels, carboys, grain-bags, and anything else in which our own goods are exported, may be brought back free of duty. We simply ask that this scrap may return free, to be worked over again.

Mr. BURCHARD. Why should not the gentleman make it a general proposition?

Mr. KELLOGG. If we may make it a general proposition it may open a door to fraud, so that scrap copper may be brought from Europe or some other country. This amendment prescribes that this scrap shall come back through the same custom-house at which the export was made, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, the quantity not to exceed one-third of the amount of the original shipment.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know in what particular interest the gentleman from Connecticut makes this proposition; but I do know it is to furnish Canadian manufacturers with sheets and wire to that extent that they may make implements in the Dominion of Canada which they refuse to receive without prohibitory tariff from the United States. Now they will admit our copper sheets and our wire free of duty that they may manufacture it there, that they may have it there to compete with any articles we may send into Canada. The gentleman knows they lay a prohibitory duty on that as well as every other manufacture in the United States they can make themselves.

Mr. KELLOGG. We suffer for it because we make all that sort of goods.

Mr. CONGER. That is one objection to it. Here is another. Who can tell the scrap left is the same exported? Does it not open the way for the introduction of one-third at least of the importations to come back again in the shape of scrap copper wherever that copper came from? There is no doubt about that. The gentleman cannot identify the little remnants which are left. It would come back here like the five loaves and two fishes after the seven thousand had been fed—there would be many baskets full.

Mr. KELLOGG. It comes back from the same custom-house, from the same party, under the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move to strike out the last word in order to call attention to the modification which has been made of the amendment.

I hold in my hand the original draught which we voted down a little while ago and which reads thus:

Provided, That any person or party exporting metals, rolled, sheet, or in the form of wire, to the Dominion of Canada to be there used for the manufacture of articles, &c.

It now reads as modified, "that any person or party exporting brass or metal made partly of copper, rolled, sheet, or in the form of wire," &c. The statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means when it was up before was that this was to be limited to brass.

Mr. DAWES. That is what I supposed it was.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suppose it was so represented to the gentleman. There is evidently a cat in this meal-tub which has not been drawn out. The singular manner in which this amendment was drawn in the first instance, with the statements in connection with it, and then the peculiar manner of amending it does not commend it to my judgment as a piece of wise legislation. I think we ought to take more time to consider it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to know from the gentleman from Tennessee where his cat is?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. KELLOGG's amendment was rejected.

Mr. MYERS. I move the following amendment:

That section 4 of the act entitled "An act to reduce duties on imports and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1872, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the thirtieth paragraph of said section in relation to the duty on Moisic iron; and from and after the passage of this act the duty on Moisic iron, of whatever condition, grade, or stage of manufacture, shall be the same as on all other species of iron of like condition, grade, or stage of manufacture.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the committee while I explain this amendment. In the act of 1872 I find on Moisic iron, made from sand ore, a duty of $15 per ton. This Moisic iron is found in Lower Canada and nowhere else, in black-sand ore. It is almost pure iron. There are estimated about 15,000,000 tons of it deposited there. As I have said, it is almost pure iron, so that it can be molded like wrought iron. It is almost pure iron, so that it can be molded and is malleable and it only needs one process, while other iron takes two; nature has advanced it as it were by one stage. A company which owns this property came here in 1872 and got through the House a provision placing the duty on this iron at $8 a ton. In the Senate it was found that there was something wrong, and it was put up to $15 per ton. Now, it is just like bloom iron, which is $20 a ton, and if this is allowed to stand in the law, this company which already has an advantage by which it can make iron cheaper than any other iron can be made, because two tons of this sand ore will make one ton of wrought iron, and there is less labor in it, it is granulated or sand iron—this company will have a monopoly over all others, foreign as well as domestic. I shall ask the Committee on Ways and Means whether I am not right in this statement, that if the duty is left as low as it is now, at $15 a ton, then with less labor the pure ore can be made into blooms and will come in here at $15 a ton, or $5.16 a ton less than bloom iron? Bloom iron is $20.16 a ton, and this is only $15 a ton. That is, there is an advantage of $5.16 over all other iron in this manufactory. I have drawn this section so that it will place it upon a par with other iron ore advanced to the same stage; and I call for a vote on it.

Mr. DAWES. I will just state that the alarm of the gentleman is altogether unnecessary; that at the very rate he has taken alarm at there has not been a single pound imported. The duty is entirely prohibitory, so that it is utterly impossible to bring in a single ton.

Mr. KELLEY. If the chairman of the committee will permit me, I will state that, though it may be true that none has been brought in, nevertheless here stands upon our statute-book a provision that iron made from one particular mine shall have an advantage over iron made from any other mine in the United States or elsewhere. The works are just ready to go into operation. The mine is at the mouth of the Moisic River, in Lower Canada, and the company organized are in the interior of New York, and their works are just being completed. Moisic sand is cast in one of the old-style furnaces, drips through, and by a squeeze is made into a bloom. It is equal to the highest grade of bloom iron made from rock ore in the world. There is a specimen here on the desk of my colleague, and the iron-makers present may examine it. There is no iron made from rock ore in the United States that is equal to it, and we have given to this one company a monopoly against all the world, foreign and domestic, and such a law should be stricken from our statute-book.

Mr. DAWES. Let me just state what the reason of this statute was, and then the committee may do what they please with the amendment, as of course they have the power to do. What the gentleman from Pennsylvania says is true. Here is a specimen of the iron. It was thought by the committee who made the tariff two years ago that inasmuch as nature had in this particular case set up its own forge and had advanced this iron one stage, it was quite worth while for us to have the advantage of what the Lord had done to this iron, and so they tried the experiment of putting it at the rate which iron of that quality was at. The rate is $15 a ton, and it has proved prohibitory.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that these people in New York who own this iron which the Lord has made to this extent have just completed their works. The fact is that they got them done two or three years ago, and this tariff has proved prohibitory so that it has finished them up.

Now, I do not care whether you put in this section or leave it out. The duty of $15 a ton has finished up the works. Not a pound of this iron has been imported, and cannot be, and the works have gone where the woodbine twineth. I pray the committee not to spend much time about this matter, but either to put it in or leave it out.

Mr. KELLEY. I hope we shall strike it out.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman thinks that this is a production which the Lord has made especially for the Canadians.

Mr. DAWES. No; but for us and for all mankind.

Mr. CONGER. This is a pulverized black oxide iron of the same kind that exists in the mountains of Michigan and Missouri. There is no special work of the Lord about it. Now I want to say that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means two years ago brought in a bill putting this kind of iron, which is a very pure iron, as has been stated, at $6 a ton, only $1 a ton more than pig-iron.

Mr. DAWES. The chairman of the committee brought in a bill which had a good many queer things in it.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman did; I attribute it then to youthful ignorance, but he ought to know better now.

Mr. DAWES. I will say to my friend that it was not in the bill originally, but an outsider put it in.

Mr. KELLEY. It slipped in after debate had closed and there was no chance for anybody to open his head about it.

Mr. CONGER. The committee permitted it to come in.

Mr. DAWES. O, no; the House put it in.

Mr. CONGER. It got in in the House at $8 a ton.

Mr. DAWES rose.

Mr. CONGER. It is of all things the strangest in the world to me that my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is so opposed to receiving valuable information. Those who are interested in protecting the iron of Michigan and Missouri and other iron of like quality, even my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] the hero of the iron interest, failed to see this. But several of us followed the matter to the Senate and there succeeded in getting the duty raised to $15 per ton. This is a purer and better iron than is made from any ores. I am told a large quantity of it has been imported into the United States, although I am not certain of it. I think it ought to be placed on the list with the very best quality of iron imported, and I join with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] in the hope that this amendment will be adopted.

The question was taken upon the amendment moved by Mr. MYERS; and upon a division there were—ayes 94, noes 30; no quorum voting.

Mr. ROBBINS. I call for a further count.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, and a further count being called for, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. DAWES. If the gentleman will withdraw his call for a further count I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. ROBBINS. The gentleman can submit the motion that the committee rise pending the call for a further count.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee rose; and Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. TYNER reported that, in pursuance of the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 3491) to amend existing customs and internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. DURHAM: The petition of Henry C. George, guardian, for a pension to the minor child of James W. Decker, late of Company I, Fifth Kentucky Cavalry, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EDEN: The petition of Emanuel Klauser, late of Company H, Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteers, for an honorable discharge, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SCOTT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. Mr. BOUTWELL. There is on the Calendar a House bill, No. 2692, to change the name of a tug. There is no objection, I presume, to its being done, and I desire to have the bill passed.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2692) to change the name of the schooner-yacht Quarantine to Welcome.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JACOB HARDING.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2090) for the relief of Jacob Harding.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Jacob Harding of $195, as compensation for his services as inspector of the distillery of Messrs. Gordon & Co., at Paris, Illinois, in the year 1867.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MACKINAC NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 28) to set apart a certain portion of the island of Mackinac, in the Straits of Mackinac, within the State of Michigan, as a national park.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. There was an objection raised by the Senator from California which I believe he withdraws.

Mr. SARGENT. I withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs to insert as an additional section what will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That any part of the park hereby created shall at all times be available for military purposes, either as a parade or drill ground, in time of peace, or for complete occupation in time of war, or whenever war is expected, and may also be used for the erection of any public buildings or works: Provided, That no person shall ever claim or receive of the United States any damage on account of any future amendment or repeal of this act, or the taking of said park, or any part thereof, for public purposes or use.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN M'HARG.

Mr. FENTON. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 452) for the relief of John McHarg, late collector of internal revenue for the fifth collection district of the State of New York.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The Committee on Finance proposed an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to allow, in the examination and settlement of the accounts of John McHarg, late collector of internal revenue of the fifth collection district of the State of New York, the sum of $41,092.76, shown to have been stolen or embezzled by his late deputy collector, John A. Phillips, without the default or negligence of said collector.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIERRA IRON COMPANY.

Mr. HAGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 514) granting to the Sierra Iron Company a right of way through the public lands for a railroad and telegraph.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to grant the right of way through the public lands to the Sierra Iron Company, a corporation having its principal place of business in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, its successors and assigns, for a railroad and telegraph from the company's iron mines in township 21 north, of range 11 east, Mount Diablo meridian, in Sierra County, in the State of California; thence easterly by way of Mohawk Valley, Humbug Valley, Sierra Valley, Beckwith Pass, and Long Valley; and thence southeasterly, in the most direct practicable route, to the town of Reno, in the State of Nevada, being an aggregate distance of about sixty miles.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Railroads was in line 5, after the word "corporation," to insert "organized under the laws of the State of California and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out in line 24 the word "four" and insert "five," so as to read "which stations shall not occur oftener than one in five miles."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the proviso commencing in line 25 and ending in line 33, in the following words:

Provided, That this grant shall not exclude the passage through any cañon that this road may traverse of any other railroad: Provided further, That within six months from the passage of this act, the said Sierra Iron Company shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a map, to be approved by him, exhibiting the line of the railroad of said company as the same has been located: And provided further, That the said railroad shall be commenced and completed within three years from the passage of this act.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Provided, That the grant hereby made shall not take effect on any lands to which any bona fide pre-emption or homestead claim has attached before the definite location of the line of road and the designation of the lands to be appropriated under this act: Provided further, That within six months from the passage of this act, the Sierra Iron Company shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a map to be approved by him, exhibiting the line of the railroad of said company, as the same has been located, and the ground to be occupied at the several stations: And provided further, That the said railroad shall be completed within four years from the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That in case the right of way granted by this act extends through any cañon, pass, or defile, any other railroad corporation shall not be excluded from a passage through the same, or over and upon the track of the constructed road, upon equitable terms; and in case of disagreement, upon application of either of the parties, the same shall be adjusted by the Secretary of the Interior, after hearing, upon reasonable notice to the parties, whose decision may be enforced by a court of competent jurisdiction: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to enlarge or extend the corporate powers or privileges of the Sierra Iron Company beyond what may be contained in its charter or articles of incorporation under the laws of the State of California, or to authorize said company to make or construct any railroad, unless authority to do so shall have been first obtained either under the general laws or by special act of the Legislature of California.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I desire to ask that the Clerk may again report so much of the last amendment as relates to giving other roads a right to go through any pass.

The Chief Clerk read the second section down to the word "jurisdiction" in the ninth line.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I suggest it should read "over or upon any part of the track of the constructed road."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there any provision giving Congress any future right to regulate the matter?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will not undertake to offer any amendment at this time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATENTS FOR LANDS IN OREGON.

Mr. KELLY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 624) to authorize the issuance of patents for lands granted to the State of Oregon in certain cases.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The preamble recites that certain lands have heretofore, by acts of Congress, been granted to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of certain military wagon-roads in that State, and that there exists no law providing for the issuing of formal patents for those lands; and the bill therefore provides that in all cases when the roads in aid of the construction of which those lands were granted are shown by the certificate of the governor of the State of Oregon, as in those acts provided, to have been constructed and completed, patents shall issue in due form to the State of Oregon as fast as the same shall, under the grants, be selected and certified, unless the State of Oregon shall by public act have transferred its interests in the lands to any corporation or corporations, in which case the patents shall issue from the General Land Office to such corporation or corporations.

The Committee on Public Lands reported an amendment to add to the bill the following words:

Upon their payment of the necessary expenses thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There ought to be a provision in that bill that this act shall not revive any land grant which has already expired, and providing that this bill shall create no new rights of any kind.

Mr. KELLY. I have no objection to such an amendment; but the bill only applies to roads already completed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will offer an amendment in this form:

Provided, That this act shall not be construed to revive any land grants already expired, or to create any new rights of any kind.

Mr. SARGENT. If you say "rights of any kind" there will be no effect in the bill. This bill gives the right to issue patents. There was an oversight in the original law by which it was not provided that any patent should issue although all the obligations required by the Government should be complied with. I think the last words of this amendment are so sweeping that they would prevent the bill having any effect at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then add "except to provide for issuing patents for lands to which the State is already entitled."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont will be so modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time; and passed.

AMERICAN FORK RAILWAY.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 332) granting to the American Fork Railway Company a right of way through the public lands for the construction of a railroad and telegraph.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The Committee on Railroads reported the bill with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted to the American Fork Railway Company, a corporation created under the laws of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, its successors and assigns, for a railroad and telegraph now partially completed and in operation from a point on the line of the Utah Southern Railroad, in the Territory of Utah, at or near the town of American Fork; thence to the mouth of American Fork Cañon, in said Territory, and up said cañon to a point at or near the Sultana smelting works, in said cañon; said way is granted to said railroad to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of said railroad where it may pass through the public domain, including grounds for station buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side-tracks, turn-tables, and water-stations, to an amount not exceeding ten acres, not mineral lands, for each station, which stations shall not occur oftener than once in four miles: Provided, That this grant shall not exclude the passage through any cañon that this road may traverse of any other railroad that may hereafter be chartered: Provided further, That within six months from the passage of this act the said American Fork Railway Company shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a map, to be approved by him, exhibiting the line of the railroad of the said company as the same has been located: And provided further, That said company shall be permitted to extend their road, by the most feasible route, over the divide into the Little Cottonwood Cañon, on the same terms as above stated.

SEC. 2. That said American Fork Railway shall be a post-route and a military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, and all other Government service, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose restricting the charges for such Government transportation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE OVER THE WILLAMETTE RIVER.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 775) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Willamette River at Portland, in the State of Oregon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill and the first amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Although I reported that bill, I should like it to lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope not. I think the bill had better lie over for two or three reasons. Its history in part is this: It was referred to the Committee on Commerce, was considered by them very fully at a full meeting, and an adverse report made I believe unanimously. Subsequently, as an act of courtesy to the Senator from Oregon, a member of the committee——

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator will allow me, he is entirely mistaken in regard to this bill. That was another bill.

Mr. CONKLING. In reference to the same river?

Mr. MITCHELL. In reference to the same river, but at Salem, Oregon.

Mr. CONKLING. What was the other bill?

Mr. MITCHELL. The other bill was a bill authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Willamette River at Salem, Oregon. This is a bill authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge over the Willamette River at Portland, Oregon, fifty miles distant from the other point.

Mr. CONKLING. The other bill then referred to a bridge over this river, and this bill relates to a bridge over this river, although not on the same site. It was the judgment of the Committee on Commerce that Congress had nothing to do with the matter; that we could not enter upon the business of authorizing a bridge to be built over every creek and run in every State which might divide counties, not even if there was so much water in it as there is in this river, it not being an interstate river or a navigable stream in that sense which in the judgment of the committee called upon Congress to take charge of it one way or the other. Accordingly, the other bill was reported adversely, and I believe unanimously. This bill, which I supposed was the same one—but the Senator corrects me about that, and doubtless he is right and I am wrong—was reported by the committee, one or two members of the committee do not know precisely when, but at some time when there could not have been a full meeting, and I think it had better lie over at least until we can look at the map and see whether there be any distinction between this case and the other.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection to its lying over. All I know in reference to the consideration of the bill is this: that it was introduced by myself, and I never appeared before the Committee on Commerce and never heard anything of the bill until I saw it on the Calendar as having been reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside.

NATHANIEL M'KAY.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask the Senate to take up for present consideration Senate bill No. 142, reported unanimously from the Committee on Claims in an amended form, and I propose to offer an amendment to that amendment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 142) for the relief of Nathaniel McKay.

The Committee on Claims reported the bill with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized to refund to the builders of the steamers La Portena, Edward Everett, F. W. Lincoln, Azalia, and N. P. Banks, a sum not to exceed $6,574, being the amount of revenue tax found to have been paid by them to the Government on the hulls and engines of said steamers; said payment to be made out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to amend the amendment by inserting the words "Nathaniel McKay, assignee of" before the words "the builders of" in the fourth line.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The title should be amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the builders of the steamers La Portena, Edward Everett, F. W. Lincoln, Azalia, and N. P. Banks."

Mr. SCOTT. Let me suggest to the Senator that the amendment in the title should conform to the amendment made in the bill, and it should read: "A bill for the relief of Nathaniel McKay, assignee of the builders of the steamers La Portena, Edward Everett, F. W. Lincoln, Azalia, and N. P. Banks."

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title will be amended as suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania, if there be no objection.

C. C. SPAIDS.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1582.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1582) for the relief of C. C. Spaids. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to C. C. Spaids $633 for his services as second lieutenant of Company A, Fourth Illinois Cavalry Regiment.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill with an amendment to strike out in lines 6, 7, and 8 the words:

Sum of $633, it being pay for his services as second lieutenant of Company A, Fourth Illinois Cavalry Regiment.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Full pay and emoluments of a second lieutenant of Company A, Fourth Cavalry Regiment Illinois Volunteers, from the 3d day of June, 1863, to the 6th day of February, 1864, deducting therefrom any sum received by him for services rendered during the said period as sergeant or otherwise in said company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PAT. O. HAWES.

Mr. TIPTON. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1934) for the relief of Pat. O. Hawes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Paymaster-General to pay Pat. O. Hawes, late second lieutenant in the Forty-fifth Kentucky Regiment of Volunteer Infantry, United States Army, the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of infantry, from the 25th of September, 1863, until the 23d of January, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate, without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE M. BOOK.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2208.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2208) authorizing the President to reinstate George M. Book on the active list of the Navy.

The Committee on Naval Affairs reported the bill with an amendment to strike out the proviso, after the word "provided," in the following words:

That he shall have first successfully passed the examinations provided for in the first, second, third, and fourth sections of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish and equalize the grade of line officers of the United States Navy,'" approved April 21, 1864.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

That he shall first be ordered to, and perform, actual sea-duty on some cruising vessel of war for the period of one year, and if at the expiration of such period of duty he shall be pronounced by proper naval authority to be no longer incapacitated for active service in any respect: And provided further, That he shall not receive any extra pay for the time he was on the retired list and not on active duty prior to his restoration under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendment be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think an officer ought to be restored to the Navy in this way without some statement being made of the facts to go upon the record.

Mr. CRAGIN. This officer is a young man who was retired for physical disability. That disability has been removed. This bill proposes to restore him on condition that he shall serve for one year, and thus prove that his disability is entirely removed. It is recommended by the Department.

Mr. SHERMAN. Did he apply to be retired?

Mr. CRAGIN. He did not.

Mr. SHERMAN. He was retired compulsorily?

Mr. CRAGIN. Yes, sir; on account of physical disability, which was supposed to be permanent; but it has been removed, and the Department now recommends that he be restored on probation for one year, and if in that way he prove that he is restored to health, then the President is authorized to nominate him.

The bill was passed.

JONATHAN L. MANN.

Mr. COOPER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1770.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1770) for the relief of Jonathan L. Mann, late a chaplain in the volunteer service of the Army.

The bill proposes to direct the Adjutant-General of the United States Army to muster back Jonathan L. Mann, chaplain Ninth Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry to October 28, 1863; and it further proposes to direct the Paymaster-General of the Army to pay to Jonathan L. Mann, late chaplain Ninth Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, the full pay and emoluments of a chaplain of volunteer cavalry in the Army of the United States from the 28th of October, 1863, to March 24, 1865, deducting therefrom any sum received by him for services rendered during that period in the Army of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISK UNIVERSITY.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 313) to confirm the purchase by the executive department of three acres of land, more or less, in the vicinity of Nashville, Tennessee, known as the site of Fort Houston, and to donate and convey the same to the Fisk University for educational purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu thereof insert the following:

That the purchase by the United States, on the 21st day of August, 1865, from Russell Houston, of certain land, consisting of about three and one-fourth acres, situate in the city of Nashville, Tennessee, with the buildings thereon standing, and being the same premises described in a deed of said date from said Houston to the Chief Engineer of the Army, in trust for the United States, recorded in book 35, page 241, in the register's office of Davidson County, Tennessee, be, and the same hereby is, ratified, sanctioned, and confirmed, so that the said purchase, and the said deed thereupon executed, shall have the same legal validity and effect as if the same had been by a previous act of Congress specifically authorized.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to grant and convey to the Fisk University of Nashville, Tennessee, all the right, title, interest, and estate of the United States in and to said tract of land for educational purposes: Provided, That no further expense relative thereto shall be incurred by the United States: And provided further, That the trustees of the said Fisk University be, and they are hereby, authorized to sell and dispose of the above-described property at their discretion, and to use the proceeds elsewhere for educational purposes in connection with the said Fisk University.

SEC. 3. That the purchase, by order of the executive department, under an authority supposed to be conferred by the act of February 20, 1862, making appropriations for the construction, &c., of certain fortifications, &c., of certain land at Fort Hamilton, New York, consisting of about twenty-one acres, as a site for additional batteries, and conveyed to the United States by deed of Julia Delaplaine, of September 9, 1862, which said deed has been pronounced by the Attorney-General, by opinion of November 22, 1862, to vest a good and valid title in the United States, and upon which said land the said batteries have been duly constructed, be, and the same hereby is, confirmed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to confirm the purchase of a portion of the site of Fort Houston, at Nashville, Tennessee, and to provide for the donation of the same to the Fisk University for educational purposes; also to confirm in the purchase of certain land at Fort Hamilton, New York."

HAYDEN'S CRETACEOUS FLORA OF THE WEST.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution for printing Hayden's report on the Cretaceous Flora of the West.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed and bound twenty-five hundred copies in quarto (uniform with the series) of Professor Hayden's report on the Cretaceous Flora of the West; one thousand copies for the Department of the Interior, one thousand copies for the Smithsonian Institution, and five hundred copies for the office of the United States geological survey of the Territories.

The pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, to add the following proviso:

Provided, That such report shall not be distributed at the public expense, and only upon application therefor and upon payment of the cost of printing the same.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope the Senator from Maine will withdraw that amendment. The "cost of printing the same" is almost nothing. The cost is in the plates which have already been printed and the expense paid for the appropriation for the survey. The cost of printing this number of copies is only estimated at $600. It is a scientific work, and should go to scientific men and scientific associations. It is to be largely distributed to them. I would be quite willing that the whole distribution should be by the Smithsonian Institution. There cannot be any better organ for distributing scientific publications. Moreover, almost every book that the Smithsonian Institution distributes abroad brings to us another volume for the Congressional Library. The Congressional Library has been largely increased by the exchanges through the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. This is not at all in harmony with the Senator's general bill reported a few days ago.

Mr. SARGENT. This will come under the general bill as soon as we pass it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But if we pass this now, it will not be under that bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think this ought to come under the regular bill. This is a scientific work by itself; it is not intended for popular distribution. It is a work that does great credit to the Government, and our Government has gained great credit with the world for its scientific publications.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I agree with what my friend says about this work; but he has got a system for printing public documents; and now if this is to go on by piecemeal, we might as well abandon all idea of a system.

Mr. ANTHONY. This is the only resolution for printing extra copies before the Senate, I think.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But the Committee on Printing, I understand, has reported a bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. Which bill I propose to call up to-morrow.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Should not this be subjected to the provisions of that bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think this ought to be distributed through the scientific agencies of the Government.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will not the Senator consent to allow this matter to lie until he brings up the bill, and then we can see how far this ought to conform to the principles of that bill. My own conviction is that we ought not to provide for this printing of public documents by piecemeal. Some action has taken place in another direction, which I am not at liberty to speak of now, which is exceptional according to my own notion. If we go on in this way we shall find ourselves in a condition at last that that bill will be of very little consequence; and I attach the greatest importance to the proposition reported by the Senator from Rhode Island, which I certainly hope he will take occasion to urge at a very early period.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will call it up now if the Senate will permit me to do so.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Nothing would be more agreeable to me.

Mr. ANTHONY. That would not be proper, I suppose, as the Senator from Delaware would be thereby interrupted in the midst of his speech. I will move to take it up after the Alabama election case is disposed of.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Why not let this lie for the present?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think this case ought to come under the regular bill. When the Government makes a great scientific exploration at an expense of $100,000 and prints its results, I do not think the Government ought to peddle out the books. I think that they ought to be given to scientific men and scientific institutions where they will do the most good.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I understand the principles of the Senator's bill certainly apply to this case. The books may be accessible to the people at large who choose to pay for them. Here is an entire issue which is to be distributed entirely to certain scientific institutions. I hope the Senator will allow this resolution to lie on the table until that bill is taken up.

Mr. ANTHONY. I must consent to that, I suppose, as it is now twelve o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired, and the Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the resolution in regard to the seat of the Senator from Alabama, on which the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is entitled to the floor.

ARMY STAFF PROMOTIONS.

Mr. LOGAN. I rise to ask the Senate to allow me to call up a bill to which I think there will be no objection, and it is a matter of some importance to the Army. It is the bill (S. No. 321) authorizing appointments and promotions in the Medical and Ordnance Departments of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. That will take time.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think it will.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to having it read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs as a substitute for the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to considering that bill at this time; but undoubtedly a bill of that kind, reopening three corps of the Army to promotions, will lead to some debate and will require some explanation.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; let it go over until to-morrow. The Senator does not understand the bill. It is not opening three corps to promotions; but I will not discuss it now.

Mr. SHERMAN. Probably if I heard the explanation I should be willing to vote for it; but it ought not to pass without explanation.

Mr. WEST. I have no objection to the bill going over to some future day; but I hope the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will not bring it up to-morrow, as I shall be necessarily absent from the Chamber, and I should like to be heard on the subject.

SENATOR FROM ALABAMA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is before the Senate, being the Alabama contested-election case, and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SAULSBURY resumed and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday. This speech in full is as follows:

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I had not expected to take part in this discussion to-day, and the remarks which I shall make now will be necessarily brief. The Senator from Maryland, [Mr. HAMILTON,] who is associated with me on the committee, and myself united in the minority report, which presents at length our views of this case. Upon the statement of the law and facts as presented in that report I should have been content to rest the claim of Mr. Sykes to a seat in this body, but the remarks of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] render it proper that I should reply to a few matters to which he has referred.

It was wholly unnecessary for the Senator from Indiana to disclaim that party considerations governed his action in this contest. I hope that no Senator on this floor when he is constituted a judge of private rights and when the responsibility is increased by being compelled also to judge of the rights of a sovereign State will be influenced in the slightest degree by any mere desire to advance the interests of a political party. It was therefore wholly unnecessary for the honorable Senator from Indiana to disclaim in this connection being influenced by such considerations.

The Senator from Indiana in the remarks just submitted assumes a position which is not tenable in the manner in which it was presented. He says that the majority of the people of a State have a right to be represented upon this floor. While it may be true that the majority of the people of a State have the right to be represented in the Senate if the Legislature of the State in the election of Senators represents the popular will, it is not true that the majority of the voters have such right in opposition to the will of the Legislature.

The Senate, under our system of government, represents the States in their sovereign capacity, and as a general rule the popular will finds expression through the action of the Legislature in the election of Senators; but if the Legislature does not choose to act in harmony with the will of a majority of the people, they have a right to do so. And instances could be named in which Senators now in this Chamber are not the representatives of the popular majority in their State. The majority of the voters in a State have no unqualified right to be represented by a Senator whose views are in harmony with their own, but their right is subordinate to the will of the Legislature authorized to elect a Senator.

Not only is the popular will in this regard subordinate to the will of the Legislature, but even the right of a State to representation on this floor is controlled by its own constitution and laws. Such right can only be secured through the action of its Legislature, organized and existing in conformity to the provisions of the constitution and laws of the State.

The honorable Senator says that all the trouble in Alabama grew out of a fraudulent conspiracy to defeat the will of the majority. That is an assumption that I think is not warranted by any proof that was before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. In fact there was no evidence on the question of fraudulent intent on the part of any election officer, and there was no allegation of fraud made and no evidence offered to sustain any such allegation. It is entirely gratuitous therefore on the part of the honorable Senator from Indiana to announce that this was the result of a fraudulent conspiracy. Before I get through I shall attempt to show that if there was any fraud at all in this case it was on the part of the court-house Legislature that elected Mr. Spencer. Certainly I think the documentary evidence, the legal proof, the record evidence, in this case will exonerate every person connected with the capitol Legislature, either as a member or an officer who assisted in the organization of the body, from any such sweeping allegation as that of having been connected with a fraudulent conspiracy to defeat the will and wishes of the people of Alabama.

In order to sustain this general allegation of a fraudulent conspiracy which is made for the purpose of strengthening the claim of Mr. Spencer, the honorable Senator referred to the injunction that was issued by Chancellor McCraw, restraining the supervisors of election from counting the returns of Eufaula in one of the counties of that State. My honorable friend forgot for the moment that the chancellor who issued that injunction was a member of his own party, and if there was fraud at all on the part of the chancellor, it certainly does not attach to the democratic party of the State of Alabama. He should also remember that there was no senatorial candidate in that county of the democratic party, but there were two republicans running, and therefore if there was any fraud at all the fraud existed on the part of the republicans and not the democrats.

Mr. MORTON. I will state to my friend that the chancellor referred to may have acted in good faith. I do not say he did not; but if he did he found out that he had been used badly, for two days afterward he dissolved the injunction without anybody asking him to do it. My friend says he was a republican. He was of the same stamp of republican as Mr. Miller. He was an elector on the Greeley ticket.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not think either stamp of republicans have exactly correct ideas; but whatever training in political science the gentleman referred to may have had he received from republican tuition; and if he consented to become a party to a fraud, certainly that fact ought not to be charged to the democratic party of the State of Alabama.

But I apprehend, Mr. President, that there was no fraud on the part of the chancellor. I apprehend that the bill filed in his court alleged such a state of facts as not only warranted but demanded that he should issue an injunction; and it being only a preliminary injunction, he called it up at the earliest possible day, showing a desire to dispose of the question, and upon the preliminary hearing he dissolved the injunction. Is there a fraud committed because the complainant, who presents a case which commends itself to the chancellor upon the facts stated, which addresses him in such a manner as to make the impression on his mind that if the facts alleged in the bill of complaint could be established the injunction ought to be maintained, was not able to prove his allegations?

It is very frequently the case that upon the preliminary hearing of injunctions in all equity courts the facts presented do not warrant a continuation of the injunction; and that I presume was the fact in the case before Chancellor McCraw. I refer to this simply to say that there is no proper authority or justification for the allegation of fraud against the parties to this transaction.

When I come to notice the action of the supervisors of election and the action of the secretary of state in issuing certificates, I think I shall be able to demonstrate clearly that it was not only right and proper that they should perform the act they did at the time they did, but that it was made their duty under the penal statutes of Alabama to make the returns on the part of the supervisors to the secretary of state, and on the part of the secretary of state to issue the certificates to all the members to whom he did issue certificates.

So far as the secretary of state is concerned, to whom a part of this allegation of fraud is intended to be applied, let me say to the honorable Senator from Indiana that the presumption of the law is that all public officers perform their duty and are guilty of no fraud in the performance of their duty; and unless there was proof to the contrary, the secretary of state in issuing these certificates is presumed to have acted in good faith. Is there proof in this case that will justify the charge imputed to the character and which if true would certainly disgrace the secretary of state of Alabama in the eyes of all honest men? Is there any proof in this case that justifies such an allegation against his character? What did he do? Under the statutes of Alabama it becomes his duty within ten days after the supervisors of election made their report certifying to him who have received a majority of votes at the election to issue certificates of election to the parties returned as elected by the supervisors. Did the secretary of state act precipitately in this matter? In order to discharge his duty clearly within the letter and spirit of the law he took legal advice, not of one man alone, but he took the legal advice of three eminent counsel of the State; and let me say that one of these was Judge Rice, a prominent republican of Alabama. I have the opinion of the counsel whom he consulted in reference to his duty.

Mr. SPENCER. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him, but I wish to state as matter of fact that the secretary of state immediately after going out of office left the State and never returned, and he is now a fugitive from the justice of the State of Alabama. Another error I wish to correct is that Judge Rice was a republican. Judge Rice stumped the State of Alabama for Greeley. He was part of his life a republican, but most of his life a democrat, and latterly has been a democrat.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It may be that Judge Rice voted for Mr. Greeley. I think a great many more republicans ought to have voted for him, and less democrats. [Laughter.] But my understanding is that Judge Rice has always been in connection with the republican party and that he is to-day a member of the republican party; but simply because he gave this opinion, I suppose, and voted for Mr. Greeley, he is to be read out of the republican party! Well, sir, we have got a great many recruits from the republican party in the democratic party, and I have no doubt from what I have learned of the eminent character of Judge Rice that he will be welcomed by the democrats of Alabama into their ranks whenever he wishes to join them.

Mr. SPENCER. I will state that Judge Rice voted for Seymour and Blair and voted for Mr. Greeley, and never voted a republican ticket but once, and that was for Governor Smith. I think that is the actual fact.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not choose to hold a private conversation now, while I am presenting my views upon this subject, in reference to the political status of any particular individual; but information that I deem reliable is that Judge Rice has always been a prominent republican of the State of Alabama since the republican party has had an existence there, and that he claims connection with that party and professes to owe allegiance to it to-day. Be that as it may, one thing is certain, he is a gentleman of character; he is a gentleman of standing; he is a gentleman eminent in his profession, and he would not give a legal opinion to any man biased and controlled by party considerations. It would be a reflection upon the character of a gentleman so eminent in his profession as Judge Rice that I would not be willing to make, and which I feel justified in repelling, however indirectly made. On the contrary, whether he be democrat or republican, every gentleman entitled to the respect and confidence of the people of his State is entitled to the respect and confidence of the Senate of the United States, and when such men give legal opinions involving their own legal reputation, involving their character as men, the allegation or insinuation that the opinion was not an honest one, that it was not given in good faith, but given to advance the political interests of any party or any man, is an imputation that ought not to be made against the character of any person so high and respectable as Judge Rice. I have the opinion. The secretary of state has been arraigned here as a party in complicity with fraud; and yet that officer before taking the responsibility of issuing these certificates took the legal advice of three eminent members of the legal profession in his State, to one of whom I have referred, and he acted upon their advice. I have it here before me. Three eminent lawyers of his State advised him in a written opinion that it was his duty, and especially because there was a penal statute in that State imposing a severe fine upon him if he failed to perform the duty of issuing the certificates.

With what show of consistency a charge of complicity with any fraud and conspiracy on the part of the secretary of state can be made I am wholly at a loss to understand. But I fully understand the reason which induces the charge to be made. The honorable Senator from Alabama interposes an objection that he is a fugitive from justice. Sir, I know the fact that the contestant, Mr. Sykes, through his counsel in this case offered to present the secretary of state here as a witness to testify upon this same question of his complicity with fraud, and I know that the offer on the part of the contestant was declined by the other side. I know nothing personally of that officer, but I understand he is a gentleman of character and responsibility; and while he may have left Alabama, I have heard of no insinuation against his character until this very moment, and I think it is not only gratuitous but unjust, when he has no chance to defend himself against such an allegation, when it failed to be made before the committee where he could have appeared and exonerated himself from a charge involving his character—it is not only gratuitous but it is unkind and unjust that it should have been lugged in here, I will not say for effect.

The honorable Senator from Indiana says that the title of a member to a seat in the organization of the Legislature does not depend upon the certificate of election but upon the election itself. I differ with the honorable Senator in this respect: I hold that the party holding a certificate from the proper officer is entitled to be seated in the Legislature upon that certificate, though he may not in fact have been elected; because that is the only test of his right to the seat required by the constitution and laws of Alabama. It is the prima facie evidence of title, and having therefore the evidence which the law required, even if the member has not been actually elected by the votes cast at the election, if he has in his possession the legal evidence of title to the possession of the office, he is legally entitled to be seated as a member until by a contest his right shall be disproved, the laws of Alabama providing for a contest whereby the party who has been improperly seated in the Legislature may be ousted by the party rightfully claiming the seat by virtue of an election.

It is an admitted principle of law—and no one knows it better than the honorable Senator from Indiana—that in reference to property one man may have the right of property, another man have the right of possession to that property, and still a third man may have the possession of the property, and each of them is entitled to be protected in his just rights. The man in possession, though he may have no legal title to the property, and though he may not have the right of possession, is yet entitled to be protected in his possession until a better right is set up, until the party entitled to the possession shall come in and oust him. So with the party entitled to the possession of property, where he may have no legal right to the property itself; yet having the legal right to the possession of it, he is entitled to be protected under the law until the person holding the title to the property, the right of property, shall become also entitled to the right of possession of the property, when he may be ousted from his possession. So, too, a man may have the evidence which entitles him to a seat in the Legislature just as these men in the capitol Legislature had. They have by that the right to the possession of the seat until some person who has been actually elected comes forward in the manner prescribed by the statutes of Alabama and sets up a better title by showing in a contest that he was not elected to the Legislature. While, therefore, it may be true that some of the gentlemen at the capitol Legislature who held certificates of election were not in fact elected by the votes cast at the election, still, having in their possession the only evidence which entitles members to be seated in the Legislature, they were entitled to take their seats; and every act of a member thus seated was as valid and binding as though every man in his county or district had voted for him, until, as I before remarked, a contest was made, and upon such contest his right to the seat was disproved. There is no plainer principle of law than that.

The Senator from Indiana very properly states this case in the question he asks, Which was the legal Legislature, that at the court-house or that at the capitol? He directs the attention of the Senate by that question to the very point in issue. All the matters to which I have been replying, about the secretary of state's issuing certificates fraudulently, about the members from Barbour and Marengo not having been elected, are outside of the case; and the true question is that which was presented by the inquiry of the honorable Senator from Indiana, which was the true, legal Legislature? To that question I propose to address myself for a few moments.

Which of the legislative bodies, that which assembled at the capitol of the State in the senate chamber and in the representative chamber, or that which met at the United States court-rooms, was the true Legislature of the State of Alabama? That is the only question in my opinion which we can properly consider; it is the only question which we should consider in determining the rights between these contestants. Which of the legislative bodies, that which elected Mr. Spencer or that which elected Mr. Sykes, was the true and legal Legislature of the State? In order to determine that question, it is necessary to refer to the constitution and laws of Alabama. The honorable Senator from Maryland in his remarks this morning very fully went over that ground, and it is not necessary therefore that I should take up in detail all the constitutional and legal provisions applicable to this case; they are also fully stated in the minority report; and yet I may be permitted to remark that no one questions that the election was held in conformity with the requirements of the law, and no one questions the fact that the Legislature did assemble at the capitol, and that it had a quorum of members in each house of the Legislature, who held certificates of their election issued by the secretary of state in compliance with the provisions of the constitution of the State.

Now, what is the validity of these certificates? Did they entitle the members presenting themselves in the capitol Legislature as members to be seated? That is the question. If the evidence which they held was such as to entitle them to take their seats in the Legislature, and a quorum of such members was present in each house of the capitol Legislature, then unquestionably that Legislature must be regarded as the lawful General Assembly of the State of Alabama until, according to the provisions of the laws of Alabama, their right to seats in the Legislature should be shown not to be good.

It will be observed that the law of Alabama in reference to elections requires that the inspectors of elections shall count the votes and certify the poll-list to the board of supervisors, consisting of the judge of probate, the sheriff, and the clerk of the circuit court in each county. The supervising board, after examining the returns certified by the inspectors, make their return to the secretary of state. The only duty that the secretary of state has is to preserve the returns made to him, and within the time specified, within ten days from the reception of these returns, to issue the certificates. That is the machinery which the laws of Alabama provide in order to ascertain who have been elected members of the Legislature. It is a legal ascertainment of the members of the senate and house of representatives. No one questions—for it is admitted in the report of the majority—that the supervisors of election had made returns of the election to the secretary of state, that the secretary of state, in compliance with the duty imposed on him by the law of the State, had thereupon issued certificates to the parties shown by the returns of the supervisors to have been elected. Some of those persons thus certified to have been elected met in the capitol; and in each house, as I before said, there was a quorum competent to do business, having the only qualifications which the law requires. The senate and house of representatives thus organized were in legal contemplation the Legislature of the State of Alabama.

It is objected on the part of the Senator from Indiana that though the members may have had the certificates of election, some of them were not in fact elected. But the Senate in its inquiry can go no further than the constitution and laws of the State. All that we can do in determining this question between Mr. Spencer and Mr. Sykes, the contest being made, the Senate being constituted the judge of the elections, qualifications, and returns of its own members, is to go to the constitution and the statutes of Alabama, and ascertain which of those bodies was organized in conformity with the requirements of that constitution and those laws. We cannot, as was very justly said by the Senator from Maryland, go behind that fact. The moment we go behind the ascertainment of who were elected according to the laws of the State, and undertake to constitute ourselves judges of who was in fact elected to the house of representatives or to the senate of Alabama, we usurp the power and authority conferred by the constitution of the State upon the respective houses of the Legislature, because under the constitution of the State each house is made the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members; and the moment we attempt to go back to count the votes that were cast or to supervise the action of the returning boards, we usurp the functions which the laws of Alabama have placed upon others. We would by such proceedings usurp the authority of the respective houses of the Legislature of Alabama, and attempt to determine the election of the members of the General Assembly of that State. We cannot rightfully do this.

I propose to show that that is the view which the Senator from Indiana himself only twelve months ago in another case took of the law. I read now from the report in the Louisiana case made by the Senator from Indiana:

> After the Legislature became duly organized, as already stated, it was invested with power, expressly conferred by the constitution of Louisiana, to determine the qualifications and elections of its own members. This is in its nature an exclusive power. One house cannot divide it with the other, nor can the exercise of it be controlled by courts. From that time each house has the exclusive control over its membership, whether in the retention of old members or in the admission of new ones. If, in the original organization, a number of persons were admitted as members who had not been legally elected—

Mark the language—

> If, in the original organization, a number of persons were admitted as members who had not been legally elected, but whose names were on the list of persons furnished by the secretary of state returned as elected by the proper returning board, their seats were liable to contest, and such contest could only be determined by the house of which they claimed to be members; and under no circumstances could a court inquire into the expulsion of a member of either house or the admission of a new one. Such a power has never been recognized in any State or by any Federal court in regard to Congress. If a quorum in each house, who were on the list furnished by the secretary of state as having been returned as elected by the legal returning board, take their seats and proceed to the work of organization, such organization must, in contemplation of law, be held to be legal.

There is the legal proposition for which we contend most distinctly, most clearly, most forcibly presented by the Senator from Indiana himself, that if a majority of persons on the list furnished by the secretary of state—in other words, with the certificates of the secretary of state—present themselves, they are entitled to be seated, and their acts are valid, and the Congress of the United States have no power upon the ascertainment of that fact to go behind and to inquire into anything. That is sound law. But the Senator repeats it again in substance; and I propose to test this question partly by the views of the Senator from Indiana on another occasion, to make the Senator from Indiana on a former occasion refute the arguments of the Senator from Indiana on this occasion:

> When the constitution—

Says the Senator—

> of a State provides that each house of its Legislature shall be the judge of its election and qualification of its members, full faith and credit must be given to their action; and should the Government of the United States go behind their action to inquire whether the members have been lawfully elected to the Legislature, their independence would be wholly destroyed and the validity of their action made to depend upon the will of Congress.

Can language be more clear or forcible? And yet the Senator from Indiana, after uttering that sentence, deliberately penning it in a report a little over a year ago, comes into the Senate to-day and argues this question as if the Congress of the United States had a right to go behind the organization of the Legislature of Alabama and inquire into the election of members. We maintain that the only inquiry we can make is to ascertain whether either of these bodies was organized in conformity with the constitution and laws of that State; but the Senator from Indiana in his argument to-day apparently ignores the constitution and laws of Alabama, and, as a justification for so doing, seeks to go behind them and impress the Senate with the idea that there were frauds in all these elections, that there was fraud on the part of the returning boards, that there was fraud in the issuing of the injunctions which prevented the returning board from counting or ascertaining the vote in one district. Again said the Senator:

> So, when the laws of a State have constitutionally created a returning board to ascertain who are elected State officers and members of the Legislature, if Congress may go behind the decision of that board and inquire whether they had the returns before them, and whether they were acting in accordance with the laws of the State, the election of State officers and members of the Legislature would be placed absolutely under the control of Congress.

Mr. MORTON. Does the Senator mean to say that I have stated one word to-day in opposition to any of those principles there enunciated?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir; according to my understanding.

Mr. MORTON. I stand by that doctrine. We place ourselves on that very doctrine, that this court-house Legislature determined that very question, determined that these members from Marengo County and Barbour County were elected, notwithstanding the others had the certificates, and they had a right to determine it, and the subsequent fusion Legislature determined the same thing, and the Senator himself does not deny it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will come to that point before I leave this discussion if I think of it; but I do not intend that the Senator shall shift the issue now.

Mr. MORTON. Let me ask my friend if he denies that fact himself, that the republican members were elected in Marengo and Barbour Counties?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not deny it. I suppose it may be true. I am not arguing it upon that ground. I say the argument of the Senator to-day goes to an inquiry as to who was elected, whereas in the argument which he presented in a written report a year ago he contended that we could not go on and inquire into the fact who was elected.

Mr. MORTON. The Legislature determines that as the court-house Legislature and the fusion Legislature did. We are simply accepting their determination, and I referred to those things to show that they were right and that your men were not elected at all. My friend will not say that they were elected.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is not the question.

Mr. MORTON. It is the question precisely.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator from Indiana, in his report in the Louisiana case, emphatically said that the persons upon the list returned by the secretary of state were entitled to be seated, and that this Senate could not go behind that fact; and yet in the argument to-day he repudiates that doctrine, as I understand, and says that you may go behind the list or the certificates furnished by the secretary of state, and you may inquire into the election, you may inquire as to who was elected; because upon that depends the whole case on the part of Mr. Spencer. If there is no power in the Senate to go into the election to ascertain who was elected, then Mr. Spencer clearly is not entitled to the seat, and unquestionably, according to all the forms of law—and that is admitted in the report of the majority—Mr. Sykes and not Mr. Spencer was elected.

Mr. MORTON. Will my friend permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. MORTON. In the Louisiana case I took the ground, and that was argued here, that the Legislature had a right to go behind the certificates and the list, and in this very case the Legislature has gone behind them and determined the very question. My friend himself cannot dispute it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. No one is more ready to admit than I am that under the power to judge of the election, qualification, and return of their own members, the Legislature upon a contest made may go behind the return and certificates. There would be no use of a contest if that power did not exist. That is not the point. I say while the Legislature may go behind, while they may inquire who was elected, while they may inquire whether the supervisors of election acted properly or not, the Senate of the United States is precluded by the doctrines of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MORTON. My friend places himself now on this point, that the fraudulent Legislature in Alabama may go behind the certificates and inquire, but that the true one cannot. I call my friend back to the point, that it stands confessed by all parties that the court-house Legislature contained a quorum of lawfully elected members. If my friend can get over that with certificates, let him do it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is not confessed, nor is it admitted, nor can it be conceded or proved, so far as the court-house senate are concerned especially. If you go into the inquiry of who was elected, the records themselves will furnish indubitable evidence that so far as the senator from Butler, Conecuh, and part of Escambia was concerned Mr. Martin was elected, and Mr. Miller was not elected; but I stand upon the ground that this Senate cannot go into those questions. We can inquire which of those bodies claiming to be the Legislature of Alabama has been organized and existed under the laws and constitution of that State. If we find that either of those bodies possessed all the requisites required by the constitution and laws of Alabama, we are estopped from further inquiry and must determine, because we are judges, that that Legislature having those requisites required by the constitution and laws of the State and organized in conformity therewith is the lawful Legislature and vested exclusively with legislative power, and that any other body of men claiming to be the Legislature has no legal status. If this is true—and the doctrine laid down by the Senator from Indiana in his report from which I have read fully sustains it—then the capitol Legislature which elected Mr. Sykes was at the time of his election the rightful General Assembly of the State and competent to elect a Senator, and the court-house assemblage which elected Mr. Spencer had no claim to be regarded for any purpose as a legislative body. The Senator from Indiana now ignores his own doctrine in the Louisiana case, and begs the question by assuming that the court-house assemblage was the rightful Legislature.

While I am on this point—for I mean to sustain it not only by the opinion of the Senator from Indiana in the Louisiana case, but I mean to show judicial authority, the solemn judgment of courts sustaining the principle that the members having the legal status cannot be ousted of their right by any revolutionary body that may be set up against them—I will refer to a decision of the supreme court of Pennsylvania, the case of Kerr et al. vs. Trego et al., (47 Pennsylvania State Reports.) In the city of Philadelphia the common council is elected for three years, a part of the common council going out at one year and part at another. Under the laws of Pennsylvania and under the usage of the common council of Philadelphia the members who held over were compelled to meet at the proper place for the assemblage of the body, for the purpose of receiving and inducting into office the newly-elected members. In January, 1863, there were twenty-three members holding over. It was their duty to meet at the city hall and to induct into office the newly-elected members. On the day they should have met the president of the common council and a majority of the members holding over did meet, with the clerk of the common council, for the purpose of performing the duty required of them by the laws and usages of the council, and a minority of the members who held over, from party considerations, determined that the majority should not conduct and control that organization, and hence they met at the same place and undertook to oust the chairman of the common council and the clerk of the common council from their offices by putting in nomination other officers, and thus they had a little rebellion or revolution in the room of the common council; whereupon a majority of the members holding over, headed by the president of the council, filed their bill to restrain these disorderly members in their disorganizing course; and the question was one upon which the public mind was agitated in Philadelphia, and the supreme court sat with a full bench even on the preliminary hearing of the injunction, in order that the same might be determined according to the right of the matter and the law of the land.

[Here the honorable Senator yielded for a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.]

Mr. SAULSBURY, (resuming.) Mr. President, in discussing this subject yesterday I was led by the remarks of the Senator from Indiana to consider the question which of the two bodies, that known as the capitol Legislature or that known as the court-house Legislature, was in fact the legal, proper, rightful Legislature of the State of Alabama. In the remarks submitted yesterday I assumed that if either of those bodies met and organized in conformity with the requirements and provisions of the constitution and laws of Alabama, such body thus organized and existing was and must be treated in this contest as the lawful General Assembly of that State; and if on inquiring into the rights of the contestants in this case the Senate came to the conclusion that either of those bodies met and organized in conformity with every requirement of the constitution and laws of the State of Alabama, then this Senate was estopped from any further inquiry in the case, and must treat that body thus organized and existing as the lawful Legislature of the State, vested with exclusive legislative power, competent to perform all the functions appertaining to the General Assembly of the State of Alabama. To support that position I had cited the views of the Senator from Indiana contained in his report in the Louisiana case, which fully corroborated and sustained the position which I assumed; and when I gave way to go into executive session yesterday I was about to present an authority from the supreme court of the State of Pennsylvania bearing upon the question under consideration.

I stated the substance of the complaint which led to that decision, and it is not necessary that I should repeat it now. I may be permitted, however, to say that it arose out of a contest which sprang up between members of the common council of the city of Philadelphia which split into two bodies, one of which attempted to control, contrary to the laws of Pennsylvania and the usages of the common council, the election of officers to be appointed by the common council. This attempt by one party caused a bill of complaint to be brought by the other party in order to have their right thus to interfere with the regular organization decided by the courts. The supreme court of Pennsylvania, in view of the great excitement which that contest created, as well as in view of the great principles involved in the contest, sat with a full bench, that they might hear and determine the matter. Without stating more particularly the details of the case brought before the court, I will proceed to read from the decision a few paragraphs bearing upon that case and bearing also upon this—in fact comprehending and deciding the very principle that is involved in this contest. The court, after disposing of the question of jurisdiction and deciding that they had jurisdiction to investigate the subject-matter of the bill of complaint, proceeded:

> In all cases of this kind, at least in all bodies that are under law, the law is that where there has been an authorized election for the office in controversy, the certificate of election, which is sanctioned by law or usage, is the prima facie written title to the office, and can be set aside only by a contest in the forms prescribed by law.

That meets this case exactly. It is conceded that every member of the capitol Legislature, a quorum of each house, was seated upon the certificate required to be furnished by the secretary of state. Then applying the principle of law which the court here lays down, that it is prima facie a written title to the office and can be set aside only by a contest in the forms prescribed by law, I am at a loss to know how it can be maintained in this argument that there could be any other legislative body in Alabama than that which met at the capitol or State-house, and the members of which body were seated upon the certificates which the law requires. The court say:

> No doubt this gives great power to dishonest election officers, but we know no remedy for this but by the choice of honest men. When party fealty is a higher qualification than honesty or competence, we must expect fraud and force to rule, and a man must be an Ajax or an Ulysses to be qualified for office.
> On the division of a body—

That is this case—

> On the division of a body that ought to be a unit, the test of which represents the legitimate, social succession is, which of them has maintained the regular forms of organization according to the laws and usages of the body, or, in the absence of these, according to the laws, customs, and usages of similar bodies in like cases, or in analogy to them. This is the uniform rule in such cases. It is always applied in the case of church divisions, and was so applied by us three times last year in the church cases already alluded to. The courts can never apply it to divisions in the supreme Legislature, because that body is subject to no judicial authority, and cannot be. They, too, ought to adhere to this rule, for order and regularity are always worthy of respect, and especially so in cases where there is no authority that can enforce their claims. But we need not dwell on this point, for it is admitted that this rule is the test of legitimate organization.

Applying these principles which govern the decisions of courts, I ask, can it be possible that the Legislature which met at the court-house and elected Mr. Spencer had any title? It is not pretended that it had complied with the forms of law; but, on the contrary, it is conceded in the report of the committee, of which the Senator from Indiana is chairman, that every requisite, every requirement of the law and constitution of Alabama had been met and followed by the capitol Legislature. It is admitted in the report which I hold in my hand, it is not questioned in the argument on this occasion, that the capitol Legislature had been organized in strict compliance and conformity with every provision of law, with every requirement of the constitution of Alabama; and if that is true, then the doctrine of the supreme court of Pennsylvania applied to it must satisfy every Senator on this floor that the capitol Legislature alone was possessed of any legislative power, and that all of the legislative power and authority of the State were vested absolutely and indefeasibly in it.

I have enunciated the law as laid down by the supreme court of Pennsylvania in cases of this kind. Now, what are the facts? It is not disputed that the capitol Legislature met at the time appointed by law. It is not disputed that it met at the capitol of the State, in the senate chamber and in the hall of the house of representatives. It is not disputed that there was a quorum in each body having the certificates required by the laws of the State to be issued to members of the General Assembly by the secretary of state. It is in fact not disputed that the members there seated in the senate and house of representatives had all the legal and constitutional endowments requisite to constitute them members of the lawful General Assemby. They were, according to that decision, prima facie entitled to their seats. The lieutenant-governor, who under the constitution was required to be present and assist in the organization of the senate, could not rightfully, could not without the assumption of power not conferred upon him, object to any member of the senate who presented his credentials and the certificate of the secretary of state taking his seat as a member of the senate; nor could the speaker of the house of representatives, who under the constitution of Alabama holds over for the purpose of assisting in the organization of the succeeding Legislature, rightfully object to any member of the house presenting his credentials, presenting the certificate issued under the constitution by the secretary of state, taking his seat. They were on the face of their credentials entitled to take their seats in the body, just as Mr. Spencer a year ago on the face of his papers was entitled to take the seat which he now holds. Any other doctrine would place it in the power of a majority to exclude everybody opposed to them. The majority of any legislative body, if they are not required to pay any respect to the requirements of law, might prevent any one opposed to them in political sentiment from entering into the body at all. You see the consequences that might result under a high state of political feeling by an abnegation on the part of legislative bodies of the provision of the laws and the constitution appertaining to the organization of legislative bodies.

I could cite on this point many other authorities equally strong; but it is not necessary to detain the Senate by so doing. I think the principle is clearly settled that where a Legislature has been organized in conformity with the requirements of law, or, in the absence of law, in compliance with the usages of the legislative bodies of the State, such Legislature is entitled to be respected as the rightful Legislature, and all its acts ought to receive full faith and credit.

In the senate of Alabama thus organized there were nineteen members. The senate consisting of thirty-three, there was more than a quorum. In the house of representatives at the capitol there were fifty-four members. A full house consisting of one hundred, there was a full quorum present. The Legislature thus constituted, I again repeat, had all the legislative authority of the State. It contained a constitutional quorum in both houses at the time of the election of Mr. Sykes. No one will question that it had power to enact statutes, and had authority to perform all the functions of a Legislature. No one can rightfully question upon any hypothesis, upon any assumption whatever, that that Legislature, thus met and organized and existing in compliance with every requirement and provision of law, was possessed with the full powers and functions of the General Assembly of that State; that every act of that General Assembly thus constituted was of binding force. The governor of the State at that time, Governor Lindsay, so regarded it. He recognized it as the lawful General Assembly of the State and sent his annual message to it. It performed the functions of the General Assembly in counting the votes for the governor-elect, and the governor, lieutenant-governor, and all the State officials elected, upon whose vote it was to decide, accepted at its hands the offices which they now fill. This Legislature, therefore, performed one of the most delicate, one of the highest and most important functions that can be devolved upon a legislative body. The right of the capitol Legislature to count the votes for the executive officers of the State, and thus induct them into office, was accepted by the republican governor and the republican lieutenant-governor, who accepted their offices upon such count, although they afterward turned their backs upon the very Legislature that inducted them into office; I will not say from party considerations; I will leave to the inference of the fair and honest judgment of the country the reasons and motives of their refusal to recognize the very legislative body that had inducted them into office.

If there was any person claiming to have been elected, claiming that he ought to be a member of the Legislature, the laws of Alabama provided him a remedy in a contest. These gentlemen who were seated were entitled to hold their seats until the contest was made, and for such contest the laws of Alabama fully provide. The law of Alabama is:

SEC. 51. That any elector contesting the election of any senator or representative to the General Assembly, he must first give security for the costs of such contest, which must be acknowledged before, and approved by, the clerk of the circuit court of any county of the senatorial district, if such contest be for the election of a senator, or if the election of a representative, by the clerk of the circuit court of the county in which such election was held.

SEC. 52. That the contesting party must next give notice to the person whose election is contested, by having served on him, or left at his usual place of residence, by the sheriff or some constable, a copy of the grounds of contestation and affidavit as required by the provision of section 45 of this act.

And the fifty-fourth section states—

That the original statements of the grounds of contest and affidavit must, after such service, be returned to the office of the clerk of the circuit court, in which security for the costs has been given, with the return of the officer indorsed, which is presumptive evidence of the service.

So you see that persons seated upon certificates, after being thus seated have a right to the office, have a property in the seats they occupy, and cannot be displaced except in conformity with these provisions of law. No revolutionary body can break up their organization. They are the rightful members of the Legislature; they have a property in the office; and the law requires that before they shall be ousted from their seats, even upon a contest, they shall have the grounds of the contest laid before them. No such contest was made, and those members continued members of the capitol Legislature as the only rightful Legislature of the State until, in their liberality, they agreed, for the sake of preventing any discord in the State, to become merged under the arrangement proposed by the Attorney-General in what was afterward known as the fusion Legislature. But I wish to direct attention to the point that up to that time every act of the capitol Legislature was valid, was binding, was authoritative, and it was before that time that they elected Mr. Sykes. His election therefore being an election held by a legislative body rightfully and constitutionally organized and existing, entitles him clearly and unquestionably to a seat on this floor.

But it is said in the argument upon this case, and it is said in substance in the report of the committee, that these constitutional and legal requirements are but mere forms, the means of inducting into office the persons who have been elected. No, sir; they are the tests, the requirements of the laws and constitution of the State for the ascertainment of the result of the election. Did the Legislature of Alabama provide as a mere matter of form that the inspectors should certify their poll-lists and their ballots to the supervisors of elections? Did the Legislature of Alabama provide as mere form that the supervisors of election should sit in a judicial capacity and examine the poll-lists and the votes, compare them with the registration in the counties, throw out such votes as had been fraudulently cast, and certify their finding to the secretary of state? Did it provide as a mere matter of form that after all this machinery had been gone through with, the secretary of state should issue his certificates to the persons elected? Did it as mere form provide that an omission to perform this duty by any of these officers should meet the penalties of the law? Is that all form?

Why, sir, it is trifling with a great and grave subject. It is trifling with the rights of the people of Alabama; it is trifling with the rights of the Senator-elect, Mr. Sykes, to treat the legal ascertainment of who was elected to the Legislature as mere form, and thus seek to go behind that and inquire into matters appertaining to election officers. He must take a very narrow, a very contracted, a very one-sided view of constitutional and legal requirements w would seek to degrade them to the mere level of a matter of for that might be ignored and treated with contempt and derision. And yet it is absolutely necessary to treat all these requirements of the constitution and laws of Alabama in that respect as mere form, as non-essential, as of no binding force or validity, or otherwise no argument by any Senator upon this floor, however ingenious, can give the least color of right to the election of Mr. Spencer or to the legal existence as a legislative body of the court-house Legislature that elected him.

Was it mere form, Mr. President, that the people of that State had prepared a senate chamber and a hall for the house of representatives; that they had put into the constitution of the State that the lieutenant-governor should be present to assist in the organization of the senate, and that the speaker of the last house of representatives should hold over until the subsequent Legislature had met and was organized for the purpose of assisting in the organization of that subsequent Legislature? I repeat again, and I repeat it deliberately, that it is treating constitutional and legal requirements in a manner unworthy of this Senate, it is degrading them below the character the people of Alabama intended to give to them to so regard all the provisions of the constitution and laws of Alabama in reference to the ascertainment of who should be members of the General Assembly of the State, which was to make their laws, to protect their property, to protect their lives, and to protect their every interest.

Now, how was it with the Legislature that elected Mr. Spencer? Let us look at that Legislature for a moment. On the day appointed by law for the meeting of the General Assembly of the State, forty-six members elected to the house of representatives and holding the certificates of the secretary of state, and fourteen members of the senate holding the certificates of the secretary of state of their election as members of the senate, knowing that a quorum of members in each house composed of gentlemen who were politically opposed to them would be present in the halls provided by the State of Alabama for the assembling of the Legislature, neglected and refused to meet in the senate chamber and in the hall of the house of representatives, but went to a different place, went outside of the jurisdiction of Alabama, not outside of its territorial limits, but went into the court-house belonging to the United States and under the control and authority exclusively of the United States. They there met and claimed to be a legislative body. They met without authority of law. They were not presided over by the officers required to preside over the senate and house of representatives. They did not meet in the place required for the meeting of the General Assembly of the State—at least required by implication arising out of the provision made for the senate chamber and for the hall of the house of representatives. They met in contempt of law. They met in defiance of law; and when they had thus met they claimed to be a legislative body. I hesitate not to say, testing it by the laws and constitution of Alabama, testing it by the usages of legislative bodies everywhere, testing its real character by every proper consideration, that it was a revolutionary body set up in defiance of the laws of the State, set up in derogation of the peace and honor of the State. And that is the body that elected Mr. Spencer. He was not elected by the fusion Legislature. He was elected by the court-house Legislature, that never had in it a quorum of persons in either house that had the legal endowment of members of the General Assembly.

Mr. President, the importance of this subject would justify me in trespassing for a much longer time upon the attention of the Senate, but I simply desire to present this case succinctly and plainly, so that when the Senate come to pass upon it they shall have a clear view of the questions involved. I shall, therefore, not travel over much of the ground that was occupied by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. HAMILTON] yesterday, who presented very ably and forcibly the right of the contestant, Mr. Sykes; but I wish to call attention to one point that was mentioned by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] one of the considerations which he pressed in favor of retaining Mr. Spencer and against the seating of Mr. Sykes. He called our attention to the results that would follow, and declared that the seating of Mr. Sykes and thereby the recognition of the capitol Legislature as the lawful General Assembly of the State of Alabama would be the indorsement of a fraudulent conspiracy—that was his language—and that it would be making the Senate particeps criminis in what he deemed a great public crime. So far as conspiracy or fraudulent intent on the part of any one is concerned I commented upon that yesterday, and I do not desire to refer to it again; but I say here in the presence of the Senate that there is not a shadow of proof, not a tittle of evidence, that warrants the accusation of fraud against any party sitting in the senate or house of representatives in the capitol Legislature, or against the secretary of state or any election officer, or any person who had anything to do with the organization of that Legislature, even in the most incipient step. Therefore I repeat what I said yesterday, that the assumption that there was a fraudulent conspiracy is wholly gratuitous and unsustained by any facts in this case.

Why were not these allegations of fraud pressed before the committee? I do not wish to speak of anything that is not proper to speak of; but the sessions of that committee were public, and therefore I may speak of what transpired in the committee. I know full well that the pleas put in by those who represented Mr. Spencer did by implication raise the question of fraud, and I know that on the part of counsel who represented Mr. Sykes he invited the most thorough investigation and tendered the list of the witnesses by whom he would make proof to the contrary of any such insinuation; and after such an invitation, open, frank, manly, bold, and defiant, and which was not accepted, there was no desire to press the question, and the question of fraud was not raised in argument. Therefore, that fact being known to Mr. Spencer and all who represent his side of the question in this discussion, it is too late, and, as I said yesterday, it is not fair in this discussion that such insinuations should be made. Mr. Sykes is not here to consummate or to claim the benefits of fraud. I know personally but little of Mr. Sykes; but all I have heard of his character and reputation at home justifies me in saying that he is not the man who would accept as a gratuity the benefits of any fraud or even the benefits of anything that was not strictly his legal right.

But, sir, as results have been pointed out by the Senator from Indiana, I presume that I am at liberty to call attention to results which he did not name. What will be the results, what may be the consequences of the action of the Senate if it should determine by its decision in this contest that the Legislature of Alabama met in conformity with law, met in compliance with all the requirements of law, is not the legal Legislature of the State, but that a revolutionary body, which met without authority of law, met in contempt of law, is the Legislature of the State? Will it not be a proclamation on the part of the Senate of the United States that the members-elect of the Legislature belonging to any party dissatisfied with the results of an election, instead of complying with the law and assembling at the place and at the time required for the meeting of the General Assembly, may go into an out of the way place, there meet and proclaim themselves the Legislature of the State? Would not that be a very natural consequence to follow in every State where there was any great approach to equality in the votes of the different parties? Would it not follow as a natural and legitimate consequence of the action of this Senate in declaring that the capitol Legislature was not the Legislature, but that the court-house Legislature met without any authority of law, was in truth and in fact the Legislature of Alabama? Would it not encourage public disorder in the States, and would it not bring our form of government into contempt and into reproach? I have referred to these consequences in reply to the suggestions of the Senator from Indiana, and I call upon Senators to weigh well their action, not only because the private rights of Mr. Sykes, who was properly elected, are involved in this case, but because the rights of the people of Alabama and public order throughout the country may be involved in this question.

Mr. President, I will not trespass longer on the time of the Senate in this discussion. There are some other considerations to which I might properly direct attention, but I have already occupied more of the time of the Senate yesterday and to-day than I had intended. In fact I did not desire when the discussion commenced to participate in it at all. I now leave the matter with the Senate so far as I am concerned. I hope its decision will be such as will comport with its own character and with the just rights of Alabama and the parties immediately concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. TIPTON in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. HAMILTON,] which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out all after the word "resolved" in the resolution reported by the committee, and to insert:

That Hon. George E. Spencer, not having been elected a Senator from the State of Alabama by the lawful Legislature of that State, is not entitled to a seat in this body.

Resolved, That Francis W. Sykes, having been duly and legally elected a Senator from the State of Alabama for the constitutional term commencing March 4, 1873, is entitled to the seat in this body now held by George E. Spencer.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I suppose a separate vote will be taken on these resolutions?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be first taken on the first resolution in the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COOPER, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with my colleague, [Mr. BROWNLOW.] If he were here he would vote "nay" on this amendment, and I should vote "yea."

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, (when the name of Mr. DENNIS was called.) On this question my colleague [Mr. DENNIS] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. PEASE.] If my colleague were here he would vote "yea," and the Senator from Mississippi would vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY, (when Mr. GOLDTHWAITE's name was called.) I desire to state that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. GOLDTHWAITE] left here yesterday unwell, as I am informed by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. NORWOOD,] desiring to speak on the subject; but he is not present and I suppose it is on account of sickness.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 11, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bogy, Davis, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Johnston, McCreery, Merrimon, Ransom, and Saulsbury—11.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Boreman, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Dorsey, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Scott, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, and Wright—33.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Boutwell, Brownlow, Buckingham, Cameron, Cooper, Cragin, Dennis, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Jones, Kelly, Lewis, Norwood, Pease, Robertson, Sargent, Schurz, Spencer, Stevenson, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, and Windom—29.

So the first branch of the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the second resolution in the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The second branch of the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that they be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Mr. Sykes.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That Francis W. Sykes, late contestant for a seat in this body from the State of Alabama, be allowed the salary of a Senator from the 4th day of March, 1873, up to the 28th day of May, 1874, and one mileage each way.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

> The governor, the secretary, the chief justice, and associate justices shall each receive the same annual salary as is now prescribed by law for like officers in existing Territories.

Mr. BOREMAN. That merely makes it conform to the existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOREMAN. I move to strike out the last two sections in regard to a land office, a bill having been passed on that subject since this bill was reported.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. BOGY. I wish to propose an amendment. I move to strike out as name of the Territory the word "Pembina" wherever it occurs, and in lieu of that name insert "Algonquin."

Mr. BOREMAN. I have no objection to that amendment. That name seems to be preferred by the friends of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. This is a bill to create a new Territory. Have we full information as to the extent of its capacity?

Mr. RAMSEY. Yes; there is a full report.

Mr. STEWART. I do not expect to defeat the bill; but I simply want to go on the record as making this remark, that we have too many Territories now, more than can ever become States. Idaho, it is admitted, will never have population enough to be a State. Even as to Montana, with all its extent of territory, it is doubted by some whether it will ever have sufficient population to make a State. Wyoming is clearly given up, or will be by anybody who goes over the Pacific Railroad. It is evident that people have not resources for a State. We have made a mistake in having too small Territories. I do not believe there is sufficient good land in the whole of Dakota Territory to make more than one State. Now you are dividing it. The result will be that these divisions of the country will have to remain permanently Territories, or you will have to consolidate them when they become States, which is a very difficult thing to do, or you will have to admit a lot of small States which will add very much to the inequality that now exists, and create great dissatisfaction.

I think a bill to consolidate these Territories into about half the number we have, and then admit some of them as States, would be better legislation than this. I do not think there is sufficient territory in Dakota to divide up with a prospect of having two good States. I say this not with any expectation of defeating the bill, because the object of the bill is a good one, to create more offices and provide for more politicians, and for that reason I do not expect to beat it. [Laughter.] But I do not believe it has any real merits.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to add to line 10 of section 5 the word "sex."

Mr. BOREMAN. That is understood, I apprehend, by members of the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. I want it to be understood. Let it be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. If the amendment be adopted, the clause will then read:

> Provided, That the Legislative Assembly shall not, at any time, abridge the right of suffrage, or to hold office, on account of sex, race, color, or previous condition of servitude of any resident of the Territory.

Mr. SARGENT. In the same connection I move in the first line of section 5 to strike out the word "male," so as to read "every inhabitant of the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. SARGENT. At the time when the last national convention of the republican party assembled in Philadelphia which nominated the present President of the United States for his second term, there was assembled a body of able, respectable ladies of the United States, who urged upon that convention a consideration of the subject involved in the amendment which I propose; and as a concession to the demand made by those persons a plank was inserted in the platform whereby it was declared that the republican party would treat with consideration the claims of women to be admitted to additional rights.

Since that time, although the republican party has had a two-thirds majority in both Houses of Congress and elected the President of its choice at the succeeding election and now has full power and has had ever since the assembling of this Congress to carry out this promise, not one step has been taken in this direction. It has not been for want of petition or solicitation. It certainly has not been because the matter has not been called to the attention of both Houses of Congress, for petition after petition has been presented in this body and in the other House, and no action has been taken except adverse action in the other House, the committee reporting back those petitions with the recommendation that the prayer be not granted. In the Senate we have not yet been favored with the views of the committee to whom those petitions were referred. Considering the magnitude of the question—that a great constitutional question was involved—it might be assumed that these subjects would receive very early attention at the hands of the committees of the Senate; but up to this time we have had no light on the matter shed by them, and certainly there has been no congressional action in any direction looking to the redemption of this pledge.

I believe, Mr. President, that the amendment which I offer to this bill is justified by the organic law of the United States, and in fact required by that law. Before the adoption of the fourteenth and fifteenth articles of amendment to the Constitution of the United States women were hedged out of the ballot-box by the use of the word "male." Since that time another rule has been prescribed by the organic law, and it is made the right of all citizens of the United States to approach the ballot-box and exercise this highest privilege of a citizen. By the fourteenth article of amendment it is provided that "all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside." This most important declaration is now the organic law of the United States. It does not say "all males born or naturalized in the United States," but "all persons," and it cannot be contended successfully that a woman is not a person, and not a person within the meaning of this clause of the Constitution.

This being the status of all individuals, male and female, they being citizens of the United States, it is provided that "no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." Of course if any State is prohibited from doing this, any Territory should be prohibited from doing it, because no Territory can constitutionally do that which a State itself cannot do.

Then, if women are citizens of the United States and there is no right to abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, as proclaimed by the supreme law of the land, what are these privileges and immunities? Grant White, in his able work on Words and Their Uses, defines, on page 100, the privileges and immunities of citizens, and among them gives the right to vote and the right to hold office. Webster gives the same definition of the word "citizen" and so does Worcester, and Bouvier's Law Dictionary speaks expressly of these rights of citizens of the United States to vote and hold office; and there is little adverse authority to these definitions.

The Constitution, if it needs construction at all—and it would hardly seem to need it in a case so plain as this—must be construed by the ordinary and authoritative use of the words contained in it; and here is both the ordinary and the authoritative use of those words.

This matter has not been without judicial construction. In the Circuit Court Reports, (4 Washington, 371,) it was held that these privileges and immunities included the right to hold office and to exercise the elective franchise; and this view was adopted by Chancellor Kent in his Commentaries, volume 2, page 71. So that both by United States courts and the best and highest commentary upon the laws of the United States the construction which I contend for of the fourteenth amendment is insisted upon and ably illustrated.

The considerations which I have urged address themselves not merely to republicans, they address themselves with great force to my democratic friends who are such sticklers for the Constitution. Although that is true, nevertheless the republican party has pledged itself especially to a respectful consideration of these demands in its last national platform, and it has control of both Houses of Congress and of the executive department.

Passing from that consideration, we have all persons born or naturalized in the United States declared by the Constitution to be citizens; and we have the meaning of the word "citizen" given by our courts, by our lexicographers, by our law commentators; we have further their "privileges and immunities" settled by all these authorities to include the right to vote and the right to hold office.

In consonance with this organic law, the policy of which is not open to discussion because it has been adopted according to all the legal forms by the people of the United States, I offer this amendment. Were this the time and place, and were not the discussion foreclosed by the considerations which I have already advanced, I might speak at some length upon the advantage which there would be in the admission of women to the suffrage. I might point with some pride to the experiment which has been made in Wyoming where women hold office, where they vote, where they have the most orderly society of any of the Territories, where the experiment is approved by the executive officers of the United States by their courts, by their press, and by the people generally; and if it operates so well in Wyoming, where it has rescued that Territory from a state of comparative lawlessness to one of the most orderly in the Union, I ask why it might not operate equally well in the Territory of Pembina or any other Territory? I hope the time is not far distant when some of the older States of the Union like New York or Massachusetts or Ohio may give this experiment a fuller chance. But so far as it has gone, the experiment has been entirely in favor of legislation of this character, of admitting women to the ballot-box. And I do not believe that in putting these higher responsibilities upon women we degrade their character, that we subject them to uncongenial pursuits, that we injure their moral tone, that we tarnish their delicacy, that we in any way make them less noble and admirable as women, as wives, and mothers. I believe that by realizing the intention of the Constitution, which uses words that are so fully explained by our courts and by our writers upon the uses of words, we simply open a wider avenue to women for usefulness to themselves and to society. I think we give them an opportunity, instead of traveling the few and confined roads that are open to them now, to engage more generally in the business of life under some guarantee of their success. I believe that, instead of driving them to irregular efforts like those which they recently have made in many of the States to overthrow liquor selling and consumption and its desolation of their homes, it will give them an opportunity through the ballot-box to protect their families, to break up the nefarious traffic, and purify society. As it is now, their energies in this direction are repressed, and sometimes in order to have force are compelled to be exercised even in opposition to law. I would give them an opportunity to exercise them under the forms of law, and I would enforce the law by the accession of this pure element. I do not think that they would be corrupted by it, but rather that society and politics and your laws would be purified by admitting them to the ballot-box and giving them this opportunity.

I therefore trust that, in the spirit of the pledge that was made by us as republicans, in the spirit of the adhesion to the Constitution professed by our democratic friends, there may be an assent to this amendment, and that the United States will ingraft this feature in the organic law of this new Territory. There is nothing peculiar in the form of this proposition. All the original steps which we took toward circumscribing slavery were taken by ingrafting provisos on the organic laws of Territories, from the Nebraska Territory down, providing that the Territories when organized should not do this or that affecting the liberty of human beings. In the mode pursued by that legislation, and according to those precedents, I now propose that the Constitution shall be invoked; that women shall have the right in this Territory which is guaranteed by the organic law.

Mr. STEWART. If this region is to be created into a Territory, I think it eminently proper that this amendment should be adopted. The question of female suffrage is a question that is being seriously considered by a large portion of the people of the United States. We may think lightly of it here; we may think it never will be accomplished; but there are a great many earnest people who believe if females had the ballot they could better protect themselves, be more independent, and occupy useful positions in life which are now denied to them. Whether they be correct or not, it is not necessary for us to determine in passing upon this amendment. Here is a new Territory to be created and it is a good opportunity to try this experiment. If it works badly, when the Territory becomes a State there is nobody committed. It is not an amendment of the organic law of the nation. This is a bill simply providing for the organization of a Territory and for a preliminary government, and I should like for one to see this experiment tried up in the region near Minnesota where this new government is to be inaugurated. If it works well, it may spread elsewhere. It certainly can do no harm in that country. There are very few people there.

It is suggested by my friend on my right [Mr. CONKLING] that it cannot spread unless it is catching. [Laughter.] If it works well, if it succeeds in protecting females in their rights and enabling them to assert their rights elsewhere and obtain such employment as is suitable to them, I hope it will become catching and spread all over the country, if that is the light in which it is to be treated. I am in earnest about this matter. I think this new Territory is the place to try the experiment right here. If it works badly, we can see it and no great harm will be done. If it works well, the example will be a good one and will be imitated.

There is certainly no pressing necessity for the establishment of this Territory. I doubt the propriety of it very seriously. As I said before, we are making too many Territories. We are dividing this country up into small subdivisions that never can become States. But if we are to make this Territory, it affords us an opportunity to try a fair experiment on the subject of female suffrage. This Territory is up in the far North where people have to work pretty hard to live. It will be inhabited by a frugal and industrious people necessarily, if it be inhabited at all, and let this experiment there be tried. They are trying the experiment in Utah, and we are attempting to break that up on the ground that there are a large number of females voting there, that they are controlling politics, and it is not a fair thing. I do not think Utah is a fair place to try the experiment.

We first tried the experiment of negro suffrage in the District of Columbia, and it became catching and spread all over the South. Now, when there is a large portion of the people of the United States desirous of having this principle illustrated, here is a fair field for the illustration of it, that they may see and we may see whether there is anything in their arguments by the practical illustration of them for a few years until this new Territory shall become a State. I say let them have female suffrage there and try it. If it works well, their arguments will be vindicated; if it works badly, it need not be followed. It will do nobody any harm. It is a mere act of Congress that can be repealed at the next session if it works any injury.

I believe in Wyoming Territory, where the people themselves have adopted female suffrage, they are satisfied with it and do not want to repeal it. I believe they are holding on to it there. Now, let us in this far-off region in the North, among the frugal and hardy people who must settle there, recognize womanhood to the full extent; let us give them a chance to vindicate their rights and establish their own laws and see if they will build up a good society. I want to see the experiment fairly tried. I do not say that I am satisfied that it will work out all the good results that are expected by its advocates, but there are enough people in favor of it to justify us in allowing the experiment to be fairly tried in a place where nobody can be injured by it, and I think we may expect good results from it.

I hope the amendment will be adopted. I think it is but fair, when so large a portion of the people of the United States cherish this idea, that they should have a chance to see it illustrated in a country where it will be illustrated fairly, among the honest frugal people in the far North, in a country where they must all labor to live, and let us see whether they can build up a community that shall be more desirable having female suffrage than otherwise. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will consent that this shall become a part of the law. Let us try it. It will do no harm.

Mr. BOREMAN. I do not propose to enter into a discussion of the question of the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of woman suffrage, nor a discussion of the propriety or impropriety of the adoption of a provision in favor of it upon this bill. I think this is not a very good time to "try experiments," to use the language of the Senator from Nevada, and I trust we may have a vote upon this question. I suppose the mind of every Senator here is made up on it. I trust that we shall have a vote upon it and that the bill may be acted upon finally, and let us go to other business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

Mr. SARGENT and Mr. SPRAGUE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. MORTON. I desire simply to state my views upon this amendment, views long entertained. I am in favor of the amendment upon what I regard as the fundamental principles of our Government, upon the theory upon which we have based our Government from the beginning. The Declaration of Independence says:

> We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

The word "men" in that connection does not mean males, but it means the human family; that all human beings are created equal. This will hardly be denied. I remember it was formerly contended that the Declaration of Independence in this clause did not include black people. It was argued learnedly and frequently, in this Chamber and out of it, that the history surrounding the adoption of that declaration showed that white men only were intended. But that was not the general judgment of the people of this country. It was held to embrace all colors and all races. It embraces both sexes; not simply males, but females. All human beings are created equal. That is the foundation principle of our Government. It then goes on to say:

That, to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that, whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness.

If these rights are fundamental, if they belong to all human beings as such, if they are God-given rights, then all persons having these God-given rights have a right to use the means for their preservation. The means is government: "To secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

I ask you whether the women of this country have ever given their consent to this Government? Have they the means of giving their consent to it? The colored men had not given their consent to it. Why? Because they had not the right to vote. There is but one way that the consent to government can be given, and that is by a right to a voice in that government, and that is the right to vote.

I know it was argued in times past in regard to the South that the master gave the consent on the part of his slaves; that he represented them; that he had their good at heart, and that he gave their consent. We denied that. We know it was not true.

Now, sir, to come down to the main question, I ask if the women of this country have given their consent to this Government? You say they are consenting. I say they are assenting to it, the majority of them; but they have no means of giving their consent to this Government within the theory of the Declaration of Independence; and they cannot consent to it unless they have a voice, have a right to vote "yes" or to vote "no."

What was the old theory of the common law? It was that the father represented the interests of his daughter, the husband of his wife, and the son of his mother. They were deprived of all legal rights in a state of marriage, because it was said that they were taken care of by those who stood to them in these relations; but they never were taken care of. The husband never took care of the rights of his wife at common law; the father never took care of the rights of his daughter; the son never took care of the rights of his mother. The husband at common law was a tyrant and a despot. Why, sir, he absorbed the legal existence of his wife at common law; she could not make a contract except as his agent. Her legal existence was destroyed, and the very moment the marriage was consummated he became the absolute owner of all her personal property. What was the theory of it? The old theory of the common law, as given in elementary writers, was that if the wife was allowed to own property separate from her husband it would make a distinct interest; it would break up and destroy the harmony of the marriage relation; the marriage relation must be a unit; there must be but one interest; and therefore the legal existence of the wife must be merged into that of the husband. I believe a writer as late as Blackstone laid it down that it would not do to permit the wife to hold any property in severalty from her husband, because it would give to her an interest apart from his.

We have got over that. It took us one hundred and fifty years to get past that, and from year to year in this country, especially in the last twenty-five years, we have added to the rights of the wife in regard to property and in many other respects. We now give to her a legal status in this country that she has not in England or in any European country. She has now a legal status that she had not twenty-five years ago, and progress is still going on in that direction. While it was argued by old law-writers and old law-makers that to allow women to hold property separate from their husbands was to break up the harmony of the marriage relation, we know practically that it has not worked that way. We know that as we have made women independent, recognized her legal existence as a wife, secured her rights, and not made her the mere slave of her husband, it has elevated her. We know that instead of disturbing the marriage relation, it has improved it constantly; and I believe that the woman has the same natural right to a voice in this Government that the man has. If we believe in the theory of our Government that must be so. We say that all men, all human beings, are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, and among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and that to attain these rights Governments are instituted, which derive their just powers from the consent of the governed; and yet here are one-half of the people of the United States who have no power to give their consent or their dissent. The theory of our Government is expressly violated in regard to woman. I believe that as you make woman the equal of man in regard to civil rights, rights of property, rights of person, political rights, you elevate her, you make her happier; and as you do that you elevate the male sex, her husband, her son, her brother, and her father.

This idea that women will be degraded by allowing them to go to the polls comes down to us from other countries and from remote periods of civilization. Why, sir, in countries now that claim to be civilized it is said that to allow the wife or the mother to go to the dinner-table with the husband and meet his guests face to face degrades her and degrades them. In some countries a woman must not appear upon the streets unless she is so closely veiled that she cannot be recognized; for it is said to allow her to go upon the streets barefaced or so thinly veiled that she can be recognized, subjects her to insult and degrades her; and in some countries to-day it destroys her character as effectually as other things would destroy her character in our country.

We know that is a prejudice; and the idea that woman will be degraded by giving her the right of suffrage is a remnant of that same idea. It is born of the same parentage. It has no sounder reason for it than these other nations have. I believe that to give women the right of suffrage would elevate the character of suffrage in this country. It would make the polls more decent, more respectable than they are now. Why, sir, fifty years ago the idea of women attending political meetings was intolerable to a great many people. The idea of her going to lectures of a scientific character was thought to be out of all reason. But now women go to political meetings. In almost every canvass in my State there are nearly as many women who attend the meetings as men. What is the effect of it? Are they degraded? On the contrary, their presence elevates the character of those meetings. It is an assurance of peace, it is a security against rowdyism and violence, because in this country men have to be very low if they are guilty of rowdyism or blackguardism in the presence of women. We have habitual respect for them; and I can testify from my own experience in politics that the attendance of women upon political meetings, so far from degrading them or affecting men injuriously, has elevated the character of political assemblages, has made them more respectable, has secured to them immunity from violence, and from degrading scenes and blackguardism, and so it will be at the polls. When a woman is allowed to go to the polls and vote her sentiments and convictions, it will have the same effect there that her presence has in society. There is not a bit of doubt about it. And there will be no more discord in the family circle than there was when in violation and against the old principles of the common law you gave a woman the right to retain her legal existence after marriage and to own property separate and apart from her husband. These old notions have been giving way one after another little by little, and we shall finally come down to the true theory of our Government in all respects, and that is to allow every person, man or woman, who is to be affected and controlled by the Government, whose interest or whose happiness is to be controlled by or depends on the administration of that Government, to have an equal voice in that Government. Therefore I give my vote heartily and cheerfully for this amendment.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I confess, sir, that I was delighted when my distinguished friend from California presented this amendment. Unlike my distinguished friend from Indiana, however, I am a new convert to this doctrine. He has been of this opinion long since, I am gratified to learn. I have reflected much on this subject, and within the last few months I have settled down in my determination, and that is to advocate this great measure. Why have I so recently arrived at that conclusion? In the last few months the women's war upon the whisky trade and intemperance at large has prompted me thus to declare unequivocally for them and their glorious efforts. It is from them and with them that I hope, judging from their success up to this time, to save this great nation from the worst curse known to the human family, that of intemperance; and I believe it is they and only they through Almighty God who can do it. Man has been found incompetent and unable to perform that great and desired object. And gratified am I to receive the idea from my distinguished friend that if women had the right to vote they would not be expelled from many pursuits as they are or required to go upon the streets as they now do seeking in self-defense the preservation of man.

There is one fact that might very well, it seems to me, be presented here. All power, if you please, with scarcely a modification necessary, would be within the province and would be controlled by the women of the country. Why, sir, they can say to this people, to this Government, to this generation, to this nation, "Thou shalt go no farther." They are able to control it. Man is not. I do not know that this idea would be very remote. The great Framer of the world, the Creator, created man first. Woman was an afterthought, if you please. But the idea I suggest is that women are not the inferiors of men, as is often alleged. The Deity does not do anything that does not prove to be superior in any sense of the word. They having been created second, I look upon them as the superior. The effect of this measure on politics has been so well described by the distinguished Senator from Indiana that I need not comment upon that branch of the subject. They would tend to purify the atmosphere morally, either at the ballot-box or anywhere else, I care not where it may be. They are more directly interested in good morals, in the temperance of the world and everything bearing on that line, than the husbands are. I think it is a right they are entitled to in every sense of the word, and from this time henceforth I am a woman's man.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, I will not yield to any Senator in the measure of my respect for and admiration of woman; I do not propose by any act or word of mine to detract from her dignity or to diminish the pleasures she may enjoy in this life; but I claim the right to be the judge, in conjunction with herself, of what is best calculated to elevate and protect her dignity and promote her happiness. I do not believe that woman herself believes that her dignity would be elevated or her happiness promoted by putting her upon an exact equality, civilly or politically, in both points of view, with man; and very strong and controlling evidence of that fact is, that neither in this country nor in any country has woman—I mean the great mass of them—ever demanded such a state of things. Our Government has existed for about a hundred years, and the number of females who have demanded to be invested with equal political and civil rights and to be placed upon an exact equality with the male portion of our population, compared with those who have remained in retirement, who have staid at their homes and lived and ruled within that sphere in which it seems God intended that they should rule, is as a drop in the sea. So it appears in this conclusive way that the women of America do not demand this state of things. They do not protect themselves by votes, nor do they need to do so. They shape the man when he is a child, rule him with the power of love, and thus they shape, affect, and often control the destinies of men, nations, and empires. They rule in the domestic and moral world, and their invincible weapon is the power of holy love.

I do not propose, however, to go into a discussion in detail of what the women desire or what we ought to grant. My main purpose is to reply very briefly to some remarks that fell from the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] in reference to the Declaration of Independence. I differ, with all respect, from the revolutionary construction which he puts upon that instrument. It is true, as he says, that the Declaration of Independence provides in these words:

> We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these, are life, liberty, and the pursuit or happiness.

Now, I maintain in the first place that we must put a reasonable construction on those words. What is the manifestly proper construction to put upon them? Plainly, to my mind, that all men are created equal in point of natural rights, certainly not equal in point of civil rights, not equal in point of political rights. By nature man has no civil or political rights.

Mr. MORTON. I spoke of natural rights.

Mr. MERRIMON. My friend did not say "natural rights."

Mr. MORTON. I meant that, and say it now.

Mr. MERRIMON. Natural rights are one sort of rights; civil rights are another sort of rights; and political rights are a third sort of rights. Every human being has a natural right to life and liberty; but every human being has not a natural right to government. He has not a natural right to the civil rights conferred and provided and defined by a system of government. When he becomes subject to civil government he surrenders a part of his natural rights—agrees that civil government may regulate these and then enjoys the benefit of civil rights conferred by civil government; but then he does not thereby necessarily become entitled to political rights. He cannot become entitled to political rights until they shall be conferred upon him by government.

Mr. MORTON. Will the Senator cite what follows?

Mr. MERRIMON. When our fathers adopted the Declaration of Independence, and declared these general truths, they had reference to the natural rights of man, and only to those rights. They well knew the distinctions to which I have adverted, had them in view and acted upon them, as I shall now proceed to show.

Mr. MORTON. It says that "to secure these rights" referred to, the right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, "governments were instituted which derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." Now, I ask if women are a part of "the governed?"

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, sir; they are a part of "the governed," and I say that they have not only assented but they have consented to this system of government.

Mr. MORTON. How?

Mr. MERRIMON. I say so, because they have never raised their voice in opposition to it; they have given for nearly a century their highest moral sanction to it; we have had a moral expression from the American women with a degree of unanimity and cordiality that is striking. I am warranted in saying that nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand have given their moral assent, in as full a measure as it was possible for them to do, to our system of government. They have sustained it under all circumstances with their love, their hands, and their hearts, with their smiles and their tears, educated their children to love it and to die for it. They have manifested their love for it in every form; it has never appeared, be it said to their honor, that they disliked or disapproved of it. They have had the right under the bill of rights of every State in the Union, they have had the right under the Constitution of the Union at all times to memorialize the States and to memorialize Congress, protesting against any abridgment of their natural or civil rights, if they deemed there was any abridgment of those rights. But I repeat what I said a while ago, the number who have thus memorialized Congress and the State governments, compared with those who have not opened their mouths on this subject but have given sanction to the system of government in every moral way they could, is as a drop in the sea compared to the waste of waters. They have yielded their assent to this system of government; they have yielded their consent to it; they have ratified it by every means in their power outside of exercising the political right to vote. I know that there are a few women in the country who complain, but those who complain, compared with those who do not complain, are as one to a million.

But to get back to the point I was at, I say that we are to place a reasonable construction on those words that the honorable Senator commented upon, and such as I have given them. We are not only left to that guide to come to the conclusion I have already stated as to their meaning, but those who devised and established the Declaration of Independence gave an exposition to their meaning—their view of it—and the most solemn exposition they could give to it. They gave an exposition to it in the formation and administration of the several State governments which they adopted. For years in those State governments they provided civil and political distinctions and discriminations; they provided that certain classes of white men should enjoy certain classes of rights, that certain other men should not enjoy the same rights. They provided that the male population should enjoy rights that the female should not enjoy. They provided that the white race should be free and that the black race should be slaves. They did that, and according to their action and according to the organic laws which they adopted, they said, I repeat, in the most solemn manner they could, that that system of government carried out the purposes they meant to carry out and to declare and define in the Declaration of Independence. They not only did that, but they had a right to do it, nor was it inconsistent with the declaration, for it referred only to natural rights, and when they instituted governments they provided civil and political rights, and therefore there was no contradiction and no practical absurdity as is suggested. Their theory was practical and adapted to the comprehension and protection of human rights. They were not visionary theorists but practical statesmen. They were not radical but conservative in their notions of government.

But not only the State governments did at first what I have indidated in pursuance of this declaration, but when the American people came to establish the Constitution of the United States they exercised their political powers in the same way. Again they provided in the Constitution a distinction and discrimination between the male and the female portion of the American people; they provided that the males should hold the offices, that the males should have the right to vote; and not only that, but by way of further exposition of their views of the nature, purposes, and meaning of the declaration they provided that the black race should be slaves. That Constitution recognizes negro slavery in three several provisions.

Mr. MORTON. Does the Senator speak of the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, sir. In the matter of representation it was expressly provided for; it was recognized in another provision relative to prohibiting the importation of certain persons until after the year 1808; and in another provision which provided that those held to labor, escaping to another State, should be surrendered to their masters on demand. The Constitution of the Union, made in pursuance of this very Declaration of Independence and conforming to it, recognized a distinction between the races, between particularly the white race and the black race, and recognized and provided distinctions between the male and the female portions of the people of the American Union, and thereby in the most absolute manner drew the civil and political distinctions that have been kept up in one way or another from that day to this, and which I contend, with a view to good government so far as the male and female portions of the American people go, ought to be kept up and perpetuated.

I do not care to enlarge upon this point. It seems to me that any one who will take into consideration the facts to which I have called attention must see that the broad, radical construction which the Senator puts on the Declaration of Independence cannot be sustained by reason, authority, or practice in this or any country.

But, sir, I want now to refer to the position taken by the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT.] He says that under the Constitution, as amended by the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth articles of amendment, Congress has no power to deprive the females of this country of the right of suffrage. That I deny as emphatically as I can.

In the first place, there is a difference between civil rights and political rights, and the rights secured by the fourteenth amendment are civil rights. That this distinction exists in our Government and has always existed, is manifest not only to every one who has examined the nature of government, but it has been expressly so decided by the courts of this country. I will cite two or three authorities, and can cite at once. I read from Paschal's Annotated Constitution, page 65. In his notes he says:

> 18. But citizenship of the United States, or of a State, does not of itself give the right to vote; nor, e converso, does the want of it prevent a State from conferring the right of suffrage. (Scott vs. Sandford, 19 Howard, 422.)
> The right of suffrage is the right to choose officers of the Government, and it does not carry along the right of citizenship. (Bates on Citizenship, 4, 5.) Our laws make no provision for the loss or deprivation of citizenship. (Id.)
> The word citizen is not mentioned in this clause, and its idea is excluded in the qualifications for suffrage in all the State constitutions. (Id., 5, 6.)

Mr. SARGENT. What clause is he commenting on?

Mr. MERRIMON. He is commenting on section 2 of article 1. He says further:

> American citizenship does not necessarily depend upon nor coexist with the legal capacity to hold office or the right of suffrage, either or both of them.
> No person in the United States did ever exercise the right of suffrage in virtue of the naked, unassisted fact of citizenship. (Id.)
> There is a distinction between political rights and political powers. The former belong to all citizens alike, and cohere in the very name and nature of citizenship. The latter (voting and holding office) does not belong to all citizens alike, nor to any citizen merely in virtue of citizenship. His power always depends upon extraneous facts and superadded qualifications; which facts and qualifications are common to both citizens and aliens. (Bates on Citizenship.)

I read these hasty citations of authority which happen to be convenient to show that there is a distinction between political power and political rights, and in further support of the distinction between citizenship, or civil rights, and political rights.

Mr SARGENT. Will my friend allow me a moment?

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SARGENT. The author there is commenting on the second section of the first article of the Constitution, and I think his reasoning on that upon general principles may be correct; at any rate it is in consonance with the authority that he cites. But it will be observed that by the fourteenth article, section 1, it is provided that—

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

And then it says:

No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens.

Covering the whole broad ground. Whatever may be the privileges and immunities of citizens are covered and protected by this clause. This is subsequent to the article commented on there and changes the spirit of the old Constitution, is inconsistent with it, repeals it, or modifies it pro tanto; or else there would be no object in the adoption of the fourteenth article.

Mr. MERRIMON. I was just coming to the discussion of that amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and I will do it very briefly. The fourteenth amendment applies to civil rights. As I have shown, a citizen merely by virtue of citizenship does not enjoy political rights; neither the political right to vote nor the political right to hold office. The manifest object and purpose of the fourteenth amendment was to secure to all the American people equality of right in the States, equality of right under the United States, civilly, not politically; and that is made more manifest when we consider the second section of the fourteenth amendment. It is in these words:

Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

Thus it appears the amendments recognized the right of the State itself to regulate the political right to vote.

The fifteenth article of amendment still further confirms my view. It provides that "the right of citizens of the United States to vote"—and that word "vote" is material there—"the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State."

Note what follows: "On account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." The right of a citizen of the United States in the first place to vote shall not be abridged on account of three considerations, to-wit: race, color, or previous condition of servitude. Why was it limited to those three causes? Manifestly because the framers of this article saw that Congress had the power to abridge the rights of the colored race—indeed, any race—in the matter of voting and in the matter of holding office as well. Can it be contended that the United States would not have the power to-day to provide that a negro or an Indian or a Chinese or a Mongolian, if naturalized, and a citizen, should not hold office under the United States Government? It is plain they would have such power. But they cannot act upon the ground of race, color, or previous condition as to the matter of voting, and the restriction is to that alone. This clause provides expressly that as to voting the right of no human being shall be abridged because of his race, or his color, or his previous condition of servitude, but such right may be abridged for any other cause or consideration. This amendment did not impose a restriction simply on the power of the United States. In order to protect the colored race in the Southern States, and indeed I may say throughout the whole Union, this provision embraces the States as well as the United States, and provides that the States shall not have power to abridge the right to vote on any one of three accounts—race, color, or previous condition of servitude. But that does not imply that the States shall not have power to abridge this right for other causes. Each State has the power to-day to abridge the right to vote because a man cannot read, because he cannot write, or for any similar cause. The States have power to provide that a man shall not be allowed to hold office or to vote because he cannot read or because he cannot write or for any cause whatever. That is not only so according to the plain construction to be given to the fifteenth amendment, but some of the States exercise such power in this country to-day.

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me to direct his mind to one consideration?

Mr. MERRIMON. I will.

Mr. SARGENT. The fifteenth amendment to the Constitution, which the Senator refers to, reads: "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged." It does not create a right; it says "the right;" it speaks of something existing which shall not be denied. The right, then, to vote is the right of a citizen of the United States; the right exists. In other words, the right which exists of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged.

Mr. MERRIMON. There is no affirmative provision or principle in the Constitution that confers such a right, and my friend arrives at his conclusion by a simple inference; that is all. It is a simple inference; and I apprehend that a right of so much moment, contravening the whole policy of the Government heretofore and all our notions of government, cannot be established by a simple inference; and especially in the strength and in the face of the fact, however it might be as to other matters, that the United States shall not have the power to abridge the right for the cause mentioned. Besides this, if I concede what the honorable Senator says, he must acknowledge that it is within the power of the United States to abridge the right to vote for other causes than those stated.

But I wish to call attention to the fact that some of the States have exercised the power for which I am contending. I first call attention to the constitution of Connecticut. That constitution prescribes these qualifications: "Every white male citizen of the United States; one year's residence; freehold of the yearly value of six dollars; good moral character; able to read any article of the constitution or any section of the statutes of the State.

There a State provides many restrictions on voting; but if that State had undertaken to restrict the right to vote because a man was black or because he belonged to a particular race or because heretofore he had been subject to a condition of servitude, that would be absolutely null and void; or if they had put in that he should not vote because he was white it would be null and void.

I next call attention to the constitution of Massachusetts. In that State the right to vote is limited to "male citizens, (excepting persons or paupers under guardianship;) residence in the State one year; in the town or district six months; having paid all required taxes." That constitution has existed since 1780. It was provided further in that constitution that "no person shall have the right to vote or be eligible to office under this Commonwealth who shall not be able to read the constitution in the English language and write his name."

So that the power which I insist belongs to the United States, and I think I have shown belongs to the States, not only exists, but is actually exercised by States, at least two States of the Union, at this moment; and indeed in nearly or quite all the States there are more or less restrictions of the right to vote; and the State and the Union have absolute power to abridge the political right to vote except for three causes only, and those three causes are race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

I say, then, that the broad revolutionary construction which the honorable Senator from Indiana puts upon the Declaration of Independence cannot be sustained. It cannot be sustained from the plain meaning of the Declaration of Independence. It cannot be sustained in view of the action of those who made that Declaration of Independence in the establishment of State governments and the establishment of the Constitution of the United States, and the practice of the American people from that day down to this. It appears further that the women of America have assented and consented to our system of government, and as a whole have never expressed to any considerable extent dissatisfaction with it or demanded any change; and I maintain, without going into any discussion of the subject, that their condition cannot be bettered by the suggested change. On the contrary, I maintain that it would be degrading to them. I doubt if they would exercise the right if it were conferred; and for one I do not want to see a race of Amazons in this country.

Mr. STEWART. I hope that the Senate will not suppose that there is any constitutional question here involved. It is simply a question of regulating the suffrage in a Territory, exclusively under the jurisdiction of the Congress of the United States. It does not raise any question as to constitutional powers. There is no doubt of the power of Congress to allow women to vote in the Territories, and I hope there will not be a great deal of time spent on that matter. I will say for the benefit of those who do not believe in it now that there will not be anybody in the Senate ten years from now who will be opposed to female suffrage. I venture to make that prediction. It is no joke.

Mr. MERRIMON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. STEWART. Any question you please.

Mr. MERRIMON. I take it that you do not mean to force on American women this right. They have not asked for it.

Mr. STEWART. My friend from North Carolina may talk about the Constitution just as much as he pleases. The same thing was talked about when the question of colored suffrage was up. Just as many abstractions as you please may be discussed, but a principle that has been agitated as this has been and that has as many earnest advocates and as many reasons which are plausible at least whether you think them well founded or not at this time, will be accomplished in this country in less than ten years, and ten years from to-day there will be nobody in the Senate Chamber who will object to granting female suffrage. There is no doubt about that in my mind, whatever you may say about it. I say this to have it remembered; it will not be ten years until there will be no voice in America against female suffrage. The real arguments in favor of it multiply as attention is called to it. The argument in favor of it multiplies as our attention is called to the vast number of unemployed women in this country. The argument is intensified when we see women without the means of support driven to mere sewing for a living, which does not afford sufficient to them for existence, and we see the male labor, which ought to be in the West on the farms adding to the wealth of the country, used for purposes where women's labor would be better, and they starving for want of labor. You see that condition of things, and the more you discuss it and agitate it the more these arguments will appear, and I am satisfied that they will certainly accomplish the result. I am in earnest in saying I should like to see the experiment tried in this Territory.

Mr. MERRIMON. Why do you want to go into a remote, sparsely settled Territory to make the experiment?

Mr. STEWART. Why try it everywhere? Why not try it in North Carolina? Because we cannot.

Mr. MERRIMON. Why not try it in this city?

Mr. STEWART. Because we have not the power to do it.

Mr. MERRIMON. You have in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SARGENT. We tried the question of negro suffrage on Nebraska first.

Mr. STEWART. Negro suffrage was opened in a Territory when there were less people in it than there are here, and see how that has spread.

Mr. MERRIMON. My friend did not hear my question. Why not confer suffrage on the women of the District of Columbia?

Mr. SARGENT. We will the first time we get a chance.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from North Carolina asks, "Why not try it here?" The question has been suggested whether there is not a constitutional reason for not trying it here, and that constitutional question applies to males as well as females. The Constitution says that the Congress shall have exclusive power of legislation within the District of Columbia, and it shall exercise like power over places owned by the United States with the consent of the States for arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings, making this District under the exclusive control of Congress. I think that nothing but the emergencies of the case could have justified the experiment we tried here with negro suffrage; but we did it. We now have a fair field in the West where the country is rich and inviting, as my friend from Minnesota says, a country that is able to become a State; the land fertile, as he says, the climate salubrious, and which is to be occupied by the very best people, and we can try it there under the most favorable auspices. It is a good chance to try the experiment.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask a question?

Mr. STEWART. Most certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator has assured us so often that he is in earnest that I know he will be able to afford those like me who are following him, although they may be somewhat in the dark, the requisite information. Some Senator inquired of my friend why he did not try the experiment here, and he answered that Congress has power to legislate here, and therefore there is no experiment to try here. Now I know my friend does not mean to paddle out of anything because he has courage enough to stand up to it; and I submit to him that that is rather "thin." Under the organic law of this District men vote here annually; the things upon which they vote are prescribed; and if the Senator is in earnest, I should like to know some better reason why he does not try it here. An amendment is in order on this bill to try it here. We have confessedly in this District, exceptionally in this District the entire power upon this question; and if the Senator is in earnest, knowing as he does that under the organic law, of which as a member of the committee of investigation he has learned so much, voting is to be done and is now committed exclusively to men and denied to women, I beg him to state some broader and better answer to the question why he does not try it here. And let me remind him at the same time that under the rules of the Senate an amendment is in order to this bill; he need not go beyond this bill in order to insure the right in the District of Columbia.

Mr. STEWART. Inasmuch as the Senator from New York has designated me as the leader whom he is to follow, and I take it for granted he is in earnest in his question, I shall occupy the time of the Senate briefly in answering it. When the question arises for suffrage at all in this District, with my present ideas, I shall vote for female suffrage in this District. I was saying that I do not think there need be any popular voting at all in this District by males or females, for the reason that the great mass of people here are merely sojourners. I think we should govern the District directly by the Congress of the United States, that can pass all needful laws. When the question comes up properly as to the District it will be time enough to meet it. Here is the question directly up as to a Territory, and there is no doubt about this being a good opportunity.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg to inquire when ever in time or eternity that question will come up here, unless some champion who has the courage and genius of my friend brings it up? Who shall bring it up if he refuses to do it? And when a bill is pending to which that amendment is appropriate, and his attention is called to it, if he flinches, if he goes back, who shall we hope for to come hereafter who will break a lance in such a cause? I say to him that unless he wants to discourage me and other men of less courage who are trying to follow him, he must not flinch by saying that he cannot do anything about it until it comes on a motion to bring it up. He should bring it up himself.

Mr. STEWART. The only fear I have as to the Senator from New York is that he will not have sufficient courage to follow. [Laughter.] The question is up now. The question is squarely up on this amendment whether we will allow the females in this distant Territory to vote. I propose to vote for it. He has said that I was his leader. The only question now is whether he has sufficient courage to follow my lead, I following the lead of the Senator from California. I want to put his courage to the fullest test now. I only ask him to follow me in this one little step. If he breaks down there, I hope he will not say anything more about it; and I am afraid he will. I will say to him, however, that the time will come when he will look very much astonished if anybody questions the right of a female to vote; and that any one ever should have questioned it, will be a very remarkable circumstance. When that time comes, I shall never mention his past record to him because I do not mention unpleasant things to gentlemen. I say that for his benefit in case he should fall down and should not do the gallant thing he proposes to do of following me, I following the lead of the Senator from California. The question is squarely up, and is nothing more than this: will you give women a chance to try this experiment where it is admitted it can do no harm and where a large portion if not a majority of the people of the United States believe it will do a great good? Try this experiment there; and if the struggle which is inaugurated there shall spread over the country as the struggle that was inaugurated in Kansas spread over the country which finally terminated in the colored man having full rights, if it should have full effect on the rest of the country, so be it. I rather think it will.

Mr. MERRIMON. In the discussion in which I engaged, I was more anxious about the principle involved than I was about the particular amendment, and therefore I hardly mentioned it in the hasty argument which I submitted. In order to support my position now, I desire to read a report from the Judiciary Committee which embraces the very subject under discussion, the question of the power of the State governments and the Federal Government to abridge the right to vote or to hold office. The subject came before that committee in the way of a petition of certain citizens of the State of Rhode Island who insisted that their rights as citizens of the United States were abridged——

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MERRIMON. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. Suppose the American people come to the conclusion that it is right that females should vote, does not the Senator think there will be plenty of ways to accomplish it notwithstanding that report of the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. MERRIMON. O yes, I think so; but I do not care to debate that. My object was to throw light on this question. I do not want a wrong construction put upon the powers of the Government at this day. It is important that we should be upon the right line and keep upon it; and with a view to strengthen my argument I ask the Clerk to read the report which I send to the desk. It is very brief; and I beg leave to say now that it is well known to the Senate and must be known to the country that this committee embraces the ablest lawyers in this country on constitutional and other branches of the law.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. EDMUNDS on the 26th of May, 1870:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of Rhode Island setting forth, by reference, the fourteenth and fifteenth articles of amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and stating that "the State of Rhode Island, notwithstanding the provisions of the above-named amendments, persists, in and by the first section of article 2 of the constitution of said State, in denying and abridging the right of about ten thousand citizens of the United States to vote at any and all elections holden in said State," and praying that Congress will "pass such appropriate legislation as may be found necessary to obtain for, and secure to, the citizens of the United States resident in Rhode Island all the rights, privileges, and immunities guaranteed to them by the Constitution of the United States," respectfully report:

That the constitution of Rhode Island, adopted in 1842, prescribes two alternative classes of qualifications for voting. The first gives to all male citizens of the United States of a certain age, &c., the right to vote, if they own real estate of the value of one hundred and thirty-four dollars, or which shall rent for seven dollars per annum. The second gives to every male native citizen of the United States of a certain age, &c., the right to vote, if he pays a tax of one dollar a year, &c., although he may not own real estate. No man or party has ever questioned the right of the people of Rhode Island and of every other State to establish such a constitution of government as may be agreeable to their views of the public welfare in that State, although its provisions as to suffrage may not conform to the opinions of other States. At the time when this constitution of Rhode Island was adopted the right to regulate the qualifications of voters belonged exclusively to the respective States. The petition under consideration fully recognizes this, but it raises the question (although studiously framed in such a manner as not to declare or insist upon such a conclusion) whether, by the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States, natives of foreign countries who have become citizens of the United States are not entitled to vote in Rhode Island, without regard to the qualifications imposed by her constitution?

The committee is unanimously of the opinion that this question must be answered in the negative.

The "privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States" mentioned in the petition as secured by the fourteenth amendment do not include the right of suffrage. If they did, the right must necessarily exist in all citizens of the United States from the mere fact of citizenship, without the power in any State or in Congress to abridge the same in any degree; and in such case, therefore, no qualification of any kind could be imposed, and all persons (being citizens,) males and females, infants, lunatics, and criminals, without respect to age, length of residence, or any other thing, would be entitled to participate directly in all elections. Every provision in every State which experience has proved to be essential to security and good order in society would thereby be overthrown. It is enough to say that the rights secured by this amendment to the Constitution are of an altogether different character.

The fifteenth amendment does apply to rights of suffrage, and to those only. By it the State of Rhode Island, in common with every other State, is forbidden to deny or abridge the right of citizens of the United States "to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." But, plainly, the constitution of Rhode Island does not preclude any citizen from voting on either or any of the grounds thus prohibited. No fact of race, or color, or previous servitude prevents any citizen from voting in Rhode Island. Neither of these qualities depends in any degree upon the place of his nativity. This seems too obvious to need discussion. It is also a fact, appearing in the public records of Congress and doubtless known to the petitioners, that when the fifteenth amendment was under consideration by Congress it was proposed to embrace in it a prohibition of any denial of suffrage on account of "nativity," and that this proposition was not agreed to, for the reason that Congress did not think it expedient to restrict the ancient powers of the States in these respects any further than appeared to be absolutely needful to secure to the whole people the great results of the overthrow of the rebellion.

The committee is therefore of opinion that there is nothing in the provisions of the constitution of Rhode Island referred to in conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

Whether these provisions are wise or right in themselves is a matter over which neither the committee nor Congress has any control. That subject belongs to the people of Rhode Island, who it must be presumed will correct any and all errors that may from time to time be found to exist in her internal affairs.

Mr. MERRIMON. I think the Senator from Nevada will be unable to answer that position.

Mr. CARPENTER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before the Senator from Wisconsin proceeds with his remarks, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether he means to include Indians and Canadians? The language is "every inhabitant of the United States."

Mr. SARGENT. No, it is qualified further, as the Senator will see if the whole section is read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not as to the first election.

Mr. SARGENT. I think myself the section is very inartificially drawn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know but that it is very artificially drawn, if it is intended to include the Indian and the Canadian.

Mr. SARGENT. To answer the Senator from Vermont I ask that the final proviso of the section be read, which qualifies the part he referred to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided, further, That the right of suffrage and of holding office shall be exercised only by citizens of the United States, and those who shall have declared on oath, before a competent court of record, their intention to become such, and shall have taken an oath to support the Constitution and Government of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does not relate to the first election.

Mr. SARGENT. That objection applies to the details of the bill; it does not apply to my amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, as the yeas and nays have been ordered on this question and I shall vote for this amendment, without going into any argument of the general question I desire to say one word as to the reason why I shall so vote.

I believe it is not one of woman's rights, but it is one of man's, that the franchise should be extended to women. I believe there is no situation in which man can be placed where the aid of woman is not beneficial; that in all the relations of life, in all the occupations and all the duties of life it was the intention of God in creating the race that woman should be the helpmate of man, everywhere and in all circumstances and occupations. Look through your country, look in your railroad cars, look in your post-offices, look in your dry-goods stores, and there you see everything decent and orderly and quiet. Why? Because women go there. The only place in this country from which they are excluded by law is the voting place, and in many of our large cities those places are the most disgraceful that can be found under our institutions. Now, I believe if the elections were open to ladies as well as gentlemen, to women as well as men, there would be as much order, quiet, and decency at the voting places as there is in a railroad car, and for precisely the same reason. If our wives and mothers and daughters were going to these election places there would be order and decency there, or there would be a row once for all that would make them decent. I have more confidence in the influence of women at the elections in New York City to reform the condition of things that exists there and bring about decency and order at the elections and the prevention of violence and fraud, than I have in all the Army and Navy that the President can send there under the election bill which was put through here by my honorable friend from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.]

Without enlarging on the subject, I shall vote for this amendment, not because this Territory is located, as some Senator has said, near Minnesota. I would vote for female suffrage in the District of Columbia to-morrow; I would vote for it in the State of Wisconsin; I would vote for it anywhere and everywhere if I had an opportunity to do so.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, I shall vote against this amendment, and for the reason that I do not consider the right of suffrage a woman's right or a man's right. I do not understand it to be a natural right at all. It is a political right; and I do not understand, as applied to women, that it is a privilege at all. It is akin to a service; and it is a very rough service. It is in its nature akin to militia service. The man who exercises the ballot must be prepared to defend it with the bayonet; and therefore the propriety of its being confined in all ages to men. That it is not a natural right is apparent to anybody who reflects upon it; and it never was so considered in any country in the world.

We talk about it here now as a natural right, and my honorable friend who sits next me [Mr. MORTON] has invoked the principles of the Declaration of Independence, and said that it stands with those rights which are called inherent, such as life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. It is not so in any sense whatever, and never was so regarded. If it were, do you not perceive that it applies as well to infants as to adults? If it is natural to all citizens, then it applies, as I have said, to infants as well as to adults. I regard it as strictly a political right. It does not inhere in man naturally, or in woman; and I do not propose, myself, to impose it on women. It is a severe, rugged service, which in my judgment ought not to be imposed on women.

My honorable friend from Wisconsin says there is no position in life in which the society of woman would not be an improvement. How is it on the deck of a battle-ship? How is it in military affairs? Should she be placed in the militia to enforce the results of a ballot? Is there any of us who believe that? Is there anybody here who would be glad to see a woman in the train-band, on the muster-field, at the cannon's mouth, or on the decks of your war-ships? That is what your argument means, if it means anything logically.

But, sir, I am not going to argue the proposition at all. I am going to vote against it because the right of suffrage is that rugged and severe service which man has no right to devolve upon woman. It is enough to say that when the American women want the ballot, when they come to hanker for it, and fall in love with the exercise of the ballot at the polls, I am in favor of their voting, but not until then; and I am not in favor of that sentimental sort of stuff which is gotten up somewhere or other by portions of the people who would force it upon the American women as a general proposition. Whenever they come to desire it, whenever the American women come to ask it, and particularly when they come to demand it, or even to solicit it, there will be no question as to what the American Congress will do; but until that time comes I shall vote steadily against it.

Nobody will be surprised at these sentiments from me who has had occasion to know the sentiments that I have expressed on this same subject on former occasions. I will send to the desk and ask to have read a paragraph or two from a speech made by me some years ago on the subject of suffrage.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Universal suffrage is affirmed by its advocates as among the absolute or natural rights of man, in the sense of mankind, extending to females as well as males, and susceptible of no limitation unless as opposed to child or infant. It is supposed to originate in rights independent of citizenship; like the absolute rights of liberty, personal security, and possession of property, it is natural to man. It exists, of course, independent of sex or condition, manhood or womanhood. To admit it in the adult and deny it to the youth would be to abridge the right and ignore the principle. Now, sir, in practice its extension to women would contravene all our notions of the family; "put asunder" husband and wife, and subvert the fundamental principles of family government, in which the husband is, by all usage and law, human and divine, the representative head. Besides, it ignores woman, womanhood, and all that is womanly; all those distinctions of sex whose objects are apparent in creation, essential in character, and vital to society, these all disappear in the manly and impressive demonstration of balloting at a popular election. Here maids, women, wives, men, and husbands promiscuously assemble to vindicate the rights of human nature.

Moreover, it associates the wife and mother with policies of State, with public affairs, with making, interpreting, and executing the laws, with police and war, and necessarily disseverates her from purely domestic affairs, peculiar care for and duties of the family; and, worst of all, assigns her duties revolting to her nature and constitution, and wholly incompatible with those which spring from womanhood.

Besides, the ballot is the inseparable concomitant of the bayonet. Those who practice the one must be prepared to exercise the other. To introduce woman at the polls is to enroll her in the militia; to transfer her from the class of non-combatants to the class of combatants.—Congressional Globe, part 1, second session Thirty-ninth Congress, 1866-'67, page 40.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no doubt of the consistency of my friend from Maine on this proposition and on every other. I have no doubt that the remarks which he made formerly on this subject he repeats to-day with the same idea of their entire correctness; but I differ with him upon both the propositions which he advances. He says that women do not desire the right of suffrage and there is no evidence before Congress that they do desire it. Why, sir, the tables of your committee-rooms have been loaded with petitions from every State in this Union on this subject, and they come forward day after day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And remonstrances also.

Mr. SARGENT. Very few indeed.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest to my friend from California if the only question is whether women desire the right of suffrage or not, that can only be determined by submitting it to them. When we wish to ascertain whether the male citizens of the country desire a proposition, we submit the question to them and let them vote upon it.

Mr. SARGENT. That suggestion is very just. But the fact that there are remonstrances against the extension of the suffrage to women shows that there is agitation, and agitation shows interest in the matter. If this opinion were not in danger of prevailing, if it were not sweeping over the country, we would get no remonstrances; it would be looked upon as mere idle wind blowing nowhere and amounting to nothing. I say these petitions are coming here in every form. There are large and popular conventions, attended by ladies and attended by a great many men, making strong efforts to this end. There is as much agitation on this point as there was for the abolition of slavery before the war broke out.

Now I come to the other proposition of my friend from Maine. He says the ballot and the bayonet go together, and that he who handles the one must be prepared to handle the other. What do you do with men who are past the years of military service and exempted by your laws? Do you deprive them of the ballot? That of itself is a sufficient answer to that argument. They are not inseparable. Fortunately for our country the necessity for the use of the bayonet occurs very seldom; but when it does occur there are large classes of male voters who are not called to the field, but are exempted by the policy of our law. No one believes that if women had this privilege, or this immunity, or this right—whatever you may call it—put into their hands we would therefore require of them to do things that would degrade or unsex them, or that would be improper for them to perform. I believe that men would have the same respect for women with the ballot in their hands as without it.

It is not for the few women who remonstrate from luxurious parlors, sitting upon sofas, in the glare of the gaslight, changing and choosing their phrases, but for the great class of laboring women in the country that I appeal for this redress. I appeal for the women who have been struggling on in these Government offices, doing the same work that men do, ay, and in many cases doing it better, for about one-half of the pay. Do you suppose if they had ballots they would not make their voices heard here and get for the same work the same pay? Who ever knew a labor strike of women to succeed? When women in New York City and other places are bowed down to the earth by their labor—making shirts at a shilling a day—and they strike for more pay, for more bread, for an opportunity to live, who ever heard of one of their strikes succeeding? Men strike from their workshops and they succeed, and why? Because they have the ballot; because they have political force; because they have the power of citizenship behind them in its fullest sense. Give these poor struggling women the same chance and they can make their way to a fair remuneration of wages in the public offices, and they can make their way in the workshops, and these toiling mothers, widows, and sisters supporting orphan brothers and sisters will have some opportunity to vindicate their rights and to procure not merely political rights, but a chance to live, and a chance to avoid infamy.

Senators talk about this question as if the ballot was not demanded for women. Will you tell me why it was that the great party which controls both branches of Congress and holds the Executive when it met in Philadelphia at that grand convention put a plank in its platform stating that these demands for further rights should be respectfully considered? Do you think there was no agitation, no desire on the part of women for the ballot when that great convention could be moved to a declaration like this:

> The republican party is mindful of its obligations to the loyal women of America for their noble devotion to the cause of freedom. Their admission to higher fields of usefulness is viewed with satisfaction, and the honest demand of any class of citizens for additional rights shall be treated with respectful consideration.

Was that mere euphuism, mere phrasing? Did that mean nothing? Did it respond to no demand? Ay, sir, did it not only respond to a demand which was there pressed, but did it not imply a duty, a pledge which this party ought to redeem?

But the Senator from Maine, as well as the Senator from North Carolina, asserts that the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution has no relation whatever to political rights, that it relates to something with reference to social equality, something in the far distance, but does not touch this question at all. When I called the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to the fifteenth amendment which says "the right of citizens to vote shall not be denied or abridged," assuming the right to exist, not saying that the right hereafter shall exist and shall not be abridged; but the right now existing by fair intendment shall not be abridged, he replied "that I deduced this right by an inference," and he thought a right of this kind ought not to stand on mere inference. His argument for the opposite construction, that the right to vote may be abridged for any other cause than those enumerated in the amendment, is drawn only by an inference from it. The affirmative language is that the right shall not be abridged for certain causes; and then by an inference the Senator says it may be abridged for others. In other words, his argument is that I am not at liberty to infer from the Constitution of the United States rights for women or rights for mankind. I shall not extend it by inference in favor of freedom, but any inference which will limit its operation, which will destroy or curtail its meaning, is legitimate.

Mr. MERRIMON. What clause of the Constitution does the Senator assert creates the right?

Mr. SARGENT. The first section of the fifteenth amendment declares that the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged—speaking of it as an affirmative right; not speaking of it as here established, but as a right which of course must have been established before that time in order to exist, and that right was established by the fourteenth amendment.

Now, sir, to show that I do not strain the interpretation of the Constitution I desire to refer to some few authorities even under the old Constitution, which go very far to answer the authority that the Senator cited. Bushrod Washington, a member of the United States Supreme Court, and well known as a jurist of high attainments and great powers of mind, in the case of Corfield vs. Coryell declared what I shall read, which is approvingly cited by Kent, the master writer upon American law, in the second volume of his Commentaries:

> It was declared in Corfield vs. Coryell that the privileges and immunities conceded by the Constitution of the United States to citizens in the several States were to be confined to those which were in their nature fundamental, and belonged of right to the citizens of all free governments. Such are the rights of protection of life and liberty, and to acquire and enjoy property, and to pay no higher impositions than other citizens, and to pass through or reside in the State at pleasure, and to enjoy the elective franchise according to the regulations of the laws of the State.

Those, according to the decision in Corfield vs. Coryell, cited approvingly by Chancellor Kent, are the rights and immunities of citizens of the United States. Then comes in the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which declares that "all persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States," and further, that "no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States."

Now, sir, I quote from Bouvier's Law Dictionary, under the title of "citizen." He gives what the word means, first in English law, and then he comes down to American law:

> One who, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, has a right to vote for Representatives in Congress, and other public officers, and who is qualified to fill offices in the gift of the people.

In the face of authorities like these, who shall deny that the right to vote is one of those privileges and immunities of citizenship, or that citizenship itself carries with it that highest right? Go into literature and you find the same definition; as, for instance, in the work which I hold in my hand entitled "Words and their uses," by R. Grant White. He says:

> A citizen is a person who has certain political rights, and the word is properly used only to imply or suggest the possession of these rights.

Is it a mere question of privilege or immunity? It is a right which exists; and so it is considered in all the law; so it is treated in the well-considered decisions on the subject, and by the text writers.

By the pledge which was given by the dominant party of the country in their last national convention, by the allegiance which democrats themselves owe to the Constitution of the United States, by the higher benefit which will be conferred upon society, upon the women themselves who are struggling for a chance in life, and upon men themselves by the purification of society, I ask that this amendment be adopted.

Mr. BAYARD. I should like to ask the honorable Senator a question before he takes his seat. I understand that he denies the power of the Congress of the United States or of a State to exclude a female from voting, to make an exclusion based upon sex, because it would be an infringement of her rights as a citizen, under the meaning of that word in the Constitution, according to the construction given it by the courts. I should like to ask him whether he considers that an exclusion by reason of age is not just as arbitrary and unauthorized as the exclusion by reason of sex, and by what right can it be that a State or the United States shall arbitrarily fix a period in a person's life at which he shall attain his civil rights? In most of the States, and by the common law of England, the age of twenty-one years was fixed as what they term the majority, when a person becomes sui juris. Under the laws of the various States of this Union, following the laws of other civilized communities of older date, a period has been fixed in the life of man at which he attains his civil rights. Ordinarily it is at the age of twenty-one years; under the civil law it is twenty-five; it is so in France; it is so in Spain; it is so in the French and Spanish colonies. Among the English-speaking people the age of twenty-one years is the period fixed. If the rights which have been spoken of by the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from California are inalienable, natural rights, are part and parcel of those "privileges and immunities" referred to by the Constitution of the United States, how can it be that a law, a mere arbitrary enactment by a State or by Congress, shall exclude a man who is twenty years and six months old from exercising those inalienable rights, those privileges and immunities which six months after, by the mere difference of time, they permit him to enjoy? I have stated the question at length for the purpose of letting the Senator from California answer it more fully.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I do not think the Constitution prevents a regulation of the power to vote. The States unquestionably have a right to fix the time when voting shall take place, to fix the places where the voting shall be done, and they have the right to fix the age at which voting shall be exercised. But under the Constitution they have no power to prescribe a test which is not equally attainable by all persons. They have no right to say that only white men shall vote, for that would exclude black men. They have no right to say that only black men shall vote, for that would exclude white men. They have no right to say that only men shall vote, for that would exclude women. The Constitution says that all shall be put on an equality in this respect, that any test which may be required shall apply to all alike, men and women, black or white.

Mr. BAYARD. But the law does no such thing. There are classes, and a very large and great class in the State that the Senator represents, who cannot become citizens of the United States and cannot vote there.

Mr. SARGENT. Why not?

Mr. BAYARD. Because of their race; because they are Asiatics and not Africans.

Mr. SARGENT. The Constitution of the United States does not prevent it.

Mr. BAYARD. No; but the law of Congress prevents it. The Senator says they are all entitled under the law.

Mr. SARGENT. I will not detain the Senate now on the point referred to by the Senator. He has shifted his ground and I will not now follow him. Whenever legislation comes up on that subject I will discuss it. They are not citizens of the United States. I am dealing now with citizens whose privileges and immunities as such no one has a right to abridge.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. It is not my intention to speak on the merits of this proposition; but inasmuch as the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] has raised the question of consistency and appealed to his record, it reminds me of the fact that the question of woman suffrage appeared as early, I think, as 1858, before the Legislature of Michigan. I had the honor of holding a seat in the senate of the State at that time, and the question was referred to the committee of which I was a member, and it fell to my lot to consider the subject and report upon it. If my recollection serves me rightly the resolution favoring the right of women to vote was lost by but a majority of three in the Michigan senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which way was the report?

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I am reminded by the Senator from Vermont that perhaps I have not intimated which side the report took. The report was in favor of woman suffrage, and it may be regarded as having contributed to so large a vote. To-day, sir, is the first time since that occasion that I have been officially called upon to record my judgment upon the same question. I have had no reason since that report was drawn to shake my belief that the right of suffrage will not be jeopardized or perverted if wielded by the hand of woman. Believing that now and desiring to act in accord with my action in 1858 in the senate of my native State, I am glad of the opportunity to prove my consistency by voting for woman suffrage to-day.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, I am quite content that this experiment of female suffrage should be tried in this new Territory. I believe that female suffrage is coming with the other ameliorations and changes which have been tending for so many years in the same direction. I have not taken any part in the measures which have been agitated to hasten that event. I think it will come in its own good time; but I should do very great injustice to myself if I should allow it to be supposed that my opinion is based upon some of the arguments that have been made here. I do not believe that suffrage is a natural right. I believe it is a right that grows out of society, a political right, and that it is within the body-politic to decide upon its limits, its modifications, and its conditions. The only question in my mind is whether it is proper and expedient. I think that the fourteenth amendment has nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island, the Senator from Maine, and the Senator from North Carolina have all said that the right to vote is not a natural right, but merely a political right. Is not that a distinction without a difference? If I have a natural right, I have a right to use the necessary and proper means to enforce that right; it is a part of it. To say that I have a natural right but have not the right to use the means for its protection is illogical; it makes nonsense of it. The natural and proper means to enforce any right are a part of it. You say I have the right of self-defense. That is one of the natural rights; everybody concedes it. If I have the right of self-defense, the natural and proper and necessary means of self-protection are a part of it, and to take from me the natural and effective means of defending myself is to take from me the right itself.

Now, sir, the Declaration of Independence—and I come back to the great charter of our rights, our confession of faith in this country—goes on to define natural rights, the right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and declares that to secure these rights governments are instituted, which derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. Government, therefore, is the means of securing natural rights, and the government should depend upon the consent of the governed. Therefore the right to give my consent or to withhold my consent is a part of the natural right; and taking that from me, what is the other worth?

Let us come down to the substance and put away these shadowy distinctions. To say that I have a right to defend myself, the right of self-defense, but that I have no right to use the knife or the weapon or the staff or any instrument necessary for that purpose to protect my life against the assassin, is nonsense. Whatever is the natural and proper means to execute the natural right becomes a part of it. So far as the right of government is concerned, the right to assent, to consent, or to dissent, the natural means under our system of government is the right to vote. You cannot conceive of any other. Therefore it is a part of the right and without that the other is worth nothing.

The Senator from North Carolina says that the women of the country have consented to our form of government. How so? Because they have not dissented. A great part of them, he says, have not dissented. How can they have the right and power to consent unless they have the power to dissent? They have got no power to dissent. They may scold; they may remonstrate; but it amounts to nothing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana, if I do not interrupt him, whether persons under the age of twenty-one and eighteen years respectively have not all the natural rights that grown-up people have?

Mr. MORTON. I think I can answer that question very readily, if the Senator is through.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is my only question at present.

Mr. MORTON. Every right must have some sort of regulation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does not answer the question.

Mr. MORTON. Wait until I get through. By the common consent of mankind certain ages have been fixed in different countries when men and women are supposed to be matured, in the full possession of their faculties, and then they are given the possession of their property and permitted to control their own actions. We have in our country, and I believe generally in Europe, certainly in England, agreed that twenty-one years is the age when they have come into the full possession of their understanding and are supposed to be so well informed that they can take upon themselves the government of their own fortunes and the control of their own property. The mere fact that this thing is to be regulated does not take away the right. The natural right to own and control property is regulated in that way. There must be some age fixed. We know the infant cannot do it; we know the child ten years old is not qualified, has not the necessary knowledge of the world or strength of understanding; and we have agreed upon a certain age as fixing the right when men and women come to the possession of their understanding and are able to take care of their own rights, whatever they may be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator, after all, what his opinion is, whether a child of tender years, say ten years of age, has not every natural right that a man of seventy has?

Mr. MORTON. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Morally, legally, and every other way?

Mr. MORTON. To my mind that furnishes no argument at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not arguing it.

Mr. MORTON. It is merely putting an extreme case to say that a woman twenty-five years of age shall not have the right to vote because if she votes the child in arms has the right to vote. Is there any force in that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not put any case at all. I am asking the Senator from Indiana, which he seems to be very unwilling to answer, whether a child of tender years has or has not, in his opinion, the same natural rights that a grown-up person has. That can be answered one way or the other without saying it is an argument.

Mr. MORTON. I suppose the child has. The child has the right, certainly the incipient right; but that amounts to nothing when you apply it to a child that is not able to exercise it, that has not the strength, the experience, the knowledge of the world, or the age to exercise it. I treat things in a common-sense point of view; and the common sense of mankind in this and every other country fixes a certain age when men and women shall be regarded as mature and qualified to take care of themselves.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They do not fix the same age, let me suggest to the Senator.

Mr. MORTON. Now, Mr. President, unless we are prepared to deny the very fundamental doctrine upon which our Government is based, we must admit that women have the same rights that men have. The Senator from North Carolina will not deny that women have the same natural rights that men have. The Senator admits that; he nods his assent. Then if that is so, they have the same natural right to use the means necessary to protect those rights that men have. That right, so far as men are concerned, is the ballot.

Mr. MERRIMON. Natural means.

Mr. MORTON. Whatever means are necessary and proper to the protection of a natural right are natural means.

Mr. BAYARD. Did the Senator from Indiana answer—I could not hear him; his back was turned to me—the Senator from Vermont in the affirmative or negative?

Mr. MORTON. I tried to answer him.

Mr. BAYARD. I merely ask the question. He says now very triumphantly to the Senator from North Carolina that the rights of men and women are the same, their natural rights are the same.

Mr. MORTON. Yes.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask are the rights of children different from those of men?

Mr. MORTON. I think not; but I do not think there is any force in that argument, as I said before. There is a certain common sense and a certain practical regulation of natural rights all the world over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But is it the common sense of men alone? let me suggest to the Senator. The children may differ with us; they generally do on such questions.

Mr. MORTON. I will not spend any time on that argument.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that is wise.

Mr. MORTON. To say that the mature woman has not the right to vote because the child in arms must have the same right comes so near making nonsense of the whole business that I dismiss it, and I come back to the other statement, that women having the same natural rights that men have have the right to the use of the same means for their protection; and as the means under our form of government for the protection of the natural rights of men is the right to vote, women should have the same right and power accorded to them. To say that women have the same natural rights, but have not the right to use the same means for their protection, I think is utterly illogical. The whole theory of natural rights is mere trash unless you shall give women the right and the power to protect them. The Declaration of Independence says that governments are instituted for that purpose, and that governments must depend upon the consent of the governed; and as the women are one-half of the governed, they have a right to give one-half of the consent.

The Senator from North Carolina remarked that the women did not ask it. I believe I have answered that before. They have no power to refuse their consent. They may remonstrate and scold about it, but that amounts to nothing; their consent one way or the other means nothing except so far as their influence may be concerned.

There were four and a half million of slaves who did not remonstrate against their bondage. Why? They had no means of doing it, and if they had it would not have amounted to anything. Would the Senator argue from that that they had no natural rights, or that they were consenting to their bondage? When you take into consideration the fact that men have all political power now and the other sources of influence and power that they have over women, it is not very strange perhaps that a majority of women are not asking for the right of suffrage.

One word further. Some women at least are asking for it, and a much larger number than the Senator from North Carolina admits. I know that very many women all over the country believe they have the right to vote and ought to vote who never go to political meetings and never sign petitions or anything of that kind. I would be willing to-day to submit the question to the votes of the women of the United States whether they should have that privilege or not. But suppose that a majority are consenting to the present state of things and do not want the ballot, how does that affect the rights of the minority who do want it. One woman cannot consent for another. If one woman has the natural right to take part in the Government, how can she be deprived of that by another woman who does not want it? A woman can only consent for herself; she cannot consent for her sister.

I believe that women never will have their rights in this country, they never will be allowed to enjoy the same equality of means for taking care of themselves and making an honest living in the world, until they have the right to vote. As soon as they have that right you will find that they will be placed upon an equality with men so far as all the means of getting along in this world are concerned, but never until that is done. The Senator from California refers to the fact, and it is a notorious fact in every State in this Union, that women are paid only about one-half for the same quantity and the same kind of labor that men receive. Does any man say that there is any sense or any justice in that distinction? Will that ever be remedied until woman has the right to vote? It never will.

I believe, Mr. President, in every point of view the right of suffrage should be extended to woman. I maintain that it is a God-given right to take part in the administration of that government which controls their earthly destinies and interests. I believe it is for the interest of the men, for the interest of children, for the interest of our country, for the interest of the race.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it rather a mistake to suppose, as the Senator from Indiana seems to do, that the females of this country are laboring under any species of tyranny at present growing out of any state of the laws. The Senator is undoubtedly aware that in the State of Indiana, which he so ably represents, females, except as to the question of voting, have a great many rights and privileges preserved to them that men do not possess in respect to the protection of their property and their power to dispose of it. For instance, it is not within the power of a married man in the State of Indiana to dispose of his property, excluding his wife from participation in it. It is in the power of a married woman in the State of Indiana to dispose of all her property and leave her husband penniless and to starve, as the expression is, when you reverse the case, without his having the power to prevent it. I could name a dozen other instances, all of which show that in all the States of this Union, speaking as a general rule, as it is in Great Britain and in almost all other civilized countries, the law instead of discriminating against womanhood, discriminates in its favor in every respect whatever except the political respect of voting. That is a fact that no man can truthfully deny who has studied the history of society or who knows anything about the history of legislation in civilized states. Therefore, it does not do to say that the right to vote, the privilege of voting, or the duty of voting—because I use those phrases as not having the peculiar meaning that the Senator from California imputes to them, is essential to the protection of the female sex as such, because—as I have said, the protection that the law gives them is now in all respects, where their rights or privileges come in collision with the rest of society, greater than is extended to men.

The Senator from Indiana insists—and he has a perfect right to do so of course—that the right to vote is a natural right, and therefore if females are excluded from voting, as they are by the constitutions and laws of the various States, it is an infringement upon natural right, and that that infringement ought to be abolished. Of course, his conclusion is correct if his premises are true; but is the right to vote a natural right? Can the Senator refer to any work of any philosopher or writer upon natural or municipal law which maintains any such doctrine? I am safe in saying that the Senator cannot. If he can, I wish he would give me the name of some such writer or work; and I pause, as the saying is, for a reply.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks the attention of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MORTON. I beg pardon. A Senator was conversing with me at the moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was asking if the Senator from Indiana could refer me to the work of any writer upon natural or municipal law from the beginning of the world to the year 1860, which maintains, or asserts, or insinuates, or suggests that the right to vote in a political community is a natural right?

Mr. MORTON. I do not call to mind any author.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; the Senator does not. With candor he says so, because the Senator, learned in history as he is, knows, as the rest of us know, that there is no such thing. He knows that in all the discussions and all the turmoils of society where the rights of men and women in political respects, the rights of society at large, have been discussed and turned over and over and all manner of experiments in government tried and suggested, it never has been suggested that the right to participate in the government of a political community is a natural right belonging to every human being.

Mr. MORTON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question in that connection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORTON. I ask the Senator, then, this question: If there are natural rights, do not the natural and necessary means to protect those rights become a part of them? What is the right worth if that be denied?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I answer no, in the broad sense in which the Senator has put it. If he asks of me as to a state of nature, without being organized into any social or political community whatever, then I answer yes, and every man is what we call a savage, what the civil writers called in old times a barbarian; and he is invested, (as the Senator logically puts it if he applies it to such a subject,) upon his own judgment and in his own right with the power of defending and affirming whatever natural rights he has against all comers, exactly as a nation stands in respect to another nation; no man has a right to impose upon him any restraint; no man has a right to demand from him any concession; he is absolutely independent; and when his rights or claims come in conflict with those of anybody else he "fights it out" or runs away. So far, there is natural right no doubt; but I hope the Senator has not gone back quite so far from the present condition of the world as to wish to discuss questions of that kind. That is not what he means. What he means by natural rights no doubt is what society recognizes, what organized communities recognize as things of natural right, and those are things which are inherent in the person but are regulated and limited and restrained according to the rights and necessities of all the other persons in the community. In an organized society the right of self-defense is not a natural right in the broad sense, so that under all circumstances A B or C D has a right to defend himself against all aggression. An officer may come to arrest me on a warrant issued by a court irregularly. I have not the right to slay the officer because he takes me on the warrant. My place to resist is not by my natural force, not by raising a mob, but by going to the court that issued the warrant and showing that it had been issued contrary to law. And yet on the Senator's notion every time a man is brought under the law, if he does not agree with the law his business is to fight. The community cannot get along in that way. There is no such right as that in society.

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Senator what right, whether it be a natural right or an acquired right, has one man to govern another, or has society to govern the individual?

Mr. EDMUNDS. What right?

Mr. STEWART. Is it a natural or acquired right?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No man has a natural right to govern another, or an acquired right, or a political right, or a civil right that I know of, unless he is appointed the guardian of somebody. Of course, of that the Senator has not any experience; certainly not on the side of being a ward.

Mr. STEWART. Then what right has society, the body of men, to govern an individual? Is it a natural right or an acquired right?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose I should answer the Senator and say I do not know?

Mr. STEWART. What right have they to take from him his freedom in his savage state to do as he pleases? And if they have a right to take it from him, what right have they to take it from him and say he shall not participate with them equally in what resolution shall be made for his government?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that question is long enough now, and I will answer that part of it.

Mr. STEWART. My point is this——

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator is coming to the point, I will hear him further.

Mr. STEWART. My point is that each individual of society has as high a right to participate in prescribing the rules for his conduct as society itself has to exist. If they have a right to govern him he has a natural right—it is as near as anything can be, it seems to me—at any rate he has a right, whether it be natural or not, to have a voice in it if the principle of equality and fair play is one of the fundamental principles that should govern mankind.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see the Senator's point which he has come to at last; and the substance of it is, if I correctly understand him, that if society has a right to govern him, he has a right to govern society, and that makes equality; and if the majority has a right to control him, he has a right to control the majority, and there is equality! Very well. I leave the Senator, with his point, to enjoy it.

Now, let us return to the subject. It is perfectly plain, if we leave off joking about this business, and nobody if it were not a question about ladies' rights would have thought of questioning it—it is perfectly plain that the right to vote is one which the existing body of society as it is organized is to determine by its fundamental laws. Society does determine, in the State of Vermont, if you please, that voting must only be exercised by males above the age of twenty-one years, those who are not in the penitentiary, those who are not in the lunatic asylums, those who are not idiots, and so on. The laws of Indiana may provide the same thing, or may declare that the age shall be twenty, or may declare as the Roman law used to do that it shall be twenty-five, and so on; or it may declare as the Constitution of the United States does as to the age of Senators and as to the age of the President of the United States. On the argument of Senators in favor of this amendment to this bill, there would exist no right whatever in constituted society to make any limitation upon the free exercise of political rights to vote and hold office in respect to age. Why say a man cannot be a member of the Senate until he is thirty years of age? Who can say he is not just as good at twenty-nine?

The Senator from Indiana says that common sense teaches that we must put some limitation on this. So it does; and common sense has taught that it is left to each political community to determine what are the qualifications and limitations upon the privilege of exercising political rights; and it has always been so, and it always will be so, because when the Senator proposes to say that the other sex may vote—which I admit he has a perfect right to say, and society may so say—he does not undertake to say that ladies of seventeen, instead of eighteen, shall vote, because they come of age in my State at eighteen and do in many of the States—the Senator does not propose to say that all ladies of seventeen shall vote; and yet it is impossible to say that there is any distinction in respect to intelligence as a matter of right, any philosophical distinction between one year and another. True, as the Senator says, you may run it down so far that at last you have reached a condition of infancy, and there everybody says this child is not wise enough to vote, is not wise enough to do anything without having guardianship and tutelage. But if you put it upon the ground of natural right, the child has just as good a right to say to you that he shall be the judge of it as you have to say to him that you must be; and this shows that the notion of any natural right of anybody of any age to participate in the government of society is an absolute absurdity. It is one of those figments of the imagination that have crawled into some people's brains within a very few years and will go out again as other delusions do.

Then when you come to the fourteenth amendment it is equally obvious that that has nothing to do with the subject. If anybody had thought it related to suffrage when the fifteenth amendment was passed, nobody would have voted for the fifteenth amendment, because on that theory the right to vote did exist in all colored persons, females as well as males; and yet nobody of any party or any creed pretended at that time when we proposed the fifteenth amendment that we had guaranteed the right to vote by the fourteenth. Nobody suspected it; nobody suggested it; and nobody believed in it, and very few people do now, for the simple reason that the fourteenth amendment was directed, as everybody knows, by its language, by its history, by its relation to other laws, to what are called civil rights; but I am not going to define what they are, because to do so takes time. So, Mr. President, the fifteenth amendment was passed in order to secure a right to vote without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Then you come to the real question which is involved here; and that is the propriety of providing that females, limited in their description, twenty-one years of age, not idiots, not lunatics, not in the penitentiary—standing upon the same limitations that men do in these respects—are to vote. That presents a fair question, one that we have a perfect right to pass upon; and I have only said what I have in order to show, if I might, that we had not better run crazy over the idea that we were dealing with natural and inalienable rights and that we were violating human rights if we happened to say no, or that we were vindicating human rights in the sense now spoken of if we should say yes. We are merely considering a question of political expediency, as confessedly we have the power in governing the Territories to let anybody vote we choose. We can put the whole concern in Pembina, if we think it wise, into the hands of the madmen up there, and I do not know but that they are in the majority, for I certainly know nothing about it.

That brings me to the question which really is the one that the Senate ought to pass upon, for all this is incidental; and that is, what is the propriety of the bill at this time? There is an organized Territory, the Territory of Dakota. It has its governor, its judges, its Legislature, all the autonomy of government, its various places of holding courts; and the United States, speaking in a large sense, pays for it. Now you propose to double the expense to the United States of giving the people in that Territory a government. It is said that the Territory is large and that its various points are widely separated. So they are. So is the State of Texas large; I do not know but that it is as large as the Territory of Dakota.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Larger.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And yet that is no reason why we should make haste to divide the State of Texas into two States. It depends upon how populous the State is, how prosperous it is, how necessary it is that the power should be separated from one part of the State and another. Now what does the committee show us upon that subject here? It shows us that there are a few thousand enterprising people at Pembina, on the Red River, and that all around them, on every side almost, there is yet an uncultivated desert; I do not mean desert in the sense of being barren land, but unoccupied land. Now I think that in the future, at a reasonable time, when the railways constructing there shall have brought some inhabitants, and society shall have become more organized and more strong, so that the community if you set them apart by themselves will have sufficient natural warmth, so to speak, to keep themselves alive and prosperous, it will be a very proper thing indeed out of that vast Territory to provide for another one, and so finally for another State; but in my opinion this movement at this time is altogether premature. We have not waited long enough. The railway only reached the Red River within the last year. If I am wrong the Senator from Minnesota can correct me.

Mr. WINDOM. Within two years, I should say.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well, two years. I think it would be wiser for the sake of these people themselves, instead of imposing on them the burdens and responsibilities of a separate government, to let them live under the protection of the United States and of the Territory they have and the aid of the whole body of the people of the Territory until they shall have acquired more strength, more numbers, more enterprise, more production, more of everything which the aid of a strong Territory can give them, and which if you turn them out by themselves they are quite likely to fail in obtaining, than to pass the bill at this time. Therefore, if no other Senator wishes to make any remarks, I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. HAGER. I hope the Senator from Vermont will withdraw his motion. I desire to make a few remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CLAYTON in the chair.) The motion is not debatable.

Mr. HAGER. I ask the Senator to withdraw the motion for a few minutes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will renew it when he finishes his remarks, I will do so.

Mr. HAGER. Very well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. HAGER. Mr. President, it seems to me strange that a question of so much importance as that raised by this amendment appears to be, from the positions taken by Senators on the floor, should be presented upon this bill. This bill is not sufficiently comprehensive to grasp the question. The bill, if it be amended as proposed, will not confer the right of suffrage upon females throughout the country; and for us to undertake to legislate upon this question in regard to a distant Territory where perhaps there are few or no women, unless they be of the Indian race, is to me a very astonishing thing.

It is asserted here that women, as a matter of right, should be entitled to suffrage. So the Senator from Indiana says. But does this confer it upon them? Does the organization of this Territory confer suffrage on women throughout the country? The bill will, if we so express it, confer suffrage on females in this new Territory; but if there is anything in the proposition that it, as a general thing, should be extended to females, this is not the way to get at that question. Let it come up as a distinct, independent proposition by itself, and then every Senator can take his position in regard to a question which affects the whole country, and not a distant Territory merely. That is the way, in my opinion, to get at it.

I do not think, sir, that by the Constitution suffrage is conferred upon females, nor are we bound in legislating under the Constitution to take charge of that question here. As I read the fourteenth amendment it is not applicable to this question. It provides that—

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

In connection with that the fifteenth amendment declares that—

The right of citizens—

Created by the fourteenth amendment—

The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Does that deprive the States of all power of interference with the elective franchise? Does that take away from the State the right to say whether females shall vote or shall not? Does that confer upon the Congress of the United States a right to say that females may or may not vote in the States? I do not so understand it. The words "shall not be abridged by the United States or by any State" clearly recognize that a State still has authority to some degree to legislate on the question of the elective franchise. Cannot a State so legislate as to provide that females may or may not vote? As far as the general question is concerned, therefore, I do not understand that the power is conferred on Congress so as to be comprehensive of the whole Union. Whether it may be exercised as to this Territory in its organization, is another matter; and really the question is here rather one of policy.

We agree that "man" is a generic term, and that all persons properly classed as belonging to the genus homo include females as well as males, and therefore all laws legislating in regard to "man" or to "persons" comprehend males as well as females. It is simply a question of policy whether we should extend suffrage to the females or not. There has been much discussion in books on that subject. John Stuart Mill has taken the ground distinctly that the suffrage should be conferred upon the whole race of man properly comprehended in the term "genus homo." He has not undertaken to say that it should be extended to the natives of India under the jurisdiction of Great Britain or to the Hottentots of Africa. Great Britain has never yet committed the folly of saying that suffrage should be extended to the whole human race without any regard to their condition. And, sir, we have presented to the world first in the history of mankind the singular spectacle of a superior race struggling to admit an inferior one to social and political equality, when they had not intelligence enough to demand it, and have not capacity enough to exercise it or understand it when it has been conferred. No English liberal has contended that all persons properly belonging to the genus homo are qualified to exercise the elective franchise. We have heard much of "manhood suffrage," but by the term "manhood" they mean the physical, moral, and mental maturity of a nation; and they are contending for the political preponderance of a power in the State well understood with us, the government of a free country by an intelligent people. No English reformer has contended that the elective franchise should be extended to the British native subjects in India or Africa.

Inasmuch as in the wisdom of the Government and people of the United States the right to the elective franchise has been conferred upon the black race in this country, I see no reason on the ground of qualification why it should not be conferred upon females. But it is argued that for certain social reasons it should not be conferred upon females. Therefore it is not a question of right. It is merely a question of policy; and that, in my opinion, is the only question here before the Senate, having first settled whether we have the power under the Constitution to legislate on this precise point in regard to the Territories.

I am unwilling to legislate by piecemeal in this manner. If there is any good in it; if, as the Senator from Indiana says, as a matter of right women should be entitled to the franchise, that right should be coextensive with the whole territory of the country, and not be limited to the little Territory of Pembina, which is not yet organized.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I renew the motion to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. SARGENT. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RAMSEY. I should like to appeal to the Senator from Vermont to withdraw the motion for five minutes.

Mr. STEWART. We will not lay it on the table.

Mr. RAMSEY. Very well; let the vote be taken.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 24, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Buckingham, Conkling, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Ransom, Scott, Sherman, Wadleigh, Washburn, and Wright—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Boreman, Boutwell, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Gilbert, Harvey, Hitchcock, Logan, Mitchell, Morton, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Spencer, Sprague, Stewart, Tipton, West, and Windom—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Brownlow, Cameron, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Kelly, Lewis, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Pease, Robertson, Saulsbury, Schurz, Stevenson, Stockton, and Thurman—25.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CLAYTON in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT,] upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, it would seem scarcely credible that in the Senate of the United States an abrupt and sudden change in so fundamental a relation as that borne by the two sexes to our system of Government should be proposed as an "experiment," and that it should be gravely recommended that a newly organized Territory under act of Congress should be set aside for this "experiment" which is in direct, grossly irreverent disregard of all that we have known as our rule, our great fundamental rule, in organizing a government of laws, whether colonial, State, or Federal, in this country.

I frankly say, Mr. President, that which strikes me most forcibly is the gross irreverence of this proposition, its utter disregard of that Divine will by which man and woman were created different, physically, intellectually, and morally, and in defiance of which we are now to have this poor, weak, futile attempt of man to set up his schemes of amelioration in defiance of all that we have read, of every tradition, of every revelation, of all human experience, enlightened as it has been by Divine permission. It seems to me that to introduce so grave a subject as this, to spring it here upon the Senate without notice in the shape of an amendment to a pending measure, to propose thus to experiment with the great laws that lie at the very foundation of human society, and to do it for the most part in the trivial tone which we have witnessed during this debate, is not only mortifying, but it renders one almost hopeless of the permanence of our Government if this is to be the example set by one of the Houses of Congress, that which claims to be more sedate and deliberate, if it proposes in this light and perfunctory way to deal with questions of this grave nature and import.

Sir, there is no time at present for that preparation which such a subject demands at the hands of any sensible man, mindful of his responsibilities, who seeks to deal with it.

This is an attempt to disregard laws promulgated by the Almighty Himself. It is irreverent legislation in the simplest and strongest sense of the word. Nay, sir, not only so, but it is a step in defiance of the laws of revealed religion as given to men. If there be one institution which it seems to me has affected the character of this country, which has affected the whole character of modern civilization, the results of which we can but imperfectly trace and but partly recognize, it is the effect of the institution of Christian marriage, the mysterious tie uniting the one man and the one woman until they shall become one and not two persons. It is an institution which is mysterious, which is beyond the reach and the understanding of man, but he certainly can best exhibit his sense of duty and proper obligation when he reverently shall submit to and recognize its wisdom. All such laws as proposed by this amendment are stumbling-blocks and are meant to be stumbling-blocks in the way of that perfect union of the sexes which was intended by the law of Christian marriage.

Suffrage is a political franchise; it is not a right, because the word "right" is used in reference to voting in the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution that does not make it a right. It is in the very nature of government a political privilege confided, according to the exigency, the expediency, by the wisdom of those who control the Government, to a certain class. The suggestion of the Senator from Vermont to the Senator from Indiana was entirely sound, and it was unanswered by the Senator from Indiana and it is unanswerable by him or any one else. If this right to vote be what the Senator from Indiana declares it to be, a natural and inalienable right, then you have no more right to deny it to a person who is under the age of twenty-one than you have to deny it to a person who is over the age of twenty-one years. Sir, the difference is radical. Voting is no right; it is a privilege granted, a franchise which is granted to certain classes, more or less extended according to the supposed expediency which shall control the minds of those who frame the constitution of government for a people. There is no wrong done, so far as the abnegation of a right is involved, by denying this to certain classes of a community, whether on account of age or sex or any other supposed causes of disqualification. In this country the whole foundation of our institutions has been that the male sex when arrived at years of supposed discretion alone should take part in the political control of the country.

It is not necessary for me to speak now of other influences than those that come from politics; it is not necessary for me to dwell upon the actual and potential influences that control the fate of men and of nations. We all know they are not those most apparent. We all know that the human passions and affections are the true governors of the world, and not this power which you call voting. It is the passions, it is the affections, it is the sympathies and desires of the human heart and human ambition that control the vote, and not the vote that controls them. And now you propose to try an "experiment" upon a community composed of your own fellow-citizens; an experiment which is in defiance of all human experience, all suggestions of philosophy, of your own laws, and of every lesson you should have drawn from every civilized nation that has preceded you.

Under the operation of this amendment what will become of the family, what will become of the family hearthstone around which cluster the very best influences of human education? You will have a family with two heads—a "house divided against itself." You will no longer have that healthful and necessary subordination of wife to husband, and that unity of relationship which is required by a true and a real Christian marriage. You will have substituted a system of contention and difference warring against the laws of nature herself, and attempting by these new-fangled, petty, puny, and most contemptible contrivances, organized in defiance of the best lessons of human experience, to confuse, impede, and disarrange the palpable will of the Creator of the world. I can see in this proposition for female suffrage the end of all that home-life and education which are the best nursery for a nation's virtue. I can see in all these attempts to invade the relations between man and wife, to establish differences, to declare those to be two whom God hath declared to be one, elements of chaotic disorder, elements of destruction to all those things which are, after all, our best reliance for a good and a pure and an honest government.

As I said, Mr. President, I rose simply to express my astonishment that a measure of this kind could have received the assent which it apparently has received from the Senate of the United States in the vote just recorded. The subject is too broad, it is too deep, it is too serious to attempt to discuss it unprepared and within the time which is now allotted to me. I sincerely hope that if this subject is to be acted upon, it will be after long, serious, severe, close consideration. Let all sides of the subject be viewed in all its vastness and far-reaching consequences. Let Senators consider the results, and let at least their aims in this matter be something higher than mere political and partisan considerations, which I fear have animated much of the discussion to which we have listened.

Mr. President, I trust sincerely that the vote just taken, indicating the refusal of the Senate to lay this bill upon the table, may not incate the will of the Senate in respect of this amendment. We have no right to subject this or any other portion of our fellow-citizens to so sad, so untoward, so unhappy an experiment as is here proposed. I have sat in this Chamber and seen laws leveled with the most serious and cruel penalties against a class of people practicing polygamy in our Territories. What will this law do? Will it not in fact sever those relations to which I have referred as being essential for the virtue and safety of a State? What is your State unless it is founded upon virtuous and happy homes? And where can there be a virtuous and happy home unless a Christian marriage shall have consecrated it?

No, Mr. President, I trust that this amendment will not be adopted, that we shall not trifle in this way with the happiness of a large portion of our fellow-citizens, that we shall not set what I must consider this indecorous example of government; and I trust that the vote of the Senate most emphatically will stop here, and I trust stop permanently, even the suggestion of granting the political franchise of voting to the women of America. They do not need it, sir. I cannot of course speak for all, but I know that I can speak the sentiment of many when I say that to them the proposition is abhorrent to take them from the retirement where their sway is so admitted, so beneficent, so elevating, and to throw them into another sphere for which they are totally unfitted and where all that at present adorns and protects them must be taken away by the rough and vulgar contact with those struggles which men are much better fitted to meet. No, sir; the relations of the sexes as they exist to-day in this country under the laws of this country have produced happy and stable Government, or at least are not responsible for the evil features which we witness. The best protection for the women of America is in the respect and the love which the men of America bear to them. Every man conversant with the practical affairs of life knows that the fact, that the mere fact that it is a woman who seeks her rights in a court of justice alone gives here an advantage over her contestant which few men are able to resist. I would put it to any man who has practiced law in the courts of this country; let him stand before a jury composed only of men, let the case be tried only by men; let all the witnesses be men; and the plaintiff or the defendant be a woman, and if you choose to add to that, even more unprotected than women generally are, a widow or an orphan, and does not every one recognize the difficulty, not to find protection for her rights, but the difficulty to induce the men who compose the juries of America to hold the balance of justice steadily enough to insure that the rights of others are not invaded by the force of sympathy for her sex? These are common every-day illustrations. They could be multiplied ad infinitum.

Mr. President, there never was a greater mistake, there never was a falser fact stated than that the women of America need any protection further than the love borne to them by their fellow-countrymen. Every right, every privilege, many that men do not attempt, many that men cannot hope for, are theirs most freely. Do not imperil the advantages which they have; do not attempt in this hasty, ill-considered, shallow way to interfere with the relations which are founded upon the laws of nature herself. Depend upon it, Mr. President, man's wisdom is best shown by humble attention, by humble obedience to the great laws of nature; and those discoveries which have led men to their chiefest enjoyment and greatest advantages have been from the great minds of those who did lay their ears near the heart of nature, listened to its beatings, and did not attempt to correct God's handiwork by their own futile attempts at improvement.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I listened to the speech of the Senator from Delaware with great attention; I appreciate his feelings on the subject; and it has occasioned me to have some reflection upon this question during the time he was speaking. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware and of the Senate and of the country to a few facts in regard to this matter of woman's rights, and to see whether it has not been well to change some of the ancient order of things.

There was a time among our Anglo-Saxon fathers when it was seriously discussed in the law-books what size the whip should be with which a husband could properly chastise his wife. If it was no larger than the thumb, I believe no action would lie. Those were the good old times, and those times you can see illustrated to-day all over the world where savages——

Mr. SARGENT. That was when we were near to nature.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; that was when man held sway, and when God's law of man's supremacy was omnipotent! Then harmony was preserved. If you will go out into my State and see the Indian women carrying the loads on their backs and the men riding on horses and the women doing the work, you will see the harmony of the supremacy of man!

Now, I undertake to say that there is no surer criterion of the civilization of any nation than the position which woman occupies; and the less dependent she is the more she has to do with the management of society, the more she is regarded as an individual, the higher that society stands, and you may take any place you please to illustrate; but where she depends exclusively on man and man's justice, there you have absolute barbarism. Do you think that women have been less loyal to their husbands, do you think that virtue has been less protected in this country since the rights of women were vindicated by the law, since they were entitled to hold property? Have they not been as good wives as they were formerly? Has society been injured thereby? So far as the rights of property are concerned, it elevates woman to own property and to have the protection of the law in it, and not to be made a pauper and a beggar by a drunken husband. I tell you that there is a matter for serious consideration. When it is said that the ways of the past were the best, I say history is marked by the position which woman occupied in each nation, and it is to-day. Show me the nation that elevates its women and acknowledges their rights and protects them by the law and severs them in point of protection from the caprice or the sympathy of men—show me that nation, and that nation shall be first. It is one of the evidences of the advance of civilization in America that woman does occupy the position she does here; and it is idle to say that society will be destroyed by recognizing her as having rights to protect.

It is very well for women who chance to have kind husbands and luxurious homes, under the flattery of their husbands to sneer at their less fortunate sisters who are debarred every right. It is very well for those who have luxury and power and wealth to trample upon the unfortunate that cry for bread and for help. It is very easy to philosophize about laws and say that women are not fit for this place and not fit for that; that it is indelicate, and all that kind of thing, to allow her to earn an honest living, or to have a place in a Department where she can do work; it is very well for us to say, "Here, we will give her only half-pay for the same labor;" but they who serve and they who suffer feel it differently. How is the voice of women on this subject to be heard? Shall it be heard from that class only who are satisfied with their protection, or shall the voice of the weak and the starving be heard? There is no way for it to be heard. We see it daily.

You talk about degradation. One of the great sources of the degradation of this country, one of the great sources of the breaking up of families and destroying society is your low groggeries and your gambling-houses and your places of resort for bad men, that are tolerated in spite of your laws and will be so long as men only vote. The women suffer by these things; and that consideration alone has often made me hesitate upon this question. I do believe that if the good women of America could speak to-day they would reform many evils that we wink at or allow to exist because we want the votes of the parties who are committing these sins against society. I say let the women have a voice; and when it is said that this is ill-considered, that this is not the proper time, and that it is too serious a business to be considered by the Senate of the United States on this bill, I tell you society is marching on to it, and as I remarked before it will not be ten years before there will be no voice in this Senate against female suffrage. It is necessary for women, if they are to be protected in society and not to be the prey of man, that they shall have the ballot to protect themselves. It is the only thing in a free government that can protect any one; and whether it is a natural right or an artificial right it is nonsense to discuss. It is a necessary right; it is necessary to freedom; it is necessary to equal rights; it is necessary to protection; it is necessary for every class to have the ballot if we are going to have a square deal and equal rights. If it is said that the spirit of discussion is not right, let us discuss it in the proper spirit, let us view questions as they are and meet the issue squarely. That this will come, however it may be laughed down now, I feel confident.

Mr. BOREMAN. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss the subject of woman suffrage. I have my opinions as to the propriety or impropriety of the adoption of that principle. I expect to vote for this bill whether female suffrage is incorporated in it or not; but in answer to the remarks made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] a short time since, I think it well, probably, to state a few facts in regard to this proposed Territory. He is certainly laboring under a misapprehension as to the condition of this Territory and as to its resources, and probably, too, as to the facilities that the people living in the section proposed to be incorporated in this new organization have for getting to that portion where the capital is located and the business of the territorial government transacted.

Sir, if you look on the map you will find that Dakota Territory, as at present constituted, is a parallelogram, some eight hundred miles in length and some four hundred miles in width. There are large settlements in either end. In the southern portion of the Territory, and very near the southern line, is located the present capital, Yankton, and near that a number of organized counties with many thousands of people, with a railroad penetrating to the capital and probably a few miles beyond. Between that and the northern half of the Territory is a comparative wilderness, through which there are no roads. There is no method of travel save by the Missouri River; and those persons who live in the Territory here proposed to be organized cannot get to their capital or to those portions of Dakota where the most of their business is transacted without going around through the State of Minnesota. They have to travel out of their own Territory in order to get to its capital to see the officers there and transact whatever business calls them to the capital of the Territory. The intermediate country, as I remarked, is unsettled and impenetrable.

That is one consideration. Another is that there are within this part of the Territory of Dakota proposed to be set off, as the statistics that have been shown to the committee prove, from seven to ten thousand hardy, brave people of the class who were willing to go there and encounter the deprivations that meet the pioneers in the settlement of a new country, and they wish the ordinary facilities for transacting their business.

This proposition is not unprecedented so far as the population is concerned. I have gone to the trouble, as that member of the committee to whom the examination of this subject was confided, to examine into and ascertain the population and circumstances under which other Territories have heretofore been organized, and I find that this proposed Territory has a population to-day exceeding that of almost any Territory that has ever heretofore been organized. Mississippi Territory was organized in 1789 with a population of 8,850; Indiana with 5,641; Michigan with 4,000; Wisconsin with 7,000; Minnesota with 6,077; Washington Territory with 1,201; Dakota organized in 1861 with 4,837; Nevada in the same year with a population of 6,857; and Arizona in 1863 with a population of 5,000.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator gives the figures of the preceding census as to Nevada. Nevada had at least fifty thousand people when she was organized.

Mr. BOREMAN. I speak from the report made on this subject by the proper committee. If Nevada at that time had fifty thousand people, I apprehend the population has been decreasing since that time, for the recent census shows that it had not in 1870 a population of over forty thousand. I was speaking of the time it was organized into a Territory, in 1861.

I refer to these statistics to show that the committee were justified, so far as the number of the population was concerned, in making the report they have submitted. Within the last two years the Northern Pacific Railroad has been completed about half-way the length of this Territory, penetrating it to the Missouri River at a thriving town called Bismarck, two hundred miles from the border of Minnesota. That town is growing rapidly. There are other towns situated in other portions of the Territory. From the proposed division line of this Territory to the British possessions is about four hundred miles, and on that northern line of this Territory there are considerable settlements, some towns and villages. There are published within this Territory some three or four newspapers, showing a state of civilization somewhat advanced, showing that these people are trying to take care of themselves, and to prove to the world what they are doing and what they propose to do if allowed the ordinary facilities.

Mr. President, in addition to this condition of affairs to which I have referred, the people who are thus located and situated desire that this Territory shall be created not simply, as has been suggested, for the purpose of making a few more offices, but for their convenience as citizens of this country. I will also state that the Legislature of Dakota has twice petitioned Congress to organize this new Territory, cutting off one-half of that Territory. Some two or three years since, at a sitting of the Legislature, they sent a petition here, and a report was then made in favor of organizing this Territory; and at the last session of the Legislature they passed a memorial to the same effect, I believe unanimously. The Delegate (if I may refer to that, and I suppose it is legitimate in that connection) representing the Territory, living south of the line and therefore not interested in this matter I apprehend, urges it as the sentiment of his people and the desire of those who are interested particularly.

Now I say, after having looked into the history of the organization of nearly every Territory since the foundation of the Government to get the statistics and circumstances which Congress has decided sufficient to justify the organization of a Territory, that I think this is not inferior to any of them in all the elements that are usually regarded as sufficient to justify the organization of a Territory. I have not referred to the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, because they were organized under peculiar circumstances. They were abnormal in their situation, and it is not necessary to refer to them; but I have taken the cases from the foundation of the Government up to this time, and I say that the circumstances which have induced the committee to report this bill have uniformly been considered heretofore as sufficient to justify Congress in organizing a Territory.

This much I have thought it necessary to say in vindication of the report of the committee. I had not intended to utter a word. I supposed the bill would pass upon the report which was made by the committee. I am inclined now to think that if it had not been for the unfortunate, if I may say so, amendment offered by my friend from California [Mr. SARGENT] it would have passed long since. But this question of woman suffrage is one upon which all our friends probably do not desire to vote either one way or the other, and it is a very convenient way to get rid of voting on the question directly to lay this bill on the table. Fortunately that question has been settled for the present, and I am glad the Senate has seen fit not to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator speaks about people not wishing to vote on the amendment directly; and as I made the motion to lay on the table I assume that he refers to me. I beg to disabuse his mind on that subject, inasmuch as I am opposed to the amendment and am perfectly free to vote against it, and in doing so I suppose I represent, according to the latest advices I have, a very large majority of the people of Vermont.

Mr. BOREMAN. I agree with the Senator from Vermont on the subject of woman suffrage myself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I hope the Senator will not suggest that I am trying to dodge the question by moving to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. BOREMAN. Not at all. I did not allude to the Senator who made the motion; and the remark I made was more intended to be playful than serious. I simply thought that probably the bill had enough friends to pass it if that subject was not mooted. I may be mistaken. However, I shall be glad to have a vote on the bill either with or without woman suffrage incorporated in it. I shall vote against incorporating it, but if it is put there I shall nevertheless be gratified to have the bill passed. I feel no interest in it except as representing what I believe to be the interests and wishes of those to be affected by it. I think the circumstances are such as to justify Congress in organizing this Territory, else as representing the committee I should not have reported the bill. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. RAMSEY. I desire simply to add to the clear and forcible statement of the case just presented by the chairman of the Committee on Territories that in my judgment Congress owes it to the people inhabiting this region of country to give them some protection, which they can only get through an organized government. You have in that country a more advanced population than you have had I think in any Territory you have ever heretofore established under this Government. You have ten thousand people—a busy, active, bustling population there—partly collected in towns, of which there are four or more. One of the towns on the Missouri River has a population of over a thousand people. Every pursuit that is followed anywhere else is conducted by those people. They inhabit one of the best agricultural countries in the Union, and yet they are cut off by an uninhabited, unsettled country between themselves and Southern Dakota, where the whole machinery of the territorial government now lies, so that they are entirely without any protection. I do not see how Congress can deny these people the protection which a local government like this would give them.

Mr. TIPTON. How many miles are they from the capital?

Mr. RAMSEY. The necessary travel for officials, prisoners, witnesses, marshals, and judges annually from Yankton, the seat of government of the present Territory of Dakota, up to Northern Dakota, in going to hold court and returning, amounts to fifteen hundred miles. Why, sir, the expense of this condition of things is infinitely greater than the expense of carrying on the territorial government, which, as the report of the chairman of the Committee on Territories shows, does not amount generally to more than $20,000, or $23,000 a year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why do prisoners have to be transported?

Mr. RAMSEY. They take them down to the penitentiary of Dakota, if the honorable Senator desires to know. There is but one penitentiary in the Territory of Dakota, and when men are convicted in the court held in the north, they must of course be transferred to the prison in the south.

There are three or four towns, and very respectable towns, in Algonquin, or Pembina. There are navigable rivers with nearly a thousand miles of steamboat navigation upon them; and in view of the population that that kind of trade and commerce always produces, the protection of the law is required. Now simply because you have sprung up an irrelevant debate here on a side issue, the Senate has become weary and seems disposed to slaughter this bill. I hope Senators will reconsider that determination and pass the bill. There are two hundred miles of railroad in this Territory. Every one will at once admit that all these interests and the population that clusters around them must have some government. I hope the Senate will pass the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT,] upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSTON, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. SPENCER.] If he were here he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. BOGY, (after having first voted in the negative.) I rise to withdraw my vote. At the time I voted I forgot that I was paired with the Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. DORSEY.] I should have voted "nay" and he would have voted "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will be withdrawn if there be no objection.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, (after having first voted in the negative.) It occurs to me that I am paired with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. OGLESBY.] If he were here he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay." I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Leave will be granted if there is no objection.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 19, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Carpenter, Chandler, Conover, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Gilbert, Harvey, Mitchell, Morton, Patterson, Pratt, Sargent, Sprague, Stewart, Tipton, Washburn, West, and Windom—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Boreman, Boutwell, Buckingham, Clayton, Conkling, Cooper, Davis, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hitchcock, Jones, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Ramsey, Ransom, Saulsbury, Scott, Sherman, Wadleigh, and Wright—27.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bogy, Brownlow, Cameron, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Lewis, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Oglesby, Pease, Robertson, Schurz, Spencer, Stevenson, Stockton, and Thurman—27.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. MORTON called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the chairman of the committee if the clause still stands in the bill which authorizes all the male inhabitants of that Territory to vote at the first election?

Mr. BOREMAN. I think the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not asking whether I am mistaken or not; I am asking if the clause remains as it stood reported by the committee?

Mr. BOREMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is enough for me.

Mr. RAMSEY. There is nothing new in that.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bogy, Boreman, Chandler, Clayton, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Harvey, Hitchcock, Jones, Kelly, Logan, Mitchell, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Sherman, Tipton, Wadleigh, and Windom—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Boutwell, Buckingham, Carpenter, Conkling, Conover, Davis, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Ingalls, Johnston, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Norwood, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Scott, Sprague, Stewart, Washburn, West, and Wright—29.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Brownlow Cameron, Cooper, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Howe, Lewis, Morton, Oglesby, Pease, Robertson, Schurz, Spencer, Stevenson, Stockton, and Thurman—25.

So the bill was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1572) to amend the several acts providing a national currency and to establish free banking, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HORACE MAYNARD of Tennessee, Mr. C. B. FARWELL of Illinois, and Mr. HIESTER CLYMER of Pennsylvania, managers at the same on its part.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3422) for the relief of Mercy Ann Hall, widow of Captain Charles F. Hall; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3522) to extend the jurisdiction of the Light-House Board.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 2782) to extend the time to pre-emptors on the public lands in the State of Minnesota to make final payment;

A bill (H. R. No. 1560) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to reduce duties on imports and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes,'" approved March 3, 1873;

A bill (H. R. No. 8267) changing the name and location of Irasburgh National Bank of Orleans, county of Orleans, State of Vermont;

A bill (H. R. No. 2999) for the relief of Henry A. Webster, V. B. McCollum, and A. Colby, of Washington Territory, pre-emptors on the Makah Indian reservation; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1590) to provide for the better protection of the frontier settlements of Texas against Indian and Mexican depredations.

BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 571) to authorize the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to construct a branch, and to change the location of its road within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was ordered to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, on the 10th of March, 1873, the Senate of the United States adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections be instructed to examine and report, at the next session of Congress, upon the best and most practicable mode of electing the President, and providing a tribunal to adjust and decide all contested questions connected therewith, with leave to sit during vacation.

On behalf of the committee I now beg leave to submit a report on that subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be laid on the table and printed.

Mr. MORTON. I move that five thousand additional copies of the report be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet at twelve o'clock to-morrow. There are so many committee meetings necessary that I think we had better meet at twelve o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For to-morrow only?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the motion for to-morrow only inasmuch as the day following being Decoration Day we probably shall not meet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion that when the Senate meet to-morrow it be at twelve o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATOR FROM ALABAMA.

Mr. MERRIMON. I desire to state that I have received a note from the Senator from Alabama [Mr. GOLDTHWAITE] stating that he is too ill to be here to-day. He desired to be present and to take part in the discussion touching the Alabama senatorial election; but he has been unable to come on account of illness.

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution from the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the joint rule of the two Houses, No. 6, which provides that after a bill shall have passed both Houses it shall be duly enrolled on parchment, be suspended so far as relates to bills of this House No. 1215, to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, 1873; No. 2879, revising and consolidating all the laws authorizing post-roads in force on the 1st day of December, 1873; and No. 3349, to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, relating to the District of Columbia, in force on the 1st day of December, 1873; and that the same may be presented to the President of the United States as engrossed in the House of Representatives and passed in the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. I suppose there will be no objection to acting on that resolution now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think we had better let it wait until to-morrow morning. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ANTHONY. Allow me to make a suggestion in regard to this matter?

Mr. EDMUNDS. If we lay it over until to-morrow, the suggestion can be made then.

Mr. ANTHONY. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator allow the Chair to dispose of the business on his table?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think we had better adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the Senator allow me to call up an appropriation bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will, if the purpose is to leave it as the unfinished business.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2545) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That bill being taken up, I renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 28, 1874.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADMISSION OF COLORADO AS A STATE.

Mr. CHAFFEE, from the Committee on the Territories, by unanimous consent, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3521) to enable the people of Colorado to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of said State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on the Territories, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent of the House that a session be held this evening for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. To be accompanied by an order that at half past four o'clock, without further motion, the Speaker shall declare a recess.

Mr. DAWES. Certainly.

No objection being made, it was so ordered.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the order was made; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask that to-morrow evening a session be held for the purpose of considering reports from the Committee on Appropriations, with the same order in regard to the Speaker declaring a recess at half past four o'clock.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICT IN COLORADO.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on the Public Lands, for consideration at this time, House bill No. 1507, with amendments, to create an additional land district in the Territory of Colorado. It is recommended by the General Land Office.

The bill as proposed to be amended was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all that part of the Territory of Colorado commencing at a point on the south boundary line of Colorado Territory, between ranges 69 and 70 west of the sixth principal meridian; thence running north to the northern boundary of township 28 south; thence west, on a line between townships 27 and 28 south, to the western boundary of range 73 west; thence north, on said boundary of range 73 west, to a point where the line between townships 48 and 49 north, New Mexico meridian, will intersect the same; thence west, between said townships 48 and 49 north, to the western boundary of the Territory; thence south, with said boundary line, to the southwest corner of the Territory; thence east, on the line of the southern boundary of the Territory, to the place of beginning, shall constitute a separate land district, to be called Del Norte land district, the office of which shall be located at Del Norte, in Conejos County: Provided, That the President of the United States may change the location of said land office from time to time, as the public interests may require.

SEC. 2. That the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or in the recess of the Senate, a register and a receiver of public moneys for said district; and said officers shall reside in the place where said land office is located, and shall have the same powers and shall receive the same fees and emoluments as the like officers now receive in the other land districts in said Territory.

SEC. 3. That all persons in said district who, prior to the opening of said Del Norte land office, shall have filed their declaratory statement or application for preemption or homestead rights in any other land office in said Territory, shall thereafter make proofs and entries at said Del Norte land office; and all unfinished business in any other land office relating exclusively to lands in said Del Norte land district shall be transferred to said Del Norte land office when notified by the officers of the opening thereof.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I ask the gentleman to consent to an amendment in the second section, providing for the appointment of a register and receiver by the President, to strike out the words "or in the recess of the Senate."

Mr. PHILLIPS. I have no objection to that.

No objection being made, the bill was received, the amendments agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PHILLIPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL IRON-MOLDERS' UNION.

Mr. FIELD, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3522) to incorporate the National Iron-Molders' Union; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Education and Labor, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

JURISDICTION OF LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD.

Mr. HOOPER. I ask unanimous consent to report for consideration at this time, from the Committee on Commerce, a bill to extend the jurisdiction of the Light-House Board.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which objections will be in order to its present consideration.

The bill provides that the jurisdiction of the Light-House Board, created by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for light-houses, and providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes," approved August 31, 1852, shall be extended over the Mississippi, Ohio, and Missouri Rivers for the establishment of such beacon-lights, day-lights, and buoys as may be necessary for the use of vessels navigating those streams, and for this purpose the board shall be required to divide the designated rivers into one or two additional light-house districts, to be in all respects similar to the already existing light-house system, and shall be authorized to lease the necessary grounds for all such lights and beacons as are used to point out changeable channels, and which in consequence cannot be made permanent.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Does this bill enlarge the power of the board at all, or only extend its territorial jurisdiction?

Mr. HOOPER. It simply extends the territorial jurisdiction of the board.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to ask whether this bill dedicates the land by act of the Federal Government without consent of the State?

Mr. HOOPER. O, no; not at all.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3523) was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOOPER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. ELIZA B. DYER.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3524) granting a pension to Mrs. Eliza B. Dyer, widow of the late Brevet Major-General Alexander B. Dyer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LAND CLAIMS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. BUCKNER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3525) to confirm certain land claims in the State of Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC SALES OF PINE TIMBER.

Mr. CLYMER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to report to this House whether sales of pine timber have been made from lands included within forfeited or lapsed railroad grants, or whether money has been collected or is due on account of timber-cutting upon such lands; and if so the amount of such sales or collections or amounts due, and what disposition has been made of the funds derived therefrom, if any; and whether any steps have been taken to cover the same into the Treasury of the United States.

PONTON BRIDGES ON MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. SAWYER. On behalf of the Committee on Commerce, I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 2538) to legalize and establish a ponton railway-bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the amendments, which were read.

The first amendment was in line 12 to strike out "two hundred and fifty," and to insert "three hundred and ninety-six;" and in line 13 to strike out "three hundred and twenty" and insert "four hundred and eight;" and to change the word "draw" to "draws;" so as to make the clause read:

Provided, That the said John Lawler and the said Prairie du Chien and McGregor Railway Company shall keep up and maintain a suitable ponton draw of not less than three hundred and ninety-six feet in length in the eastern channel and one not less than four hundred and eight feet in length in the principal or western channel of said river, and that said draws shall be opened promptly, &c.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That the bridge heretofore authorized to be erected across the Mississippi River at or near Clinton, Iowa, by section 1 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the town of Clinton, in the State of Iowa, and other bridges across said river, and to establish them as post-roads," approved April 1, 1872, may be constructed and maintained as a pile and ponton bridge, subject to the terms, conditions, and requirements contained in the foregoing sections of this act.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that this amendment be concurred in with an amendment adding the following:

Provided, That in the bridge mentioned in this section only one draw shall be required unless otherwise determined by the Secretary of War, which draw shall be located as he may direct, and be not less than four hundred and eight feet in width.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment of the Senate, as amended, was concurred in.

The next amendment was to amend the title so as to read "A bill to legalize and establish a ponton railway-bridge across the Mississippi River at Prairie du Chien, and to authorize the construction of a similar bridge at or near Clinton, Iowa."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SAWYER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COPYRIGHTS.

Mr. CONGER, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Patents a bill (H. R. No. 3526) to amend an act to revise and consolidate the statutes relating to copyrights, approved July 8, 1870; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

MERCY ANN HALL.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I rise to a privileged question, and call up the motion to reconsider which was entered in reference to the bill (H. R. No. 3422) for the relief of Mercy Ann Hall, widow of Captain Charles F. Hall. I will take but a minute or two in explaining the bill, and then if it should appear likely to occupy any considerable time I shall give way to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. POLAND.]

The bill contains two sections. The first provides that Mrs. Hall shall draw her husband's pay down to December 31, 1873, the time when the officers and crew of the Polaris were discharged. She would receive under this section $1,836.

The second section authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to negotiate with Mrs. Hall for the purchase of all of Captain Hall's papers (including his records of his two arctic expeditions prior to his entering upon this service for the Government) at a sum not to exceed $15,000. These papers are believed to be very valuable. The bill provides that if the purchase be made they shall be handed over to the Smithsonian Institution, to be examined by the professors or officers of that institution, who shall report to Congress what should ultimately be done with them. While one object of this provision is the advancement of science, it is also designed, I may say, to do something for the widow of this arctic explorer, whose history in connection with these explorations is so familiar to members of the House. Mrs. Hall is left in very destitute circumstances, with two children dependent upon her. We propose to pay her the balance of her husband's pay down to the time when the officers and crew of the Polaris were discharged and also to buy these papers, if she chooses to sell them for $15,000. The arctic explorer, Dr. Kane, made, I think, some $70,000 or $75,000 from his accounts of his explorations. The amount proposed to be paid for the papers of Captain Hall is supposed to be moderate, and the purchase is recommended by literary people who have had access to the papers.

The bill, which was read, provides in the first section that the Secretary of the Navy be authorized and directed to allow and settle the salary of Charles F. Hall, late in command of the Polaris expedition, to December 31, 1873, and pay the balance to his widow, Mercy Ann Hall. The second section provides that the Secretary of the Navy be authorized to purchase from the said Mercy Ann Hall the manuscripts of said Charles F. Hall relative to his several voyages and explorations in the north seas at a price not exceeding $15,000, and in case of purchase, to deposit the same with the officers of the Smithsonian Institution for safe-keeping, examination, and report to Congress. The third section provides that the sum of $16,936, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be appropriated to carry out the provisions of the act.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion to reconsider the vote by which this bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was brought before the House.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I am not disposed to make the point of order against this bill that it calls for an appropriation of money, but I ask the attention of the House to it. The bill really proposes to give a gratuity of $15,000 to Mrs. Hall, although it does it under the disguise of paying her that sum for the manuscripts of the late Captain Hall. I am not aware of any precedent for this. Captain Hall was not in the service of the Government; and his expedition was set on foot and aided by the Government at his request and by the importunity of persons outside of the Government. It was not intended to subserve, nor has it subserved, any purpose for which the Government was instituted. The expedition was organized wholly in the interest of science and in the hunt for the northwest passage. I have always doubted whether it was kindness to enthusiasts like Captain Hall or was really any aid to science to encourage these arctic explorations; and the disastrous results of this last attempt will perhaps be cheaply bought if it discourages any further ventures of that sort.

Captain Hall was in no sense in the service of the Government except at his own solicitation, and not in any way which, as I am aware, has hitherto established an equity in favor of his widow or children. In fact, the surviving widow of any civil employé of the Government has the same claims to consideration as has Mrs. Hall. It is true that this is not a gratuity in terms, but it is in fact, as there is no reason to suppose that the manuscripts of Captain Hall are worth the sum proposed in the bill; for if they are worth that sum any publisher would be glad to purchase them, and the widow would not need this measure of relief. Dr. Kane and his family realized $75,000 from his book, but the Government contributed nothing to their relief.

I know, however, that such a bill as this is sure to pass, and I have only sought the floor to put on record my views upon it, rather than to take time to get a record by yeas and nays.

If Congress is ready to establish the principle of giving these gratuities to every person whose application appeals to our sympathies, this case is as good as any with which to begin that kind of legislation. Mrs. Hall is as worthy as any person who will ever apply for relief, and every one's sympathies respond to her appeal. I can but look upon it, however, as a precedent of dangerous example, and likely to be quoted hereafter in support of much more questionable gratuities.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Captain Hall was appointed by the President of the United States to command this polar expedition under a law of Congress which authorized him to appoint some suitable person for that purpose. Two former expeditions, the manuscripts relating to which we propose to buy, were undertaken by private individuals. Mr. Grinnell was the principal patron. Those papers, which are voluminous, are said by Professor Henry, by Dr. Parker, and other men of learning capable of judging who have examined them, to be of considerable value. I know that Dr. Kane wrote a popular book, the sale of which produced a large sum of money. That I take to be evidence these manuscripts are equally valuable. The widow of Captain Hall, unlike Dr. Kane, is unable to write a book and to put it before the world, but is willing to dispose of these manuscripts in order, as she is in great need, to realize something in that way for the support of herself and children; and I can see no reason why anybody should object to the passage of this bill. I therefore demand the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. MYERS. I hope there will be no objection. The committee are unanimously in favor of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCOFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COURTS IN UTAH.

Mr. POLAND. I intended to proceed with the Utah bill this morning, which is the regular order, but as the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, gave notice yesterday he would endeavor to displace the regular order to take up the currency bill, I now desire to ask, Mr. Speaker, if I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee for that purpose, whether the Utah bill will lose its place?

The SPEAKER. It will not lose its place, but will have to give way to a vote on the Army bill, which is not to take up any time, and then this bill will be the regular order.

CURRENCY AND FREE BANKING.

Mr. MAYNARD. I am directed by the Committee on Banking and Currency to report the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 1572, to amend the several acts providing a national currency and to establish free banking, and for other purposes, with a substitute.

Mr. HOLMAN. The substitute, I understand, is a substitute for the whole bill.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOLMAN. The question will recur first on the substitute from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. It will.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

That the act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864, shall be hereafter known as "the national-bank act."

SEC. 2. That section 31 of the "national-bank act" be so amended that the several associations therein provided for shall not hereafter be required to keep on hand any amount of money whatever by reason of the amount of their respective circulations; but the moneys required by said section to be kept at all times on hand shall be determined by the amount of deposits in all respects as provided for in the said section.

SEC. 3. That section 22 of the said act, and the several amendments thereto, so far as they restrict the amount of notes for circulation under said acts, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and the proviso in the first section of the act approved July 12, 1870, entitled "An act to provide for the redemption of the 3 per cent. temporary-loan certificates, and for an increase of national-bank notes," prohibiting to banks hereafter organized a circulation over $500,000; and the proviso in the third section of said act limiting the circulation of banks authorized to issue notes redeemable in gold coin to $1,000,000; and section 6 of said act, relating to the redistribution of $25,000,000 of circulating notes, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; that every association hereafter organized shall be subject to, and be governed by, the rules, restrictions, and limitations, and possess the rights, privileges, and franchises now or hereafter to be prescribed by law as to national banking associations, with the same power to amend, alter, and repeal provided by "the national-bank act."

SEC. 4. That every association organized, or to be organized, under the provisions of the said act, and of the several acts in amendment thereof, shall at all times keep and have on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, in lawful money of the United States, a sum equal to 5 per cent. of its circulation, to be held and used for the redemption of such circulation; and when the circulating notes of any such associations, assorted or unassorted, shall be presented for redemption, in sums of $1,000, or any multiple thereof, to the Treasurer of the United States, the same shall be redemed in United States notes. All notes so redeemed shall be charged by the Treasurer of the United States to the respective associations issuing the same, and he shall notify them severally on the first day of each month, or oftener, at his discretion, of the amount of such redemptions; whereupon each association so notified shall forthwith deposit with the Treasurer of the United States a sum in United States notes equal to the amount of its circulating notes so redeemed. And all notes of national banks worn, defaced, mutilated, or otherwise unfit for circulation shall, when received by any assistant treasurer or at any designated depository of the United States, be forwarded to the Treasurer of the United States for redemption as provided herein. And when such redemptions have been so reimbursed, the circulating notes so redeemed shall be forwarded to the respective associations by whom they were issued; but if such notes are worn, mutilated, defaced, or rendered otherwise unfit for use, they shall be forwarded to the Comptroller of the Currency and destroyed and replaced as now provided by law: Provided, That each of said associations shall reimburse to the Treasury the charges for transportation, and the costs for assorting such notes; and the associations hereafter organized shall also severally reimburse to the Treasury the cost of engraving such plates as shall be ordered by each association respectively; and the amount assessed upon each association shall be in proportion to the circulation redeemed, and be charged to the fund on deposit with the Treasurer.

SEC. 5. That any association organized under this act, or any of the acts of which this is an amendment, desiring to withdraw its circulating notes, in whole or in part, may, upon the deposit of lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States in sums of not less than $9,000, take up the bonds which said association has on deposit with the Treasurer for the security of such circulating notes; which bonds shall be assigned to the bank in the manner specified in the nineteenth section of the "national-bank act;" and the outstanding notes of said association, to an amount equal to the legal-tender notes deposited, shall be redeemed at the Treasury of the United States and destroyed as now provided by law: Provided, That the amount of the bonds on deposit for circulation shall not be reduced below $30,000.

SEC. 6. That the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, cause the charter numbers of the association to be printed upon all national-bank notes which may be hereafter issued by him.

SEC. 7. That the entire amount of United States notes outstanding and in circulation at any one time shall not exceed the sum of $382,000,000; and within thirty days after circulating notes to the amount of $1,000,000 shall, from time to time, be issued to national banking associations under this act, in excess of the highest outstanding volume thereof at any time prior to such issue, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to retire an amount of United States notes equal to 40 per cent. of the circulating notes so issued, which shall be in reduction of the maximum amount of $382,000,000 fixed by this section; and such reduction shall continue until the maximum amount of the United States notes outstanding shall be $300,000,000; and the United States notes so retired shall be canceled and carried to the account of the sinking fund provided for by the second clause of section 5 of the act approved on the 25th of February, 1862, entitled "An act to authorize the issue of United States notes, and for the redemption and funding thereof, and for funding the floating debt of the United States," and shall constitute a portion of said sinking fund.

SEC. 8. That on and after the 1st day of July, 1878, any holder of United States notes to the amount of fifty dollars, or any multiple thereof, may present them for payment at the office of the Treasurer of the United States, or at the office of the assistant treasurer at the city of New York; and thereupon he shall be entitled to receive, at his option, from the Secretary of the Treasury, in exchange of said notes, an equal amount of either class of the coupon or registered bonds of the United States provided for in the first section of the act approved on the 14th day of July, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and the act amendatory thereof, approved the 20th day of January, 1871: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Treasury, in lieu of such bonds, may redeem said notes in the gold coin of the United States. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall reissue the United States notes so received, or, if they are canceled, shall issue United States notes to the same amount, either to purchase or redeem the public debt at par in coin, or to meet the current payments for the public service.

SEC. 9. That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize any increase of the principal or interest of the public debt of the United States.

Mr. MAYNARD. I now move the previous question.

Upon seconding the previous question tellers were ordered; and Mr. SPEER and Mr. MAYNARD were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 95, noes 78.

So the previous question was seconded.

The question recurred upon ordering the main question.

Mr. RANDALL. Upon that question I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HURLBUT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I suppose that the first question is on agreeing to the amendment of the House to the Senate amendment, and if that fails then the question will come on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the position of the question. The first question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Banking and Currency as a substitute for the Senate amendment. Should the House vote to agree to it, then there will be a second vote on agreeing to the Senate amendment as amended. If the House should negative the amendment of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the question will then be on concurring in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HURLBUT. O, no; we want the yeas and nays on ordering the main question.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KELLEY. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to withdrawing the call for the yeas and nays which have already been ordered?

Mr. KELLEY. I withdraw my objection.

No further objection was made.

Mr. BUCKNER. I renew the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to make a proposition. I suggest that by general consent we take the yeas and nays on every question affecting the bill.

The SPEAKER. As well as on the main question?

Mr. MAYNARD. No; that we consider the main question ordered and then take the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The House will settle that question.

The question was again put upon ordering the yeas and nays, and only 19 members voted therefor.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The main question was then ordered to be put, being first on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency as a substitute for the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered,

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 118, not voting 60; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Barber, Barry, Biery, Bradley, Bromberg, Buffinton, Burchard, Burleigh, Cain, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clinton L. So the substitute was not agreed to. During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. BANNING. My colleague, Mr. SAYLER, is still confined to his room by sickness.

Mr. SOUTHARD. My colleague, Mr. JEWETT, has been necessarily called home to Ohio.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to say that upon this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. ROSS, who has been unexpectedly called home. Had he been here he would have voted "ay," and I would have voted "no."

Mr. POTTER. My colleague, Mr. WOOD, is detained at home by illness in his family. I desire to state further that my colleague, Mr. W. R. ROBERTS, is detained at home by severe illness, which confines him to his bed.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. My colleague, Mr. FRYE, is unavoidably absent; if here he would vote "ay."

The question was upon concurring in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Is that subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not, the previous question having been ordered and being not yet fully executed.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to say that if the House should not concur in the amendment of the Senate I will then ask for a committee of conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Upon this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 70, nays 164, not voting 55; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Barber, Barrere, Barry, Biery, Bradley, Bundy, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Cason, Cessna, Stephen A. So the amendment of the Senate was not concurred in.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to state that my colleague, Judge ROSS, who is absent and with whom I am paired, would if here vote "no." I also vote "no."

Mr. POTTER. I desire again to announce the absence of my colleagues, Mr. WOOD and Mr. WILLIAM R. ROBERTS, both of whom are detained by sickness.

Mr. MARTIN. My colleague, Mr. CLEMENTS, is absent by direction of the House; if present he would vote "ay."

Mr. HALE, of Maine. On this question my colleague, Mr. FRYE, who is unavoidably absent would if here vote "no."

Mr. DAWES. My colleague, Mr. CROCKER, is necessarily absent. If present he ought to vote "no."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. My colleague, Mr. O'BRIEN, is detained in his room by indisposition; if here he would vote "no."

Mr. MAYNARD. I move that a committee of conference be requested upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the reading of the rule governing the appointment of committees of conference.

The SPEAKER. There is no rule governing the appointment of such committees.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the custom?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read from the Digest upon that subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

The usual course of proceeding previous to a conference is for one House to disagree to the other's amendment, and for the amending House to insist upon its amendment and ask a conference. * * * * * *

It is on the occasion of amendments between the Houses that conferences are usually asked; but they may be asked in all cases of difference of opinion between the two Houses on matters depending between them.—Manual.

The SPEAKER. It is wholly a matter of discretion.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; so far as my memory goes——

The SPEAKER. Ah, the majority of conferences are asked at this stage of the proceedings. For instance, on all the appropriation bills conferences are asked at this stage.

Mr. MAYNARD. It is very seldom that an amendment goes back to be reacted upon.

The SPEAKER. The matter is one wholly of discretion; one for the majority of the House to determine, and not for any rule.

Mr. SPEER. Is it in order to ask for the yeas and nays upon requesting a conference?

The SPEAKER. It is; that is a matter to be decided by the majority.

Mr. SPEER. Then I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The attitude of this question is this: The House stands insisting upon the original currency bill passed by it, and disagreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senate. On this state of disagreement the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] asks that the subject may be referred to a committee of conference. On that question the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] asks for the yeas and nays. The previous question is now exhausted.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to reconsider the various votes which have been taken this morning upon this subject, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAYNARD. I call for the previous question upon the request for a committee of conference.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is rarely ever called, for such a request is never debated.

Mr. MAYNARD. Then I withdraw the call.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; there being ayes 36, noes not counted.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 133, nays 82, not voting 74; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albright, Arthur, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Barry, Begole, Bell, Biery, Bland, Bowen, Bradley, Brown, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Cannon, Cason, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., John B. NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Archer, Ashe, Atkins, Barnum, Bass, Beck, Blount, Bright, Bromberg, Buckner, Buffinton, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Comingo, Cook, Crooke, Crossland, Dawes, DeWitt, Durham, Eames, Eldredge, Giddings, Glover, Eugene Hale, Hamilton, Joseph R. Hawley, Hendee, Hereford, Herndon, E. Boardman Smith, Southard, Speer, Starkweather, Stone, Swann, Townsend, Tremain, Vance, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, Willie, Wolfe, Woodford, and John D. Young—82.

Wilson, Wood, and Pierce M. B. Young—74.

So the motion of Mr. MAYNARD, that a conference with the Senate be asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. CLYMER. On this proposition my colleague, Mr. Ross, with whom I am paired, would, if present, vote "ay," while I should vote "no."

Mr. SPEER. My colleague, Mr. STORM, who is called home by sickness, would, if present, vote "no." My colleague, Mr. MAGEE, who is absent by order of the House attending the burial of Mr. Mellish, would, if present, vote "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. MAYNARD moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Some time subsequently

The SPEAKER said: The Chair desires to announce the conferees on the part of the House upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the banking and currency bill. The votes on which the selection of conferees is based are the original votes given April 14 on the bill of the House, and the vote given to-day by which the Senate amendment was disagreed to. Upon those votes the following gentlemen represent the action of the House: Mr. MAYNARD of Tennessee, Mr. FARWELL of Illinois, and Mr. CLYMER of Pennsylvania.

EVENING SESSION FOR BUSINESS OF JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that the House hold a session on Monday evening next, commencing at seven and a half o'clock, for the consideration of reports from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, subsequently said: I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] withdraws his objection.

Mr. RANDALL. I do so with the understanding that the civil-rights bill is not to be brought up at the proposed evening session.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Neither that nor the Geneva award bill.

The SPEAKER. With that understanding the order will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. This order will not obviate any point of order to which any bill reported on that evening may be liable?

The SPEAKER. Of course not.

There being no objection, the order was accordingly made.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask unanimous consent to make a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. For how long?

Mr. KELLOGG. Two minutes.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

Mr. KELLOGG. This is the first time I have ever risen to make a personal explanation since I have been a member of Congress, and I presume it may be the last, in relation to anything appearing in regard to me in a newspaper. I find in the Associated Press dispatch of yesterday in the New York Evening Express a statement of a speech which is attributed to me, and which I shall ask the Clerk to read. I will state that I do not rise now to make any explanation on my own account; for I prefer generally to let these things pass by without calling to them the attention of the House. I was called "Mr. Kellogg, of Louisiana," in one of the leading papers of New York for one whole session; and I never made any objection to that even, and never rose to a personal explanation, though a man might prefer to have his own State recognized. But on behalf of my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] whose thunder I do not wish and he does not wish any republican to steal, and certainly not to steal it myself, on his account solely I rise for this explanation. I ask the Clerk to read the extract I send to the desk. It is the Associated Press dispatch, mixed up probably after it left here, as it appears this morning in the New York Evening Express.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE MOIETY LAW.

Mr. KELLOGG (Republican, Connecticut,) presumed that few members, if any, would vote against the repeal of the law and the annulment of the contract.

He believed that the charges would have been sustained. It was an astounding thing that the President had not yielded to public opinion and removed these officials, instead of acting in defiance and disregard of it. It was only within a day or two that the President had removed a District official for attempting to tell the truth. This question, he said, would not be finally determined here. It would go elsewhere, and to that other tribunal, if justice were not obtained here, he would go with confidence.

Mr. KELLOGG. I only wish to say that the speech there reported is that of my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER,] not mine.

Mr. RANDALL, (to Mr. KELLOGG.) If it were yours, it would be the best speech you ever made.

Mr. CLYMER. I so rarely trespass upon the indulgence of the House that I am not unwilling to claim the paternity at least of the little I ever do say here. With regard to this matter I should have felt very much worse if what my friend from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] said had been attributed to me. Under the circumstances I do not feel at all aggrieved.

NAVY CHAIN-CABLES.

Mr. BUNDY, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 105) in relation to the purchase of iron for the manufacture of chain-cables for the Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PRESERVATION OF BALLOTS.

Mr. TREMAIN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1979) to preserve ballots cast at, and all papers connected with, elections held for Representatives or Delegates to Congress, and for other purposes; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

REDUCTION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

Mr. COBURN. In pursuance of notice already given and of leave obtained from the House, I report back from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (H. R. No. 2546) providing for the gradual reduction of the Army of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in the cavalry, artillery, and infantry regiments of the Army of the United States there shall be no new commission, no promotion, nor any enlistment until the number of regiments of cavalry shall be reduced to nine; the number of regiments of artillery to four; and the number of regiments of infantry to twenty. And the Secretary of War is hereby directed to reduce, by consolidation, the present numbers of these regiments, respectively, to the numbers hereinbefore stated, as rapidly as the requirements of the public service and the reduction of the number of officers will permit.

SEC. 2. That the number of enlisted men in the Army of the United States shall be reduced, on or before the 1st day of January, 1875, to the number of twenty-five thousand men; and this number shall not be increased except by law.

SEC. 3. That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, at his discretion, to discharge honorably, from military service, all Army officers who may apply for a discharge on or before the 1st day of January next; and such officers, so discharged under the provisions of this act, shall be entitled to receive, in addition to the pay and allowances due them at the date of their discharge, one year's pay and allowances.

SEC. 4. That the grade of regimental adjutant and quartermaster and the grade of company wagoner are hereby abolished; and the lieutenants now holding the offices of regimental adjutant and quartermaster may be assigned, for duty, to companies in their regiments, and shall fill the first vacancies that shall occur in their respective grades therein; and nothing herein shall effect their relative rank with other lieutenants of their grade.

SEC. 5. That each regiment of cavalry shall have two majors, and the present number shall be reduced as vacancies occur; and no appointments shall be made to fill the same until the number of such majors shall be reduced to eighteen; and that number thenceforward shall be the total number of majors of cavalry; and that each regiment of artillery shall have two majors; and the present number shall be reduced as vacancies occur; and no new appointment shall be made to fill the same until the number of such majors shall be reduced to eight; and that number thenceforward shall be the total number of majors of artillery.

SEC. 6. That the number of aids of the General of the Army shall not hereafter exceed three; the number of aids of the Lieutenant-General and of the several major-generals shall not exceed two for each; and each brigadier-general shall have one aid. The rank, pay, and emoluments of the aids herein provided for shall be the same as officers of cavalry of the same grade, and no more.

SEC. 7. That the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army shall hereafter consist of one Adjutant-General, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier-general; one assistant adjutant-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a colonel; one assistant adjutant-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a lieutenant-colonel; and four assistant adjutants-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors. As vacancies occur in the grade of major, no appointment to fill the same shall be made until the number shall be reduced to four; and thereafter the number of permanent officers in said grade shall continue to conform to said reduced number. And there shall be in addition eight assistant adjutants-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of captains of cavalry, to be detailed from the officers of the line of the Army.

SEC. 8. That the Inspector-General's Department shall consist of one colonel, two lieutenant-colonel, and two majors, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of officers of said grades; and the Secretary of War may, in addition, detail officers of the line, not to exceed four, to act as assistant inspectors-general: Provided, That officers of the line detailed as acting inspectors-general shall have all the allowances of cavalry officers of their respective grades; and no new appointment shall be made in the Inspector-General's Department until the number of inspectors-general is reduced to five.

SEC. 9. That the Bureau of Military Justice shall hereafter consist of one Judge Advocate General, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier-general; and the said Judge Advocate General shall receive, revise, and have recorded the proceedings of all courts-martial, courts of inquiry, and military commissions, and shall perform such other duties as have been heretofore performed by the Judge Advocate General of the Army. In the corps of judge advocates no appointment shall be made as vacancies occur until the number shall be reduced to four, which shall thereafter be the permanent number of the officers of that corps.

SEC. 10. That the Quartermaster's Department of the Army shall hereafter consist of one Quartermaster-General, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier-general; three assistant quartermasters-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonel; six deputy quartermasters-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant-colonels; ten quartermasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors; and twenty assistant quartermasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of captains of cavalry; and there shall be in addition ten assistant quartermasters, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of first lieutenants of cavalry; and no appointments to fill the same permanently shall be made, but the same shall be filled by detail from the lieutenants of the line of the Army.

SEC. 11. That the Subsistence Department of the Army shall hereafter consist of one Commissary-General of Subsistence, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a colonel; three assistant commissaries-general of subsistence, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant-colonels; five assistant commissaries of subsistence, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors; and fourteen commissaries of subsistence, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of captains of cavalry. SEC. 12. That the Medical Department of the Army shall hereafter consist of one Surgeon-General, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier-general; one assistant surgeon-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a colonel; one chief medical purveyor, and two assistant medical purveyors, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant-colonels, who shall give the same bonds which are or may be required of assistant paymasters-general of like grade, and shall, when not acting as purveyors, be assignable to duty as surgeons by the President; fifty surgeons, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of majors; one hundred and fifty assistant surgeons, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenants of cavalry for the first five years service, and with the rank, pay, and emoluments of captains of cavalry after five years' service; and four medical store-keepers, with the same compensation as is now provided by law; and all the original vacancies in the grade of assistant surgeon shall be filled by selection by competitive examination; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to appoint, from the enlisted men of the Army, or cause to be enlisted, as many hospital stewards as the service may require, to be permanently attached to the Medical Department, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe. And the number of contract surgeons shall be limited to seventy-five on or before the 1st day of January, in the year 1875; and thereafter no more than that number shall be employed.

SEC. 14. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1874, all muster and pay rolls, when made out, shall be forwarded to the paymaster of the department for which such muster and pay rolls are made out, and the said paymaster shall make out drafts, drawn on the Treasury of the United States, for the amount due to each person respectively whose name shall appear on said muster and pay rolls; and each of said drafts shall be made payable to the person who shall be entitled to receive such amount. And the said paymaster shall immediately send all such drafts, together with the aforesaid muster and pay rolls, to the officer by whom such muster and pay rolls were made out; and the said officer shall deliver such drafts severally to the persons who shall be entitled to receive them, and who shall have signed the proper pay-roll; and, at any time after receiving such draft, the payee, at his discretion, may indorse it in the presence of his commanding officer, who shall attest such indorsement by his signature: Provided, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, in cases where troops are located at remote points, or where payments as hereinbefore provided would work hardship to the men, direct payment in currency, as heretofore.

SEC. 15. That the Ordnance Department shall consist of one Chief of Ordnance, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier-general; three colonels, four lieutenant-colonels, ten majors, fifteen captains, sixteen first lieutenants, and ten second lieutenants, with the same pay and emoluments as now provided by law. And as vacancies occur in the grade of first lieutenant no appointment to fill the same shall be made until the number shall be reduced to ten; and thereafter the number of permanent officers in said grade shall conform to said reduced number; and the remainder, six in number, shall be filled by detail from the officers of the line of the Army; and as vacancies shall occur in the grade of second lieutenant no permanent appointment shall be made to fill the same until the number shall be entirely reduced; and thereafter the same, as far as shall be required by the exigencies of the service, shall be filled by detail from the officers of the line of the Army: Provided, That no new appointment of ordnance store-keeper shall be made until otherwise provided by law.

SEC. 16. That whenever a vacancy shall occur in any department or corps of the staff which is to be filled by detail, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to fill the same from the officers of the line of the Army of the same or the next lower grade, for a period not to exceed four years with the same officer. And he shall appoint a board of not less than five officers, three of whom shall be of the line and two of the staff, to conduct competitive examinations of all officers who may be applicants or may be recommended to be detailed to fill such vacancies. And the Secretary of War shall detail those having the most favorable recommendations of said board, and not more than five officers from one regiment shall be so detailed at one time. And at the end of four years, any officer so detailed may be transferred to other staff duties for another term of four years, at the end of which time he shall be returned to his duties with his regiment unless he shall be appointed permanently to fill a vacancy in the staff. And no officer shall be detailed or appointed to serve in any department or corps of the staff until he shall have served at least four years in the field with the troops if above the grade of second lieutenant, and if a second lieutenant at least two years upon such duty consecutively. And no officer shall serve in any one department or corps of the staff by detail for a longer period than four years consecutively.

SEC. 17. That no officer now in the service shall be reduced in rank or mustered out by reason of any provision of law herein made reducing the number of officers in any department or corps of the staff, or by reason of the consolidation of regiments as hereinbefore provided.

SEC. 18. That the General of the Army and commanding officers of the several military departments of the Army shall, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, forward to the Secretary of War a list of officers serving in their respective commands deemed by them unfit for the proper discharge of their duties from any cause except injuries incurred or disease contracted in the line of their duty, setting forth specifically in each case the cause of such unfitness; the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to constitute a board, to consist of one major-general, one brigadier-general, and three colonels, three of said officers to be selected from among those appointed to the regular Army on account of distinguished services in the volunteer force during the late war; and on recommendation of such board, the President shall muster out of the service any of the said officers so reported, with one year's pay; but such muster-out shall not be ordered without allowing such officer a hearing before such board to show cause against it: Provided, That any officer who shall have served in the Army thirty years, and who may be removed from service under the provisions of this section, may be placed upon the retired list of the Army.

SEC. 19. That as vacancies shall occur in any of the grades of any department or corps of the staff, no appointments shall be made to fill the same until the numbers in such grade shall be reduced to the numbers which are fixed for permanent appointments by the provisions of this act; and thereafter the number of permanent officers in said grades shall continue to conform to said reduced numbers.

SEC. 20. That for the purpose of promoting knowledge of military science, the President may, upon the application of an established college or university within the United States, with sufficient capacity to educate at one time not less than one hundred and fifty male students, give a leave of absence to any officer of the Army to act as president, superintendent, or professor of such college or university; that the number of officers so detailed shall not exceed one to each State at any time, and shall be governed by general rules, to be prescribed from time to time by the President of the United States; and the officers so having such leave of absence shall receive when on such duty the same pay and allowances as other officers on leave of absence. Preference shall be given, as far as practicable, to institutions controlled by the several State governments.

SEC. 21. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I suggest to the gentleman to move to strike out the last section, as all acts take effect from their passage.

Mr. COBURN. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. It will be stricken out.

Mr. COBURN. The House, so far as I am informed, does not desire any lengthy discussion on this measure. I do not propose to make any extended argument showing the necessity and importance of this reduction of the Army. That question has been practically settled some time since by both Houses of Congress, and the reduction has in fact been made in the Army appropriation bill.

Let me say now to the House in considering this reduction of the Army that perhaps a false impression may have been created or attempted to be created in the public mind that those engaged in this work of attempting to reduce the Army have a spirit of hostility toward the Army. I am here now to disavow on the part of the committee and every person connected with this matter here any such disposition of hostility. On the contrary, nothing but profound respect and honor so far as the Army is entitled to it is accorded to it not only by the committee but by all persons who have taken an interest in reducing it. The object now is a more economical management of the Government. The object is to cut down expenses as far as possible; and in every branch of the Government, whether in the Army, Navy, or civil service, to dispense with all officers or employés who can be dispensed with. It has occurred to the House, therefore, that there could be a considerable reduction not only in the civil but in the military service as well.

Some time since, in 1866, the size of the Army was much greater than it is now. It was then composed of fifty-one thousand men, in five regiments of artillery, twelve regiments of cavalry, and forty-five regiments of infantry. In 1870, four years after that, the Army was reduced to thirty thousand men, which is the present number, with twenty-five regiments of infantry, five regiments of artillery, and ten regiments of cavalry. Now, after the expiration of four years more, a similar reduction is proposed to be made. The reduction from 1866 to 1870 was twenty-one thousand, and we now simply propose a reduction of five thousand, with a proper proportion of officers. My own judgment is that the reduction is not great enough. I think we could get along with a smaller army, and protect the peace and honor of the country as well as with twenty-five thousand men. Outside of taking care of the Indian frontier there is very little to be done by an army. I cannot for my life see what else there is except to preserve the skeleton, and to have on hand a corps of officers educated and trained with ability sufficient to take command in time of danger and emergency and war.

It is not a beggarly thing in the present condition of our affairs to attempt to save money. Every man feels we must economize, and though the officers proposed to be mustered out of the service—not mustered out but to go out gradually—although they may be meritorious men, yet along with everybody else in the country they must put up with cessation of promotion and stoppage of advancement for a time. They too must join the throng of those who would save the nation's credit and purse by a little self-denial—quite as honorable as facing danger and defying hardships.

The whole country is engaged in a work similar to the one we are proposing to do in the Army, and that is to stop promotions and to decrease expenses until it is reduced down to the proper standard.

Now, this measure of the reduction of officers is not in the nature of a compulsory muster out or discharge; but it is expected to be accomplished by natural causes, by death, by resignation, and the other means by which the Army is rid of its officers. There is indeed a provision in the bill that authorizes a board to examine officers, and the only compulsory feature in it is this: that worthless or unfit officers may be put out of the service by its action with the sanction of the President. That will apply to but few cases and will operate in no one as a hardship, because the officers who will be thus discharged are unfit to be in the service. The presumption is and the fact is that a vast majority of the officers in the service are good, faithful, efficient, and honorable men, and those officers will remain until discharged by natural causes.

Now there is another provision in the bill to the effect that any officer who desires to resign can have a year's pay on so doing. That provision enabled the Army to get rid of a number of officers when it was reduced before. With the exception of these two cases the reduction is to be entirely from natural causes, and therefore no officer in the Army and no friend of any officer has a right to complain that any officer is treated with the least degree of hardship. On the contrary, their interests have been more tenderly regarded in this bill than generally the friends of reduction thought was necessary. I say therefore, Mr. Speaker, that so far from there being any hostility of feeling or any desire to injure anybody in the Army, the sentiment has been exactly to the contrary; one of kindness and regard for those gentlemen, many of whom have spent the best years of their lives in the service of their country, who have braved many dangers, who have patiently endured many toils, and who deserve the gratitude of their countrymen for meritorious and noble conduct.

Now the first reduction contemplated is that of regiments, of organizations; and the first section of the bill provides that there shall be a diminution of five regiments of infantry, one regiment of artillery, and one of cavalry. The number of men in these regiments is about five thousand. The number of officers in a cavalry regiment is forty-three, in an artillery regiment fifty-six, and in an infantry regiment thirty-five. The number of men in a cavalry regiment is one thousand and thirteen, in an artillery regiment seven hundred and sixty, and in an infantry regiment six hundred and five. The House, taking these data, can very readily calculate what the reduction in the expense will be. The officers, as I said before, of these regiments remain in the service until they go out by natural causes or are discharged on the report of the board as being worthless.

Now, that will leave forty-three officers of cavalry, fifty-six artillery officers, and one hundred and seventy-five infantry officers without any duty to perform. The method next adopted is to consolidate these officers and men with the regiments that remain in the service. There will not, however, be much consolidation of men in the service, because the reduction of the Army, according to the Adjutant-General, is very much greater in a single year than five thousand men, and there will be no necessity of transferring men from one regiment to another. Over seven thousand will be mustered out this year. But the bill provides that the officers may be consolidated or transferred to other regiments and put on duty, and after this is done still a large number will be left without any duties whatever to perform.

The next provision of importance in the bill relates to regimental adjutants and quartermasters. The testimony given before the committee was to the effect that these officers were extra, and I mean by the word extra that they are performing duties that might be performed by other lieutenants of the line; and the committee have thought it best, therefore, to report this fourth section, providing that the duties shall be performed in that way, and that these officers shall go out of this branch of the service. The testimony of some of the best officers of the Army was to the effect that these officers were not needed, and the Secretary of War has twice, I believe, recommended this provision. Quite a large saving will take place from abolishing these offices.

The next important provision is in relation to majors. The regiments of cavalry and artillery have each three majors, and it is the opinion of many officers and of many men who have knowledge on the subject that even one major would be enough, especially in time of peace, for every cavalry and artillery regiment, just as the infantry regiments have at present only one major. The office, at best, is not a very important one, and it is believed that in time of peace the number of majors in cavalry and artillery regiments might be cut down to one for each regiment. This will reduce the number of majors in each cavalry regiment to two, which makes a reduction in the ten cavalry regiments of ten majors, and in the five infantry regiments of five majors.

The next provision is in relation to the aids of the General of the Army. They have by law the rank of colonel. The committee supposed that those officers performed a duty which at best is a very light and pleasant one, and is quite desirable. And they supposed they might do with the same pay that they are entitled to in the ordinary line of service. They ought to be satisfied with their proper rank and pay in their own commands.

The next reduction is in the department of the Adjutant-General. There are now in the Adjutant-General's Department sixteen officers. The bill provides for fifteen, of whom eight are to be detailed and the others to be permanent. That brings up a point in the discussion of this bill that is somewhat interesting. As I said before, quite a large number of officers by this reduction will be thrown out of service, some two hundred and fifty or more. It is thought best that there should be selected from those officers some who may discharge staff duties. Certainly out of so large a number a few can be selected who will perform staff duties of any kind well. The Government must pay those officers whose commands are abolished, and should receive their services if they can be secured. They can get them in the staff in as profitable a way as anywhere else, perhaps more so. In addition to that there is this consideration, that officers of the line thereby become acquainted with staff duties, and with duties of every branch of the Army and every important matter connected with it. Nothing can be more valuable to an officer than to become acquainted not only with the duties of the line but also of the staff. That acquaintance fits him at once to take high command and to occupy important positions in the Army. The great danger in the Army is this: men being confined to a specialty, whether in the line or in the staff, may have their minds narrowed and their capacity too much confined and cramped, so that in time of danger they may become less capable of assuming important responsibility and holding high commands than if their duties were more varied.

The Committee on Military Affairs of the House last Congress investigated the subject of staff organization thoroughly, and made a report containing the views of many of the most eminent and able officers of the Army. This report was published, and I now call the attention of the House to some of these opinions showing the feasibility of detailing officers of the line for staff duty. The statements I shall quote are confirmed by the testimony of many other officers whose names need not be mentioned at this time.

I verily believe that it would be good policy to detail at least half of the staff in all branches except those of engineering, medicine, and law. By this means the highest degree of training could be brought about for all of our young officers, and a thorough knowledge of all the essentials for high command imparted to them.

General Ord says that the President should be allowed to transfer officers of the same rank from the staff to the line, or the reverse, at his option. This would be a check on disbursing officers, would result in the selection of men better fitted for the places, besides giving them instruction.

General Upton says in special corps, like the Engineer or Medical Corps, officers are unquestionably more efficient who are educated, trained, and promoted specially for these services. But in order to increase the amount of staff knowledge in the Army, and to keep the officers of the staff corps acquainted with the wants and requirements of the line, transfers from the staff to the line, and the reverse, for a period not exceeding four years, would in the highest degree be beneficial. The duties of the adjutant and inspector generals, quartermasters, commissaries, and paymasters are in no degree scientific, and can be learned by officers detailed from the line. Promotions to the grade of first lieutenant in the Ordnance and Engineer Corps should be made not from the Military Academy, but by competitive examination from first and second lieutenants who have served three years in the line. Cadets who graduated with high honors may become indolent; but three years' continuous preparation for examination for promotion would be highly advantageous.

General Stanley is of the opinion that the effect of continuing the same officers in a particular department or corps of the staff, and of allowing only promotions therein, is to produce a set of narrow-minded and inefficient men, who, enjoying great ease and comfort during peace, are totally unfitted for war. A law making transfers between line and staff, and from one staff corps to another up to the rank of major, would stimulate ambition and would promote study and efficiency. The Prussian practice is the correct one, i. e., to place the staff officers on the most varied duties, and especially to serve a proper time in the line. Transfers should be made between the engineers and the line when engineer officers proved unapt, and the line officer gave evidence of the necessary qualities as proved by examinations.

General Gibbon thinks that officers should be transferred from the staff to the different arms of the line so as to serve for a term of years in each. The staff of an army should consist of the very first brains of the service, thoroughly conversant with all of its details; and such a knowledge can only be attained by service in the different arms. When a vacancy occurs in the staff it should be filled not by promotion, but by selection from all of those of the next lower grade in both line and staff, the General-in-Chief making the selection from a certain number, say three, nominated by an advisory board. This would promote efficiency, put the best ability on the staff, and restore sympathy between the staff and line. Staff positions are a prize, and thus can be obtained by the deserving. This system should be adopted only with reference to those branches of the staff corps which, from the nature of their duties, are most intimately connected with the line, namely, the Adjutant's, Quartermaster's, Subsistence, Judge-Advocate's, and Inspector's Departments. This method of selection should be for grades below that of colonel. All persons educated, trained, and promoted for a specialty are more efficient for that specialty; but officers of the Army are not more efficient as military officers from being so educated. Their efficiency should be increased by a greater freedom of detail and transfer.

General Hazen thinks that the effect of permanent and exclusive staff organizations is to raise up special class interests both unmilitary and antagonistic to the Army itself. It subtracts from the Army many of its best soldiers, who cease to be military men; they become routine office-men, incapable of rising to meet great emergencies. Staff officers should never be entirely or permanently detached from the troops, but have regular alternate periods of duty with them. Duty with the troops, not on the staff, is the permanent business of the soldier. The special term staff officers should embrace only those who do purely military duty of an executive nature.

General McClellan says that the functions of the lower grades in the various staff corps should be performed by officers detailed from the line for a period long enough to instruct them fully; and that the higher grades should be permanently filled by selections from among the best of the line officers who have been thus detailed. These details should not continue longer than four years. In this manner the knowledge of staff duties would be widely spread through the line to the benefit of the whole service. To provide for this without injury there should be a sufficient number of supernumerary officers.

General Reynolds advises a greater freedom of detail and transfer in the staff; thinks that the present organization begets no common interest or common feeling in the Army. The most universal desire is to get away from the troops and into the cities among papers. The reason for this unnatural tendency is seen in the defective organization, when the latter positions will bring rank, light duties, and all the attractions of civilization and society. What encouragement is there for an officer to remain with what constitutes the effective part of an army, namely, the legal organization composed of men under arms? High military rank should not be attained by an officer except by service with the troops, and the principal part of the service should be with them. The amount of rank in the staff corps is detrimental to the best interests of the service. A better system than the present for the efficiency and harmony of the service would be to have the duties of staff departments referred to performed by officers detailed for that purpose, and not to be retained on such duty for a longer time than four years for one term of staff duty.

General Hunt says the proper school for acquiring administrative knowledge as well as command is in the regiment. It will be perceived by reference to Cullom's Biographical Register of the graduates of the Military Academy from 1821 to the adoption of "specialties for everything," that regimental officers found constant employment of a useful and improving character, thus diffusing throughout the Army an amount of knowledge and a degree of efficiency, both military and special, previously unknown. He says the readjustment of the staff and duties would simplify army administration, make it more efficient, and go far toward securing all the principal benefits expected from consolidation without sacrificing the special advantages claimed for the present system, and would prove beneficial in securing a greater freedom of detail and transfer than at present exercised.

General Sherman, in answer to interrogatories, has made the following statements:

Question. In your judgment do the duties of the Ordnance and Engineer Corps, being scientific specialties, require their separation from the ordinary routine of Army duties? Do they require seclusion, as it were, from the Army?

Answer. I think not; I think on the contrary that all officers of the Army, in their own interest, should know what a soldier can do in order to know what works of defense and offense are proper. I asked the question of Field Marshal Von Moltke, in Prussia, who I suppose at this moment stands at the very head of the military profession. I said to him: "You are chief of the staff, which embraces all the staff departments of the Prussian army. You bring your young officers to Berlin to school as we send our young men to West Point. Do you ever send them to their regiments?" His reply was, "O, yes; they go to their regiments. We never separate an officer from troops, except by way of detail. He goes back to his troops again as soon as the special service is ended. No officer is permanently out of the line of the army." My understanding from the conversation I had with Von Moltke and others, however, was that officers of the staff departments in the Prussian army are detached as chiefs of staff and assigned to generals of corps, generals of divisions and brigades; but that these officers are at no time for a very long period separated from the troops of the line. In other words, every staff officer is required for a considerable period of his life to serve with soldiers. In our Army, as I have said, an ordnance or engineer officer knows no more about commanding soldiers and of the conduct of the men who carry muskets than other well-educated gentlemen.

Q. Would you advise a change or transfer of the officers of these corps into the line and the officers of the line into these corps as a general rule?

A. I would insist upon every officer of the Ordnance or Engineer Departments, for his own good and to enlarge the sphere of his usefulness, serving a portion of his time on duty with troops and upon their not being kept so distinct and separate. They go to West Point and graduate after four years' instruction. They then go into the Ordnance or Engineer Departments and settle down into ordnance and enneer officers; that is all and nothing more. They are perfectly qualified for these duties; but, as I have said, they can know nothing about commanding soldiers except by inspiration. My own preference would be to require these graduates to serve for a length of time in the line of the Army before being eligible to either of these staff departments, and I would then require them, after a certain period of time, to be sent back to the line of the Army to serve for another period, when they might again be re-eligible in the ordnance or engineer service.

Q. It has been suggested by some of the officers who have answered questions to this committee that the term of staff duty be prescribed, and that officers should be limited to a short term of duty and then sent back to the troops. Would you regard that as a good policy?

A. I would regard that as an excellent policy.

Q. Have you looked at the law to see what changes would be effectual to secure this result?
